In the remaining wing of the building is the X-ray room. This type of equipment ordinarily is not found anywhere in army life outside of a hospital. Complete X-ray pictures may be taken at any time of the day or night and a record of every exposure is put on file.

By far the largest single unit is the Physical Therapy department. Usually called Physio-Therapy and employing a portion of Hydro-Therapy, it is one of the finest methods in existence for healing injuries. The basic principles are heat massage, and water stimulation. Sun lamps and Ultra-Violet ray light produce the dry heat. In cases such as sprains, ice packs are used within a period up to 36 hours after the injury. The cold stops internal bleeding and reduces the swelling. A hot whirlpool bath is then given daily until circulation is stimulated. When it has sufficintly increased, gentle, passive massage is applied. The limb is finally bandaged, securely, but not too tightly to impair the circulation. The entire treatment is continued until in the eyes of the attending physician, the patient is able to resume his duties in normal fashion. Contusions or bruises, and fractures which are healing, also receive the beneficial effects of heat and passive massage. Various types of lamps are used, including bakers, which can cover an entire section of the body.

Chutist Is Soldier Of Many Missions

The great variety of missions a parachutist may be called upon to carry out makes a lot of special training and techniques inevitable.

He must know how to conceal himself on the ground from enemy reconnaisance; how to communicate information he may have to other members of his outfit; how to demolish enemy installations, communications, bridges, lines of transportation, and he must keep his equipment in the best possible condition all of the time.

To provide additional necessary training for the parachutist on the road to combat, the Parachute School has four Specialist schools; Camouflage, Demolition, Communication, and Rigging (care and maintenance of Jump Equipment and dropping of supply chutes.) Picked men are taken from each graduating jumping class to attend these schools.

CAMOUFLAGE SECTION

All modern techniques of the art of camoufage are used and demonstrated in this brief but comprehensive one week course. A complete unit of demonstration is maintained by the school and the student is taught to hide himself utilizing real and artificial media. In turn when he is assigned to a regular unit he instructs the others of his outfit in camouflage.

DEMOLITION SECTION

In the modern war one of most disrupting things an army in battle can suffer is to have its interior lines of communication or supply interrupted. A well placed squad of chutists properly trained and equipped to do this can spell plenty of woe and possibly defeat for an enemy.

At the Demolition School in 3 weeks the student is made perfectly at home handling the most potent of explosives under the most trying conditions. He is taught how to jump with explosives, locate his objective and carry out his mission. He can blow anything to Kingdom Come with swiftness and dispatch: ANGELS FROM HELL, in truth.

COMMUNICATION SECTION

Two courses are offered in this school—The basic of 3 weeks and the advanced course for advanced students, of 6 weeks more.

The systems and methods of standard communication uniquely utilized for parachute work are demonstrated and practiced here so that the graduate can readily make contact and exchange information after jumping with his equipment.

RIGGERS SECTION

A parachutist believes in his equipment 100 per cent and he has good reason to. The men who maintain all parachute paraphernalia are well trained and scrupulously conscientious. They inspect, rebuild, repair and generally maintain all equipment. They have the know how, for they are given thorough training in the packing and maintenance of all parachutes, both for personnel and for supplies.

The graduate rigger knows how to rig and drop all kinds of equipment. In addition to the one month course in regular riggers schools, there is also a two week course in machine maintenance.

ment of Major Alton R. Taylor. Infantry, as director of parachute training, and Major Stewart, formerly officer in charge of the specialist training (demolitions, riggers, communications, machine maintenance, and camouflage), effective 14 April 1943. Two days later Colonel Williams was succeeded as assistant commandant by Lieutenant Colonel James W. Coutts, Infantry, who had served as a company commander in the original 501st Parachute Battalion when it was organized. His subsequent assignments included S-3 and later executive officer of the 501st, battalion commander in the 502nd Parachute Infantry Regiment during its activation, executive officer of the 507th Parachute Infantry, and a member of the War Plans and G-3 sections of General Eisenhower's staff in the European theatre of operations.

The Parachute School has achieved an international reputation as a model paratroop training center. Selected officers from Allied armies have been trained as parachutists with a view to initiating or improving parachute training in their own armies. Countries whose representatives have been thus trained to date include Great Britain, Canada, Venezuela, and Cuba.

COL. GAITHER

On July 8, 1943, Col. Ridgely Gaither was made Commandant of the Parachute School replacing General Howell who was transferred to another duty.

Col. Gaither, who is the third generation of his family to be in the army, evolved plans for the organiaztion of the 1st Parachute Unit—the well known 501st Bn. in the fall of 1940. At this time Col. Gaither was in the Training Division of the office of the Chief of Infantry in Washington, D. C.

The Commandant was commissioned in the regular Army in July 1924, upon his graduation from St. John's College at Annapolis, Md. After tours of duty in Indiana, Alaska, and Wyoming he was ordered to attend the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga., in 1932.

In March of 1935 Col. Gaither was ordered to duty as a 1st Lt. with the 15th Infantry at Tientsin, China. He was promoted to captain in August 1935, while he was serving as regimental adjutant and adjutant of U. S. troops in China at the outbreak of hostilities between Japan and China in 1937.

In 1938 he attended the Command and General Staff School at Ft. Leavenworth Kansas after which he was ordered to the office of the Chief of Infantry in Washington, D. C. in March 1942. While a major, Colonel Gaither became a member of the Plans and Training Section of Army Ground Forces in Washington. As Chief of Special Projects Division he continued to promote the development of American parachute troops and related Airborne organizations.

CANADIANS ARRIVE

A battalion of Canadian officers and men were qualified during the period 17 August 1942 and 13 March 1943) to constitute the entire personnel of the projected Canadian Parachute School, the 1st Canadian Parachute Battalion, and cadres for succeeding battalions.

Distinguished visitors who have been entertained by the Parachute School include President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, commander-in-chief; General George C. Marshall, chief of staff; Lieutenant General Lesley J. McNair, Army Ground Forces commander; British Field Marshal Sir John Dill; British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden; Lord Louis Mountbatten, chief of British Combined Operations; General Sanchez, chief of staff of the Mexican army, and many military observers from these and other Allied countries. Several motion picture firms have sent filming units to the school to take background material for pictures built around parachuting.

Routine demonstrations in methods of parachute training are regularly scheduled by the Parachute School for the Battalion Commander and Staff Officer Classes, and the New Division Officers Classes of the Infantry School, averaging one demonstration each per month. Each summer the school is host to that year's graduating class from the United States Military Academy at West Point, for demonstrations in airborne training methods.

Ground Combat Units Undergo Divers Changes

Several changes in the organization of ground combat and supporting service units are outlined in "Army Times" and "Army and Navy Journal" received at Fort Benning this week.

The outline of important changes is condensed from WD Circular No. 256, 16 October, 1943, entitled "Reorganization of Corps Headquarters and Organic Troops".

Changes are the result partly of combat experience, made to secure the maximum use of available man power, to permit transportation overseas of a maximum of fighting power, to provide greater flexibility in organization, to reduce overhead and to provide the greatest possible amount of offensive power.

The Field Army will continue as a tactical and administrative function to permit corps to concentrate on training and tactical functions. The corps now consists of a headquarters and headquarters company, military police platoon, signal battalion, headquarters and headquarters battery, corps artillery and a field artillery observation battalion.

Now, other units will be assigned to the corps in accordance with its combat mission—they will be divisions, groups or battalions of field artirllery and cavalry reconnaissance elements.

NEW SET-UP

Under new set-up, the motorized division as a separate type of organization has been eliminated, with infantry divisions being transported by a troop transport battalion of six truck companies.

The infantry division itself has been reduced in strength about eight per cent, with reduction in motor vehicles of about 14 per cent. There is no change in the basic organization, however, and the division's fire power is increased.

In the new armored division, regimental organizations are eliminated. Instead, three tank and three armored infantry battalions of increased size and power are provided. Two combat command headquarters are included and no change is made in the artillery organization. Both artillry and infantry strength has been increased in comparison with tank strength and the supply battalion has been eliminated since the battalions now are made self-sustaining.

LIGHT DIVISION

Tests now are being made of a new "light" type of division suitmountain and jungle operations. Strength is less than that of the infantry division, but has about the same fire power in small arms and automatic weapons with transport consisting essentially of hand carts, pack animals and quarter-ton trucks.

In making staff changes, staffs generally have been revised downward to provide sufficient personnel only for combat needs, and pooling of units is emphasized. General headquarters pools are being established, as well as group headquarters for field artillery, tank destroyer, engineer, cavalry, anti-aircraft artillery and tank units.

The group is a tactical unit composed of a headquarters and varying number of battalions. Headquarters are provided where they may be required on the basis of one to every three or four battalions.

In certain cases, the brigade is retained for command of a number of groups, and will continue as a tactical unit.

Some of the changes and revisions covered in the circular have been made recently while others cover a period of time.

FOOD PRICES

Retail prices of all foods combined rose sharply from January, 1942, to June, 1943, and then declined, the Extension Service says. Prices of other cost-of-living items have risen more gradually. The recent decline in some food prices is due in part to the rollback on maximum prices.

Real Who's Who in Allied Strategy Visited Chute School During Past Year

The Parachute School has achieved an international reputation as a model paratroop training center. Selected officers from allied armies have been trained as parachutists with a view to initiating or improving parachute training in their own armies. Men from Great Britain, Canada, Brazil, Venezuela, and China have attended the school.

The world-wide attention American paratroops have attracted and the increasing part they are playing in action automatically makes all visitors eager to view, first hand, the training that has produced these exceptional soldiers.

A constant stream of distinguished visitors has flown through the school this past year. Starting with the Commander-in-Chief Franklin D. Roosevelt, the list reads like the Who's Who of Allied War Strategy; Chief-of-Staff Gen. Geo. C. Marshall; Lt. Gen Lesley J. McNair, Army Ground Force Commander; British Field Marshal Sir John Dill; British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden Lord Louis Mountbatten, in charge of combined operations in Asia; General Giraud, General Sanchez, Mexican Chief of Staff and many high-ranking officials, generals and observers from all allied countries.

In a way it is too bad only Allied visitors have come to the school for if one harassed Berchtesgaden Blow-Hard could make a tour of the school and get an idea of the untimely fate that will fall on his head, he would be even sadder—if possible.

Civilian Personnel Chief Takes On Big Headache

How to keep 3700 civilian employees in an Army Post, in equitable pay levels while they are are working at an almost endless variety of different skilled jobs, is the task of Captain Raymond A. Parkins, chief of civilian personnel for Fort Benning.

While every attempt on the part of the personnel branch is to keep like jobs in like departments on a level in pay, many factors disturb such procedure, the captain points out. Each employee, after 18 months service, automatically gets a $60 raise if under the $2,000 a year class, and $100 a year if over that class. This is one factor that makes a difference. Then department heads find that grades are open in their departments, so they lift employees to higher grades without advancing them as to the kind of work they do. This is another "up-setter." Added to this is the fact that it is very hard to place exactly the skill required and the training needed to do certain similar jobs in a number of different departments. For example, a filing clerk is just a certain routine job, but it might be quite a different job in the record department from that of some other department on the post.

"So you see we have plenty of headaches in this work," Captain Parkins states. "It is like personnel in the Army itself or elsewhere. But there is less than a 10 per cent turnover, and that is something to be thankful for. This low percentage is a fact, in spite of the quite extensive employment of Army men's wives, who, of course, move when their husbands are transferred."

30 PER CENT WOMEN

Whereas the maximum amount of civilian employees has been set at 3282, an allowance for additional people on construction jobs boost this by more than 400 persons. About 70 per cent of the employees are men and 30 per cent women, the office help, of course, predominating women, while the field workers are practically all men.

Captain Parkins' own office force took the recent cut in employees to do the personnel work and is operating on a .92 basis, whereas the average rate for an office of this size is 1.08. This is due to the quality of the persons working there, as for example the very efficient Miss Jennie M. Robinson, who will have been with the Post for 14 years tomorrow.

This office handles the processing of all civilian personnel under the Post setup, their status reallocation, and promotion, and separations from Civil Service positions in the ASF installations.

Additions to the Main Post civilian group are the 250 persons working for the Infantry School under Lt. Col. Phillip A. Dickey, the 360 persons under Capt. Raymon L. Hall at Lawson Field, and six office personnel under Maj. Holman D. Hoover at the Parachute troop School, making a total of over 4,300 civilians employed on the Fort Benning reservation.

SMITH-GRAY

Officers to be, as well as senior officers, know the value of looking their impressive best. That's why, since 1845, they have been switching to Smith-Gray uniforms in ever-increasing numbers. There are many reasons. Made-to-measure, of course, imparts a dress-parade smoothness. Styled with absolute military correctness. Draped to emphasize "strong" points and conceal "weak" points. Embodying special features for maximum comfort. Smith-Gray has been stressing these points in 98 years of masterly tailoring "in the military manner." They are good points for you to remember.

The activities of the Army's famous Infantry School and the much younger but almost equally famous experimental 501st Parachute Battalion, were augmented late in 1940 by the addition of a GHQ Air Force Unit at Lawson Field. Lawson then became the base of two additional corps and division Observation Squadrons while the 62nd Air Base Group was being activated at Lawson.

Later the development of Lawson Field was greatly accelerated when it became a base of the First Troop Carrier Command. This development was due in no small part to the increased activities of the 3rd Composite Squadron at Lawson. This Squadron, a unit of the Third Air Force, has as its primary function the flying of missions in collaboration with the training of the students at The Infantry School.

So rapid has been the growth of Lawson Field since the former days of "Flight B," as the unit originally stationed at Lawson Field was called, that correspondence is still being addressed to "C. O. Flight B."

OPENED IN 1931

Lawson Field was first opened to airplane traffic in 1931. The field was named at that time in honor of the late Captain Walter Ross Lawson, a native of Georgia, who died in an airplane accident at Wright Field on April 21, 1923.

Captain Lawson served in the 41st French Escadrille and the 91st Aero Squadron in France, being awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for "repeated acts of extraordinary heroism in action during July and September." He was a pilot in the Pulitzer Race in 1920 and 1922.

In 1932 a small number of Air Corps officers and enlisted men from the 16th Observation Squadron, Fort Riley, Kansas, were transferred to Lawson Field to perform tactical and allied problems for The Infantry School. "Flight B" 16th Observation Squadron, carried on the operations of Lawson Field until the fall of 1940, when the 15th Bombardment Squadron (L) GHQ AF, was transferred from Barksdale Field, La. In November of the same year this group was augmented by the 16th Observation Squadron from Fort Bragg, N. C., which was commanded by Captain Fred S. Stocks, and the 9th Observation Squadron from Mitchell Field, N. Y., under the command of Captain Philo G. Meisenholder. In December, 1940, Captain Stocks was assigned to the command of the 62nd Air Base Group (Sp) a newly activated service and supply unit. The next unit to arrive at Lawson Field was the 128th Observation Squadron a Georgia National Guard squadron from Atlanta. It was the last Georgia National Guard Unit to be called to active Federal Service.

UNITS PRESENT

Lawson Field is now the home station of the 54th Base Headquarters and Air Base Squadron, the 3rd Composite Squadron, the 1013th Guard Squadron, and three tactical squadrons of the First Troop Carrier Command. Also stationed on the field are an AAF WAC Detachment, a Medical Detachment, and Signal Corps, Weather, Communications, and Finance detachments. The Air Service Command, the engineering, heavy maintenance, and supply branch of Army Air Forces, has a large Sub Depot installation at the field for supply and third echelon maintenance to the units stationed here.

The reel expansion of Lawson Field took place when it became a unit of the First Troop Carrier Command in August, 1942. It is used as a base for tactical units of the Command for unit training and for supplying the requirements of planes and crews for the Parachute School of the Airborne Command. While the First Troop Carrier Command is barely eighteen months old it has received group citations for gallantry in both eastern and western theaters of war. The Troop Carrier's primary mission is to carry combat troops and auxiliary equipment to effective locations in combat zones from which to begin active operations. Their secondary mission is to maintain supply to units in the combat zone, and to evacuate casualties and other personnel and material from such zones. An additional function is to transport Airborne Engineer Battalions and their equipment by transport plane or glider. These are the landing field construction units of the Army Air Forces. The Command also has worked out a large Air Evacuation organization through which wounded soldiers are flown from the front lines to base hospitals in the rear. In addition to flying troop-carrying transports, the First Troop Carrier Command pilots are trained in twoing gliders of Airborne Infantry and their equipment.

PROMINENT IN WAR

Troop Carrier units carried paratroopers from England to Oran to initiate assault upon North Africa—1,500 miles, nonstop—the longest airborne invasion on record. Troop Carrier units saved the day at Port Moresby when they shuttled 3,800 men and all their equipment from Australia over 600 miles of the shark-infested Coral Sea. A Troop Carrier Group in the Southeast Pacific transported an entire division into New Guinea. They flew supplies and personnel in China among the treacherous peaks of the highest mountains on earth. On the night of July 9, 1943, two hundred and twenty-three members of a Troop Carrier Command transported thousands of parachute troops to Sicily without loss of a single life or transport plane. Aid was given to the Fifth Army at Salerno on the nights of September 13-14 and 14-15 when thousands of parachute troops were dropped from hundreds of transport planes to reinforce the embattled ground forces. Troop Carrier units also played an important role in the campaign which wrested Guadalcanal from the Japs. All the fresh meat served to the Allied troops on New Guinea was flown from Australian mainland by Troop Carrier planes. During the assault on pivotal Kokoda, Troop Carrier planes played a vital part in dropping supplies and equipment to the battered American and Australian soldiers.

Stationed at Lawson Field today are many officers who have helped the Troop Carrier Command carry out its missions on the various battlefronts. Among them are: Maj. Charles H. Christmas, Maj. Carl J. Lichter, Maj. Roman T. Schumacher, Jr., Maj. Herman Pardey, Maj. Francis P. Thomson, Capt. Ben L. Parker, Capt. Bernard Cederholm, Capt. James M. Turk, Capt. Theodore Greene, Capt. Richard Walrath, Capt. Douglas Dougan, Capt. Hugh L. Turk, Jr., Capt. George S. Smith, Capt. Robert W. Rebbe, Capt. Clarence A. Laken, Capt. Fred J. Franz, Capt. John C. Durham, Capt. Grant W. Brown, Lt. R. A. Sorensen, Lt. Harold E. McCarty, Lt. William Harris, Lt. Walter Vance, Lt. Delvin E. Kendal.

CARRIER GROWTH

Today the First Troop Carrier Command with Headquarters at Stout Field, Indianapolis, Indiana is under the command of Brig. General Frederick W. Evans. The Troop Carrier Command at the present time is larger than the entire Army Air Force was before the war Harbor. Suffice it to say that the morale of the personnel of Lawson Field has always been and always will be very high.

Lawson Field is well equipped with both technical and housing facilities. Numerous recreational facilities are available on the base and more are under construction. Since becoming a component of the First Troop Carrier Command, there has been a continuous program of building at Lawson Field. Concrete parking aprons have been greatly extended, taxi-ways constructed and many flight hazards removed. Many buildings, both barracks and administration, a Radio Control Tower, Radio Range, A. C. S. Station, underground gasoline servicing tanks together with improved lighting facilities have been added since Pearl Harbor, and the field has been converted from a base for light aircraft to one capable of accommodating and servicing the largest military aircraft built. This has made Lawson Field one of the largest, finest and the best equipped Troop Carrier bases in the

The First Troop Carrier Command's official insignia is blue and gold. A falcon carrying its talons a soldier with a rifle and fixed bayonet gives a clue to its tactical purpose. Another clue is its motto: "Vincit qui primum gerit"—"He conquers who gets there first."

Baker Village News

BAKER VILLAGE DANCE

Plans are completed by the committees for the Baker Village Community Dance to be held Saturday, Nov. 13 in the Auditorium and a gala evening is anticipated by everyone.

The fourteen-piece 300th Infantry Orchestra will play for the dance, beginning at 9 o'clock EWT.

Tickets have been on sale all week by members of the committees. If you have not secured yours yet there are still some available by contacting Mrs. Lutz at the Recreation Office or at Apt. 39A.

Mr. Grayson, Commissioner of Recreation, is in charge of the Grand March Dance Stunts for the evening.

Get on your dancing slippers and come on out for what we think is going to be one grand time for all.

WANTED:

To rent a musical instrument. Good care will be taken of it. Contact Margaret Smith, 'phone 2-4600, if you have one.

CLINIC:

Apartment 43E next to the Administration has been held vacant for the Clinic to be opened within the next two weeks.

According to Dr. Thrash, of the Public Health Department, an Immunization Clinic will be started within the next two weeks. As soon as equipment is secured a pre-natal clinic as well as a well-baby clinic will be started. It is hoped that general medical care can be added later.

LOST AND FOUND POUND:

Many times articles are found and persons do not know what to do with them to get them back to the rightful person.

In order to have a place to return lost articles a pound is started at the Recreation Building where lost articles can be brought in by those finding them. If you have lost something perhaps you can locate it by coming to the pound and looking over the articles turned in.

NEWCOMERS:

Lt. and Mrs. Wilson M. Stone, 34 Court; Lt. and Mrs. Robert E. Flicker, 10 Clifton; Lt. and Mrs. John R. Ash, 37 Roper; Lt. and Mrs. Louis Schlan, 111 Court; Lt. and Mrs. William C. Page, 108 Fox; Lt. and Mrs. Henry S. Hoy, 37 Court; Lt. and Mrs. James O. Williams, 56 Benning Dr.; Lt. and Mrs. Wm. T. McCullough, 34 Barry; Lt. and Mrs. Clarence W. Werner, 28 Roper; Lt. and Mrs. Lester S. Jackson, 40 Roper; Lt. and Mrs. Virgil Moreland, 2 Benning Drive; St. Sgt. Arthur L. Freeman, 2F; Mr. Sgt. O. L. Bennett, 19A; 1st Sgt. Ernest L. Townsend, 24C; St. Sgt. James J. McAlinn, Jr., 104A; T. Sgt. Merrill R. Hauser, 41F; 1st Sgt. Grover C. Gardner, 155D; St. Sgt. Anthony Castiglia, 101B; St. Sgt. Richard T. Vaughan, 28B; T. Sgt. Walter V. Duerock, 56B; St. Sgt. William J. Festa, 56C; T. Sgt. Milner R. Dixon, 107C; St. Sgt. Robert F. Russell, 52B; T. Sgt. Robert E. Roache, 145A; St. Sgt. Julius John Kustia, 66B; 1st Sgt. Emmett A. Lambeth, 96B; Mrs. Virginia Liming, 10E.

The time has come when one of our crying needs is to be satisfied.

Dr. Thrash, of the Public Health Department, has come to our rescue and has made plans whereby we are going to have a much needed Clinic in Baker Village. Apartment 43E next to the Administration Building has been held vacant for this particular purpose by the management of the Housing Authority.

During Dr. Thrash's and Dr. Gainley's recent visit to Baker Village we checked on the need for a clinic and the place to have it. he informed us that an immunization clinic would be started within the next two weeks. As soon as he secures the necessary equipment for the clinic, a prenatal clinic will be started along with a well-baby clinic.

With such a program started he is hoping through contact with the proper military authorities that general medical care can also be added to the clinic.

Dr. Thrash is making arrangements for furnishing for the clinic while in Atlanta Monday and Tuesday of this week.

In recent bulletins it was requested that you reserve Saturday, Nov. 13, on your calendar for the Baker Village Community dance to be held in the auditorium.

The various committees have been selected and are working to make this dance one of the outstanding functions of the year for the community. All residents of Baker Village are invited.

Mr. Grayson, the recently appointed commissioner of recreation, has secured the 300th Infantry Orchestra for this occasion. The orchestra consists of fourteen pieces including a prominent singer who has been with a prominent orchestra in Chicago prior to coming to Fort Benning to join her husband.

Tickets for the dance are on sale now and can be purchased from members of the committee. These various people who have tickets also have assigned section of the village to contact. Be ready to purchase your tickets when these people make a call at your home. In case you are not at home and contact is not made tickets can be purchased from Mrs. Lutz at the Recreation Office in the administration building.

An evening of dancing to a fine orchestra, a grand march and dance stunts are planned for you to make this a most enjoyable evening for everyone. The dance will be held from 9 to 12 p.m., E.W.T.

The committees are working diligently to make this a successful occasion. Give them your support by purchasing your ticket and come out for an evening of fun.

Chilean Army Leader Visits Infantry School

"The aims of Chile are the same as the aims of America. We are in the same boat."

Such was the Good Neighbor comment of Gen. Oscar Fuentes, Chief of the Chilean Military Mission who yesterday concluded a month's tour of Army posts and war factories with an inspection of installations at The Infantry School, Fort Benning.

"The more you know this country and the more you see of its people," said General Funtes, "the more one must be convinced that the Americans are sincere and frank in their desire to make the Good Neighbor Policy workable and permanent. As the leaders of the North and South American countries have learned to know each other and trust each other, thus knowledge and confidence spreads to their families and finally to the people of the entire countries."

During his inspection of The Infantry School, General Funtes, who was accompanied by Maj. Marcos Lopez-Larrain and Capt. Carlos Hepp, witnessed several problems involving Officer Candidates.

GENERAL IMPRESSED

He said that on the basis of his trip, the methods used throughout the Army and at The Infantry School for training soldiers for combat are very good and very interesting. He was especially impressed with the battle realism which has been introduced in the training saying that it was more than sufficient to build initiative and alertness and to prepare men for exposure to actual battle conditions.

Two phases of instruction which particularly drew his attention were the close combat training and the Motor Maintenance course which is offered for officers and enlisted men. This technical training, he said, is not only valuable now in keeping a modern army moving and able to meet the fluid conditions of warfare, but will be a great contribution to mechanical development after the war.

General Fuentes, in addition to being Chief of the Chilean Military Mission, is the senior Chilean delegate to the Inter-American Defense Board. His inspection tour has included visits to Detroit, Camp Hale, San Diego, and Fort Sill.

He said that his opinions of the whole trip were splendid and that he was tremendously impressed by all he saw. He indicated, however, that the best part of his trip was that devoted to the inspection of The Infantry School.

Chute Medico-

The Journal of the American Medical Association (1938) states that "the most important factors in a physical therapy department are competent medical direction and efficient physical therapy technicians," and this is directly applicable to the Parachute School Dispensary.

Following is the supply department which diligently performs the task of keeping the entire place completely stocked, everywhere from clean towels and linen on the beds to the sterile equipment in surgery.

HEAD SURGEON

Ultimately we reach the office of the Chief of Clerks and that of the head surgeon. On these men rests the entire responsibility of the administration. Here too are born all new plans to lessen any given type of sickness.

One such is the project on air-sickness. Little information can be released on this subject, which is under the direct supervision of the Surgeon General in Washington. It is, as the name implies a problem in research to curb the ill effects of flying.

There is first aid equipment at each of the four training stages of the Parachute School. Two ambulances, a physician and an aid man are on field duty whenever the troopers are jumping.

Under Major Lord, head surgeon, a two fold program is in existence; first, to prevent, second to cure any illness or injury. To achieve this aim, daily thought and planning are given to new methods and ideas which will help to put men back into fighting condition. This entire group of medics works unsparingly to serve their

Signal Corps Soldiers 'Get Message Through'

"Get the message through." That is the Signal Corps in action. But it is not enough just to get the message through. It must get through on time, for there is another slogan to which the Corps lives up: "The difficult we do right away; the impossible takes a little longer."

Housing and equipment of the Corps two years ago served a Fort Benning with less than a third of the present size so an expansion program had to be inaugurated, in order that the vast number of messages be put through on time, and the many other functions of branch of the service be properly cared for.

Features of this program included removal of the repair shops to a new concrete building, relocation and expansion of the training film library, tripling of the pigeon section and its removal into a new building, establishment of a photographic section, changing of all the telephones on the Post and at Sand Hill and Harmony Church into a dial system, and the providing of new quarters for the signal center where the radio and telegraph offices are consolidated into one location.

VARIED DUTIES

The Signal Corps is a division of the Army Service Forces whose chief function is to provide prompt, accurate and efficient communications for the Army from the Commander-in-Chief out to the individual soldier. It is responsible for the procurement of all communication material and equipment, including switchboards, telephones, radios, telegraph instruments and pigeons. It is also responsible for the maintenance and repair of all Signal equipment.

Here at Fort Benning the Signal Corps is a branch of the Supply and Service Division and has seven distinct activities, namely the Administrative section, Signal Corps Repair Shop, Signal Property Warehouse, Pigeon Section, Photographic Laboratory, Training Film Library and the Signal Center, all of which are under the supervision of Lieutenant Colonel Alexander W. Young, a veteran of World War No. 1 and an executive of the Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Company. Colonel Young has had forty-one years service with the Bell System and had two years active duty in the last war after which he has been in the Reserves until called to active duty for the second emergency, February, 1942.

The administrative section supervises the operation and maintenance of the administrative telephone system which functions are performed by the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company. This section also does all billing and accounting, prepares work orders for the installations, moves and disconnects of telephone service and prepares the telephone directories. Captain Robert W. Cooley, presently on D. S., is Assistant Chief. Signal Branch and has served the Army for over sixteen years.

The Signal Corps Repair Shop which is housed in a new permanent building is in charge of Captain Charles M. Lang. This unit is a very busy establishment handling repairs to all Signal Equipment, most of which is highly technical, consequently it is an essential function of the Signal Corps.

The Signal Property Warehouse under the direct supervision of 1st Lieutenant Arthur M. Lehman receives and issues all Signal Equipment and supplies to all organizations on the post. In addition to this activity, Lieutenant Lehman is in charge of the Pigeon Section which has increased from a few hundred to over two thousand "Homer" carrier pigeons during the past year. This is one of the few breeding stations maintained by the Army. In addition to breeding and training pigeons, lectures are given to Paratroopers in proper handling of "Carrier" pigeons.

PHOTO LAB

The Signal Corps Photographic Laboratory, which was inaugurated during the past year, is in charge of 2nd Lieutenant Francis D. McGuire. In this unit all identification photographs are made for the officers and such pictures as may be required by the Commanding Officer and the Public Relations Officer. In addition to this function Lieutenant McGuire is in charge of the Training Film Library which is busy every minutes of the day.

The consolidation of the Telegraph Office and the Radio Office to what is now known as the Signal Corps Center has been the most recent activity looking forward to improving the Communication service for both official government business and personal telegrams and cablegrams. This activity is in charge of Warrant Officer (JG) Richard L. Mauerhan who is also Assistant Cryptographic Officer and Assistant Signal Security Officer.

Benning Leads The Way In All Big Drives

Repeatedly dipping into their pockets and hearts, Fort Benning soldiers and civilians have donated $71,557 in cash and 1097 pints of good American blood so far during 1943, in answer to numerous nationwide patriotic drives. This does not include two war loan drives, which they help put across, nor the $4,000,000 which they have invested in war bonds during the 10 months of this year.

Not only have the post soldiers and civilians donated but they have donated generously. For this reason Fort Benning has ranked high in nationwide participation. In the March Red Cross War Fund Drive which netted $33,000, it ranked first among military stations in the United States, receiving a statement and congratulatory letter to that effect from Frank Grayson, director of Military and Naval Welfare Service of the American Red Cross.

SURPLUS BLOOD DONORS

After this initial drive of 1943, Fort Benning was twice visited by the mobile blood bank, and donors surged forth in such numbers that many had to be turned away. During the second visit, a record was set here, when 212 pints of blood were drawn in one day. This was 40 pints higher than any previous day's collection by that unit, which normally takes not more than 170 per day.

But there are many calls to answer, and the post was already into another campaign before the blood donations were ended, the National War Fund drive. Reports have just been completed and Fort Benning again stands at the top, having redeemed its pledge of $30,000 and adding another $8,057 for good measure.

WAR BOND RECORD

And all this time local soldiers and civilians were buying bonds, $4,000,000 worth. During the Second War Loan in April the post did much to help Columbus and Muscopee county in the raising of $6,000,000 in three weeks. A purchase of $93,768.25 was reported by Mr. R. P. Richardson, local postmaster and regular subscriptions also rose. It was in April that civilians at the Infantry School reached the War Department-set, pay reservation goal of 90-10 percent, and became eligible for a certificate of achievement ad a banner.

Civilians at post headquarters followed suit, soon gaining 100 percent participation. Other installations began to rise to the call and post civilian participation advanced from 25 percent giving 3 percent of their salaries, to the present 81.7 percent investing 8.02 percent. This represented a gain of nearly 300 percent in pay reservations and cash allotments in ten months. Major Fink, post war bond officer, said that the 90-10 percent goal was in sight and predicted that it would be reached by early 1944.

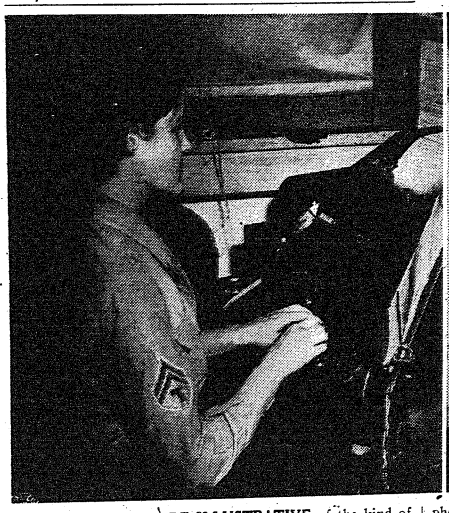
In September the post took part in another war loan campaign, the 3rd War Loan Drive, which far overshadowed any previous war bond achievement at Fort Benning. In a one month period $1,043,145.85 was invested in these securities. This represented a cash purchase of $800,000, and pay reservations amounting to $247,352.55.

The postoffice with $176,793 and finance with $59,425 reach an all-time high in bond sales.

4TH SC LEADER

During this drive Fort Benning purchased one-sixth of the war bonds sold in the entire Fourth Service Command, a record in itself.

Reviewing the program, Major Fink brought out that Fort Benning, itself, had staged various rallies, which netted sizeable investments. Latest of these was a street dance, held September 2, which resulted in the purchase of $4,800 in securities. Earlier in the summer, a rally in the Patio Grill featuring movie-actresses and pin-up girl, Jane Russell, assisted by Jack Gibney of radio station WRBL, netted $12,247. Aiding in both ventures were civilian girls from various offices on the post, who were known as Bond-A-Dears. These included: Lorraine Pohlter, Mary Childress, Marguerite Brescia, Margaret Coan, Willie Smith, Kate Flynn, Elizabeth Morgan, Doris Lee, Sarah Woodall, Peggy Sapp, Doris Brown, Mary Lou Brown, Willie Lucas, Margaret Lucas, Edna Flynn, Dorothy Sossaman, Jean Kilgore, Winona Andrews, Verne Neideprum, Annie Roe Williams and Aurelia Scarborough.



Fort Benning also aided Columbus in a war bond campaign in connection with the premiere showing of the movie, "Action in the North Atlantic." Local purchases for this event amounted to $1,179.

Major Fink expressed the hope that Fort Benning would reach the $5,000,000 mark by the close of 1943, which would make it by far the largest 12 months ever. Assisting the major in the bond program is Lt. J. W. Myers, Jr., assistant public relations officer.

Women In Khaki Came Here For Work, Got It

March 5, 1943, was a cold, rainy day at Fort Benning, but it had its brighter side. That was the the WAACs arrived.

The girls in uniform were a sensation for the post. Everyone had been hearing about WAACs, but few had ever seen any until the 43rd Headquarters Company arrived. They turned out in crowds to get their first glimpse of the army's newest corps, and all who could, followed through by getting acquainted.

People were curious about these girls who were called strange names like "auxiliary" and "leader" but who lived under army discipline and marched like veteran soldiers. The WAACs were photographed, stared at and questioned interminably by anyone who could catch their attention.

Above all, what Fort Benning wanted to know about these girls was: Why did you join the WAAC? What are you here for?

Those questions have been answered in the months that have followed. The WAACs came to work. They had a job to do and they're doing it, and they're here for the duration and six months.

MANY CHANGES

The months have brought a lot of changes to that pioneer company. They have dropped an "A" from their name and they're in the army now. They are called "private" and "corporal" and "sergeant". they have had two changes of commanding officer, and their official designation has been altered to WAC Detachment, Station Complement, Section 1.

But more significant, they have lost their curiosity value and become a familiar part of the life of the post. They are found in offices throughout the post, and in a variety of jobs they are proving their worth as an addition to the army.

Four other contingents of WACs —two assigned to The Infantry School and one to Lawson Field and a detachment of colored WACs working at the Reception Center—have since been added to the post. And army officers, some of whom were doubtful at first that there was any place for women in the army, now ask for more.

ROTHROCK CO

First commanding officer of the original WAAC company was 2nd Officer Evelyn A. Rothrock. Shortly after her arrival here she was promoted to 1st officer (equivalent to the army rank of captain) and in June was transferred to Washington.

She was succeeded by her executive officer, 2nd Officer (1st Lieut.) Gail A. Gaines, who commanded the detachment until September 9, when she was sent to Adjutant General's School in Washington.

First Lieut. Jeannette Miller, who was mess and supply officer of the original company, succeeded Lieut. Gaines and is the present commanding officer. Executive officer is 2nd Lieut. Dora Chambers, and the mess and supply officer is 2nd Lieut. Dorothy Phillips.

Fifteen members of the company have gone to Officers Candidate School. Others have attended Cooks and Bakers School, Finance School and Administration School to learn army office procedure.

The WACs of the Station Complement are working as laboratory technicians, clerks, stenographers, teletype operators, messengers, mail clerks, and in dozens of other jobs. Some are employed in the service clubs and libraries, others in classification and supply work. Wherever the army has had a job that women could do, the WACs have been taken in, tried out, and accepted.

VERILY, VERILY

Fort Benning, which a year ago was just hearing rumors that the WAACs were coming, would now be seriously inconvenienced if its WACs were suddenly taken away. Officers who once wondered if they could fit women into their work are now wondering where they can get more like them.

The WACs of the Station Complement have seen it happen—the change from curiosity to acceptance, from the days when they were a strange new auxiliary to their present status as an integral part of Fort Benning.

They know it was just a joke at first when the men called a girl in uniform "soldier." They know it now means the men approve of the "something new that has been added to the army."

Wowner Wecovers Wandering Wallet

When Pvt. George Benick of the 7th Armored Division's 48th Armored Infantry lost his wallet containing $41 just after payday he was a sad soldier. He had no hope of ever finding it or of anyone else finding and returning it intact.

But he reckoned without the fact that there are always a few honest souls, even in real life. A Miss Marguerite Miller, 276 Church street, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., found Pvt. Benick's wallet and turned it over to him with the $41 and all allied papers.

Now Pvt. Benick has a renewed faith in mankind, and probably another beautiful friendship. After all, $41 can make a whale of a difference in the life of a private.

Food Meeting Opens Today At Main Post

A two-day conference of food service supervisors from posts, camps and stations in the Fourth Service Command will be held at Fort Benning Thursday and Friday, November 11 and 12, under the direction of Colonel John M. Rooks, Fourth Service Command director of Food Service.

Approximately 70 officers will attend the conference which will be held at Theatre No. 2 on the main post. Purposes of the conference is to give food service supervisors throughout the service command a complete picture of all phases of the subject of meat from the time it arrives at cold storage until finally served in mess halls, and to acquaint the supervisors with the educational meat program being conducted by the Army.

A meat lecture demonstration will be held the first day of the meeting by J. F. Boles, representing the National Livestock and Meat Board. The second day will be devoted to a discussion of subjects relating to the food service program. The meeting will be in charge of Col. Rooks, who recently left Fort Benning where he was commandant of all Bakers and Cooks schools in the Fourth Service Command, including the two on the post, for his present job.

Lt. Col. A. H. Veazey, post food service supervisor, the post assistant food service supervisors, Capt. Robert J. Dickson, assistant Commandant of Bakers and Cooks School No. 1, and Capt. Arthur L. Anderson, post nutrition officer, are representing Fort Benning at the meeting.

Do You Remember The Old Fort When—

By M-Sgt. DOUGLAS REICHORT

And Dana, the little tailor who made such good shirts?

And how proud we all were of our first roll collar blouse?

And the garrison being renamed Fort Benning instead of Camp Benning?

Mexican Army Officers Inspect Chute School

Col. Jose De. J. Ahumada, Lt. Col. Rafael Lazcano and Capt. Castro Martinez of the Mexican Army visited the Parachute School this week for the purpose of studying the methods of instruction which the school has put into use.

Although Mexico has no paratroops at present the Officers were keenly interested in observing the various phases of training and were particularly impressed with the spirit of the men in the school.

Capt. Martinez will remain here as he expects to go to The Infantry School.

Group Arrived From Ft. Meade In 1932; Formerly Tank Maintenance

The Automotive Section of The Infantry School presents two courses: the Officers Motor Course, designed to produce qualified motor and maintenance officers for Infantry units; and the Enlisted Motor Course, designed to produce skilled mechanics who will be capable of performing and supervising second echelon maintenance and the operation of all types of motor vehicles organic in the Infantry Regiment.

The Automotive Section had its origin in 1920 when the first Tank School was organized at Fort Meade, Maryland. In 1932 this school was moved from Fort Meade to Fort Benning, Georgia, and redesignated the Tank Section of The Infantry School. With the organization of the Armored Force in 1940 the Tank Section was divided: all equipment pertaining to tanks and one-half of the personnel were moved to Fort Knox, Kentucky, while the remaining equipment, buildings, and personnel formed the nucleus for the present Automotive Section.

TWELVE CLASSES

At the present time, instruction is carried on simultaneously for twelve classes, three of which are Officer classes and nine of which are Enlisted classes. All of these classes are of twelve weeks duration.

The Section also presents eight hours of instruction to students of the following courses: the Officers' Advanced, Officers Basic, Officers' Communications, and Officer Candidate Courses. The hours of instruction are given to the New Division Officers Course.

The staff of the Section includes the following personnel: 66 officers — instructors, 6 warrant officers—instructors, 386 noncommissioned officers—assistant instructors (including 7 WACs who act as clerks) and 24 civilians—clerks, stenographers, janitors.

INSTRUCTIONAL AIDS

During all instruction, visual aids, such as cutaway models of assemblies and units, are used constantly. Enlarged plywood working models are built in the Section's shops, and wall charts are made by enlisted draftsmen who are also graduates of the Section. Each student is equipped in addition with appropriate training manuals and a schedule of study references to assist in preparation and review.

Wherever practicable, the daily progress of each student is observed by means of homework papers, which are corrected and returned to the student to serve as a basis for review. Each week's instruction is followed by a practical work graded test. These graded tests are designed to test the knowledge of the students and to serve as a barometer of the thoroughness of teaching methods.

AUTOMOTIVE STAFF

The Automotive Section is divided into a headquarters and four groups. The commanding officer, Col. Leo A. Bessette, in addition to being chief of section, is responsible for the supervision of all transportation under the command of the commandant of The Infantry School. He is assisted by a staff of three officers: a secretary (Capt. Orris L. Watson), who is responsible for the administrative details of the section; a plans and training office (Capt. A. Joel Warren), and a supply officer (Major James V. Cooney), who also acts as police officer and fire marshal. A clerical force of four civilians and seven enlisted men (three of whom are WACs), function at headquarters. The four groups of the section are: General Group, Engine Group, Chassis Group and Operations Group.

Instruction is coordinated by the groups and with the units in the field by having the instructors attend maneuvers and other automotive schools in order that the section may assist and benefit in solving the maintenance problems of the field.

GENERAL GROUP

Major Edward B. Baskin is chief of the General Group, and is assisted by four other officers and five enlisted men. This group is responsible for the presentation of motor maintenance instruction to all classes of The Infantry School other than the officers and enlisted motor courses. The officers of this group are also responsible for continuous research in the field or army motor maintenance and passing this information on to the other members of the section.

The students of the Officers and Enlisted Motor Courses receive instruction from the other three Groups, remaining with each Group for four weeks. Each of these Groups consists of a Group Chief, his enlisted assistants, and four instructional teams. These teams, each with its own building or part of a building, are composed of two or three officers and approximately thirty assistant instructors; each instructs a class for one week. Instruction generally is presented in the ratio of 20 per cent conference and demonstration and 80 per cent practical work. The practical work is conducted by one enlisted instructor to each group of four to six students.

ENGINE GROUP

The first month is spent in the Engine Group where Major Frank H. Pharaoh is Chief of Group. The mission of the Engine Group is to train selected personnel in the construction principles of operation, adjustment, and maintenance of the internal combustion engines found in vehicles issued to the Infantry. To accomplish this, the subject matter has been grouped under three headings: [illegible] Carburetors, Electricity, [illegible] Engine Trouble-Up. In [illegible] instruction received [illegible] students receive [illegible] books, the [illegible] Air Compressor and Battery Charging.

The [illegible] of Operation of the Gasoline Engine, its detailed construction, lubrication, cooling and air fuel systems, and its maintenance are studied during the first week of instruction. The correct use of hand tools and precision instruments, although studied during the entire course, are emphasized during this week of instruction.

SCHOOL PROGRAM

The morning periods are devoted to conferences, during which time the students are encouraged to ask questions and discuss subjects that are being covered. The afternoon periods are devoted to practical work. At this time the students disassemble the engine, study those parts that have been discussed in the morning conferences, make all adjustments and reassemble the engine. The work is done by groups of from four to six students each, under the close supervision of an assistant instructor. Three types of engines are studied—the I head, I head, and the V, approximately seven hours being spent on each type.

The second week's instruction includes Detailed Carburetor Study and Elementary Electricity. The carburetor study includes the operation and maintenance of the carburetors used in Infantry vehicles. In the study of Automotive Electricity, the basic principles of electricity, storage batteries, battery chargers, generators, regulators, starting motors, lights, horns, and relays are studied.

PRACTICAL WORK

The theory of all Electrical Units is presented during the latter part of the second week and practical application follows in the third week. During the third week of the course, the students work on "live engines." Studying the various Electrical Systems and Circuits while the engines are running, the students disassemble, inspect and reassemble units, wire and correct troubles, test batteries and other Electrical Units. In addition to this Electrical Testing the students are given instruction on Battery Chargers, Generator and Starter Test Benches, and Radio Shielding and Suppression of Infantry Vehicles.

The fourth week of instruction begins with conferences on Diagnosing Engine Troubles, the Army Gasoline Field Range and the Air Compressor Unit. The remainder of the week with the exception of three-hour Tune-Up conference and demonstration with the Chassis Dynamometer, is devoted to practical work on "live engines."

CHASSIS GROUP

Major Dan E. Collier is Chief of the Chassis Group. The scope of instruction in this Group includes all parts of a vehicle excepting the engine and engine accessories. Here the students have an opportunity to study in detail each of approximately sixteen major units that constitute a chassis assembly.

The conference periods which occupy one-third of the total time are illustrated conferences and demonstrations, supplemented by group discussions, their primary purpose being to outline to the class the function of each separate assembly, its general operating principles, its maintenance requirements, troubles likely to occur in the field, and common abuses to which it is subjected.

USE GROUND SYSTEM

For practical work the class is divided into groups of approximately five students. Each group, under the guidance of an assistant instructor, disassembles and rebuilds a unit in order to learn its construction, adjustments, specific maintenance requirements and detailed operation.

The first week presents a logical sequence of study—first the frame, which is the backbone of the chassis, and then each major assembly in its order of appearance; clutches, transmissions, transfer cases, power take-offs, and winches.

The second week's instruction includes courses in springs, shackles, shock absorbers, propeller shafts, universal joints, rear axles, and front axles. The differential and the constant-velocity universal joint are also presented for study.

LEARN TIRE PRESSURE

Wheels, rims, and tires are studied during the third week, and the students learn the effect of incorrect inflation, unbalance, and misalignment. From wheel alignment, the course proceeds to steering gears and is concluded with a study of general lubrication requirements for all vehicles and practical instruction in oxyacetylene welding.

The fourth week is devoted almost exclusively to brakes. It consists of detailed study in each of the following brake systems: Hydraulic, Vacuum Suspended Booster, and Hydrovac. The last day of this week is spent on a "live" vehicle inspection.

Throughout these four weeks of instruction particular emphasis is placed upon first and second echelon maintenance. All repair and maintenance problems are viewed from the standpoint of combat conditions and much of the actual instructional material is based upon technical reports from maneuver areas and combat zones.

OPERATIONS GROUP

The final four weeks of instruction is spent in the Operations Group where Lt. Colonel Gerard I. Cambre serves as Chief of Section. Instruction is devoted to the practical application of the material studied in the Engine and Chassis Groups. Here the students actually perform the regularly scheduled 1000- and 6000-mile maintenance services on vehicles borrowed from organizations on the post, using the tools, equipment, and spare parts which would normally be available to an Infantry Regiment in the field.

During the first week in the Operations Group the students perform 1,000-mile maintenance service on the 1-4-ton vehicle (Jeep).

The second week is devoted to 6,000-mile maintenance services on Dodge vehicles.

The third week is spent performing 6,000-mile maintenance operations on GMC vehicles.

STUDY ALL VEHICLES

All this is done in order that the students will have had actual experience on all types of Infantry vehicles. During these three weeks they will have studied in addition, the Army system of maintenance, vehicle inspections, tools of the infantry regiment, loading and lashing motor vehicles for movement by rail, operation of motor vehicles in desert and cold climates, etc.

The fourth week of the Operations Group is devoted to operation of motor vehicles, i. e., convoy, field expedients and motor marches. It includes such other instruction as selection and training of drivers, loading and lashing, recovery, evacuation, and destruction of motor vehicles in combat zoens. Operation of motor parks and the forms, records and reports required to operate regimental motor transportation are studied during this time. Motor marches are conducted by the students and supervised by the instructors. During the period of the march an airplane is used to contact the convoy and to observe the behavior of the convoy both on the road and in the bivouac areas. Instruction in motor march is concluded with the march and bivouac under blackout conditions.

'Lucky 7th' Gets New Staff Chief

Colonel George H. Molony of St. Joseph, Missouri, has been named Chief of Staff of the Seventh Armored division, replacing Col. W. P. Shepard, the Public Relations office announced today.

Lt. Col. Allen Fadness was announced as Division Reserve commander in the post vacated by Col. Molony.

The "Lucky 7th's" new Chief of Staff has been with the division since its infancy, first as commander of the old 48th Armored Infantry Regiment and then as Division Reserve commander before accepting his present position.

OLD BENNING MAN

Like many another division officer he was stationed at Fort Benning before coming here with Maj. Gen. Lindsay McDonald Silvester's "Luckies." He attended The Infantry School here 1921-22.

Born in Charleston, W. Va., April 4, 1894, he is the son of the Rev. C. H. Molony, Quincy, Ill., who served as Episcopal chaplain with the Missouri National Guard on the Mexican border in 1916.

Col. Molony graduated from New Albany, Ind., high school in 1914 and studied at the University of Missouri 1914-17. There he became a member and joined Phi Gamma Delta, national college fraternity, and later A. F. & A. M. Charity Lodge No. 331 in St. Joseph, Mo.

COL. GEORGE H. MOLONY

In addition to being a graduate of TIS at Fort Benning, he is a graduate of the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

SENT TO HAWAII

Col. Molony was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Infantry Feb. 25, 1918, and was stationed in Hawaii, where he later became an instructor in the Hawaii National Guard (1934-36).

Always to the fore in active duty, the colonel served with the 15th United States Infantry in China 1026-29, and as G-1 (personnel) of the 88th Division before joining the "Lucky 7th" several months ago as commanding officer of the 48th Armored Infantry Regiment.

Col. Molony is married to the former Miss Kathleen Walker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Walker of Honolulu. He has two children, Kathleen W. (Mrs. J. E. Landrum, Jr.) of West Point, N. Y., and Barbara, at home.

Col. and Mrs. Molony reside on the main post at 307-C 1st Division.

Former Tennessee All-American Cage Star Is O.C. Here

The physical training phase of an officer candidate's work have presented no problems to OC Bernie J. Mehen of the First Company, Third Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School, former All-American basketball player, track star and member of the University of Tennessee's physical education department.

Mehen, whose home is in Wheeling, W. Va., played on Tennessee's basketball team and made the Southeast All-Conference quintet every year. During his senior year he captained the team, leading it to victory over the powerful Long Island University five in a post-season contest. It was in that year he was chosen for the All-American.

On the track team, Mehen established the Tennessee state record for the high jump. Following his graduation last year, the university put him on its physical education staff.

Rags To Glad Rags Work Of QM Reclamation Shop

A dust rag's life would be the lot of many pieces of damaged clothing repaired at the Clothing and Equipage Repair Section of the Quartermaster Reclamation Shop if they were in the possession of the average American housewife. But in the Army, such frayed and ragged clothing usually gets a new lease on life.

Symbolic of the Army's complete utilization of every scrap of resources coming under its control, a shirt or any other garment coming into the shop is salvaged in every possible way to provide cloth, extra buttons, zippers or half of zippers and other material. A good sleeve from one ragged shirt, with a good back, a good collar and other good parts from other worn shirts are put togeth-er until a complete shirt is made —and made well for the purposes it is to serve. During three recent months, this shop has made a net saving to the government of al-most $100,000 by making such re-pairs.

Operated under the general di-rection of Colonel Jack Meyer, di-rector of supply at Fort Benning, the clothing repair shop is under the immediate direction of Lieut. Ross W. Crossley, a native of Co-lumbus, Ohio, and quartermaster reclamation officer, who also is in charge of the shoe repair shop and several other quartermaster shops.

24-HOUR SERVICE

However, during the past six months, the most spectacular phase of this shop's operations has been the growth of special work for organizations, such as making al-terations on clothes which do not fit, sewing braids on overseas caps, and sewing on chevrons or insignia. And the highly unusual feature about the shop's perform-ance of this work in these days of overworked tailor shops and alteration shops is the fact that the Clothing Repair shop not only promises to deliver but actually delivers the goods within 24 hours after received.

Doing this work free of charge and according to G. I. specifica-tions, the shop alters lengths of sleeves or trousers, or any similar sort of work quickly and expediti-ously. Where such work is need-ed for organizations which have been alerted or some other sort of emergency arises, the shop will complete the repairs and return them to the organization in less than 24 hours after they have been received.

WORK INCREASING

Whereas this sort of work amounted to less than five per cent of the work done by the shop six months ago, and was al-most negligible nine months ago, almost 35 per cent of all work done at present is organizational work, and the percentage is contin-uing to grow. In addition to doing such work for regular U.S. the Repair Shop also does a great deal of repair work for the WAC units on the post as well as members of the Army Nurse Corps.

Growth in percentage of this type of work is due largely to the fact that more organizations are participating in the services avail-able. In addition to Fort Benning, repairs amounting to about five per cent of all work done, are made for Turner Field at Albany, Ga.; Tuskegee Air Base at Tuske-gee, Ala., and the Opelika, Ala., Internment Camp.

LARGEST IN SOUTH

Addition last March of 68 ma-chines and 36 women from the Columbus WPA has made the Clothing and Equipage Repair Section into the largest such shop of its kind, military or civilian, in the South, and in all likelihood as large or larger than any other similar Army repair shop in the nation.

This was achieved on March 12, when the enlarged repair shop went into full operation, pre-pared to repair 30 to 40 thousand garments and pieces of equipage each month without strain of any sort. Prior to that date, the shop had only 12 steamstresses and was able to handle only a small part of the clothing repair work on the post. Most of the work had been sent to the WPA in Colum-bus by the Reclamation Section of the Quartermaster Corps for repairs.

When WPA was closed down by the government late in February, the Quartermaster Corps brought most of the WPA machinery and personnel to Fort Benning, ex-panding the Clothing and Equipage Repair Shop to its present size. Today, a total of 74 sewing ma-chines are utilized and number of employes range from 66 to 72.

FULLY EQUIPPED

Sixty-six of the machines are stitchers, three of them are button machines and one each are over-edge, feeling, button hole, special double needle, and Eastman rotary cutter machines. The over-edge machine is specially constructed to finish blanket edges, while the felling machine closes side seams on work clothes. The button hole machine makes button holes of any size, and makes them look almost as good as new. The double nee-le machine is used mostly for put-ting on patch pockets, while the rotary cutter cuts patches in large quantities.

Of the 68 machines brought from the WPA, 64 were stitchers and four were special machines. All special machines are operated by three women employes, who are specially trained in the work.

Clothing and equipment come to the shop from many sources, in-cluding excess clothing from vari-ous units, clothing turned in by soldiers who have received dis-charges, and clothing which has been worn out by soldiers and been worn out by soldiers and turned in by supply sergeants for "salvage." The clothing and equip-ment range from an "almost new" state to a state of almost utter use-lessness by former civilian stand-ards.

ALL TYPES MENDED

All types of clothing are in-cluded in the items repaired by the shop, and some new processes, worked out here at Fort Benning, have been put into practice by the shop.

Raincoats for example, are patched like rubber tires by a process Lieutenant Crossley him-self experimented with and found to be far more efficient than the usual method of repair. Running across some rubberized cement used in the tent repair shops com-ing under his supervision, Lieu-tenant Crossley decided to try "cold patches" similar to those used on punctured automobile inner tubes. The area around the tear or hole in the raincoat is cleaned thoroughly by a mixture of ammonia and benzine, and a neat patch is placed over the tear from the inside and held by the rubberized cement.

The former method of sewing patches on the raincoats was not nearly so effective. The new new method saves considerable time, saves machinery, and most impor-tant of all, leaks none whatsoever, while sewed patches sometimes were inclined to ship a little water. The only time a machine touches a raincoat for such repairs now is when a new buttonhole is made on the coat.

When the clothing and equip-page comes into the shops for re-pair, they range from mattress covers to laundry nets, from bar-racks bags to mosquito bars, from shelter halves to woolen blankets and cotton comforters, and from prossaic O. D. clothes to the yet more prosiac herringbone twill.

The clothing and equipment goes first to the ripping and sort-ing group in the shop and are sorted into types as to material and as to kind of repair needed. If the unit finds certain of the clothing is unfit for repairs as a whole, the strong parts are ripped off and saved until enough dif-ferent parts are collected for en-tire garments. If the individual bit of clothing can be repaired satisfactorily it is sent to the proper group for repairs, by the forelady at the machines inspec-tion table, who allots the cloth-ing to the various machines with-in the specialized groups.

WORKERS CLASSIFIED

The workers are divided into special groups for special duties, just as in an extremely well run factory. However, when new workers are hired, all of them, regardless of the extent of their previous training, are put into a training group and taught specifi-cally and carefully the work of the shop. All of them are taught to know the types of material, the types of weaves and cloth, en-abling them to match all patches on garments, and the best method of repairing each type of clothing or equipment. Thus, each worker will know from experience and training exactly the types of patching and material to use on each individual item coming up for repair.

After completion of the training period, the workers are put into one of the skilled groups, which include field jacket, blanket, com-forter, wool shirts, wool pants, and herringbone, to mention but a few. The size of each group depends upon the volume of clothing or equipment of each type coming through the shop.

Clothing is divided into two general groups—Class B, and Class X. Class B clothing prob-ably has been worn, but is still good for re-issue after repairs. The hand-repairing group repairs such woolen clothing and which shows only minor breaks in mate-rial which cannot be detected aft-er repairs.

Class X clothing has been so worn and patched that there are outward evidences of repair. However, it is never wasted in any respect, and the good mate-rial from the various items are picked up in every case. Such clothing is utilized by the Army for field maneuvers, landing op-erations and other such activities which would speedily make Class A or Class B clothes facsimiles of the worst of Class X clothes. This type of clothing is issued without accountability, which means that the soldier or organization is not charged with the items.

CLOSE INSPECTION

After routine repairs on the garments coming into the shop, each is placed on a tray beside the worker. The garments are picked up by a checker and car-ried to the inspection table again. Garments requiring buttons, out-side patch pockets, reworked but-ton holes, or other such work re-quiring special machines are then assigned out to the proper per-sons to do the work.

After the special operations, the garments once again return to the inspection table where they are thoroughly rechecked to see if all needed repair work has been completed. Another checker clas-sifies the garments, makes the count, and places them in the proper bins to be picked up by the trucks from organizations all over the post.

Alterations work for organiza-tions is handled on a slightly dif-ferent basis. Individual soldiers can turn in clothing which needs alterations to their supply officer, as well as such things as a hat needing a braid, or shirts needing chevrons or patches. The unit supply officer then sends such clothing to the repair shop after each garment is invididually tag-ged with the soldier's name and organization, and special instruc-tions as to type of work to be done is wriitten on the reverse side of the tag.

EXPERT WORKERS

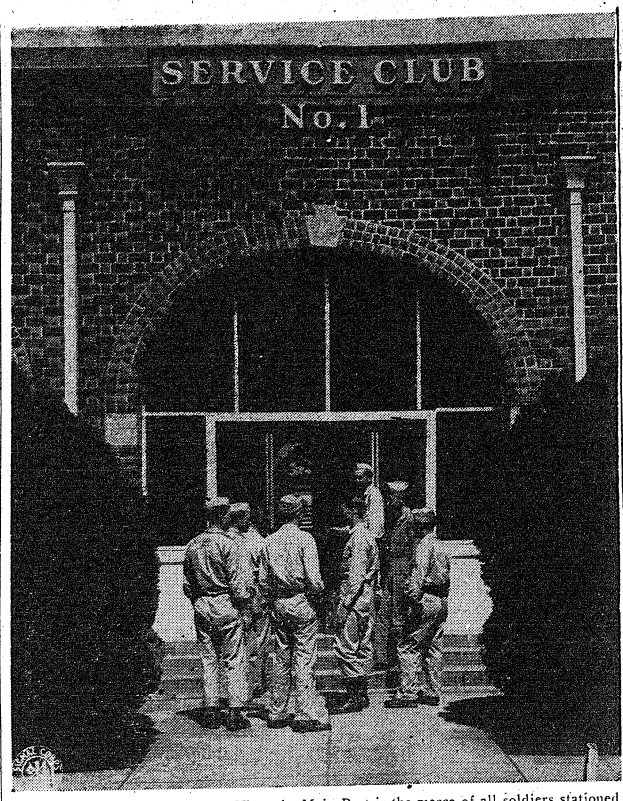
The alterations unit at the shop has two workers who prepare the clothing for the machines by cut-ting and measuring according to instructions on the tag. Then the work is carried to the machines. Workers at the various machines specialize on shirts, or trousers or other garments. All of these workers had experience in tailor-ing work before assigned to their job, and although a tailor's perfect job is not guaranteed, all work done meets Army specifications. All work is carefully checked and inspected before it is allowed to leave the shop.

The operations of this shop dur-ing the three-month period from July 1 to October 1, made a net savings to the government from the repair of salvaged and other items of $98,631.44, the value of the repaired items. Almost 100,000 pieces of clothing and equipment were repaired during the period, the exact figure being 99,740. Of this number 36,397 pieces were textiles, and miscellaneous items including pillows, mattresses, blankets, and mosquitoe bars; while 63,343 pieces were items of clothing repaired. In addition, al-terations amounted to 1491 pieces. With the change of uniforms in the month of October, figures for alterations during that month are expected to reach a figure total-ling several thousands. Physical changes of personnel, including both gain and loss of weight, is a frequent cause of alterations, Lieutenant Crossley says.

DAILY OUTPUT

An average of 1,300 to 1,600 pieces of clothing and equipment are now being repaired daily, Lieutenant Crossley points out. The amount of work an individual worker in the shop cap produce depends upon the type and con-dition of the garment, he says.

In discussing this phase of the shop's operations, Mrs. Florence Pearce, supervisor of the shop, de-clared: "Khaki trousers are an example for one extreme, for they can be repaired with great rapid-ity. One worker can in one day, repair as many as 85 to 100 of them. On the other hand, field jackets are hard to repair, and 20 or 30 of them repaired in one day by a single worker is quite a satisfactory showing."



Mrs. Pearce, now in charge of all workers and all duties in the shop here, was in charge of the WPA section in Columbus which previously did the repair work.

Personnel of the shop, well trained, efficient, and enthusiastic about their work, do their jobs in spite of physical handicaps. All of them are women, and few of them would be subject to any draft, even if the law should, in the fu-ture, declare the WAC to be a compulsory organization for wom-en. The oldest worker is a 66-year-old woman, well beyond draft age. The youngest is 18 years of age. One of the workers has an artificial eye and four are deaf-mutes. Despite such handicaps, they fully earn their livelihood by their work, according to Mrs. Pearce, who states they are all highly skilled for their tasks.

As an evidence of the Army and Quartermaster Corps determina-tion to be prepared for any even-tuality, every one of the 74 ma-chines are always ready for use and can be put into operation at a moment's notice, according to Lieutenant Crossley. This feat is an unusual one considering the number of machines, the magni-tude of their use, and the intricacy of the machinery, but it is char-acteristic of the Reclamation sec-tion to be prepared—come what may.

Georgia 4-H club members set an example and goal in the "S. S Hoke Smith" Liberty ship cam-paign to challenge the youth of this Nation, according to E. S. Land, chairman of the Maritime commission.

Fire-fighting plans should be developed for every Georgia farm, the Extension Service asserts.

SERVICE CLUB NUMBER ONE on the Main Post is the mecca of all soldiers stationed on this section of the reservation. It is equipped with a splendid dance floor, billiard tables, radios and talking machines. In the building are housed also the Garrison library and a modern radio broadcasting studio from which emanates many of the programs aired from the post. (U. S. Army Signal Corps Photo).

Service Clubs Are Mecca In Off-Hours

Many a soldier insists heatedly that there's no such thing as spare time in the army, but even the most disorganized GI occasionally finds himself at loose ends because his chores are all done and the evening is still young.

That's when he begins to ap-preciate the service club in his area. There he finds special en-tertainment features, music, food, games, and facilities for writing letters in comfort. Whether he wants active recreation or just a quiet corner where he can sit in a comfortable chair and rest his tired feet, he can usually find what he's looking for in his serv-ice club.

Fort Benning has seven such clubs, operated by the Special Service Branch under the super-vision of Lt. Col. Charles C. Fin-negan, chief. They are scattered about the post so that one is con-venient to each concentration of troops.

The clubs are the center of rec-reation for their areas. Each has its own cafeteria or canteen, and all except Lawson Field Recrea-tion Hall have libraries. Guest houses, for the use of families and friends visiting soldiers, are nearby.

FORMAL PROGRAMS

Each club plans a formal pro-gram each week, with some special feature booked for each night. These include movies, bingo, dances, variety shows, quiz pro-grams and the like. Some of the clubs have classes in subjects ranging from dramatics to fencing.

Hostesses at the service clubs help the soldiers plan and stage their parties. They arrange to bring WACs or girls from Colum-bus to the dances, and help with the details of refreshments, deco-rations, etc. Some of the clubs are large enough for the dances, other-wise they are held in gyms in the area.

Soldiers bring their problems to the hostesses, and sometimes when they get homesick they come in to sit and talk for companion-ship. But they also share their happier moments, and the host-esses get a detailed account of furloughs, promotions, weddings, and new babies.

DIRECTORY

Service clubs, their locations, and personnel are:

Service Club No. 1, Main Post, Miss Mary Farmer, director; No. 2, Sand Hill, Mrs. Winifred Baker, director; Miss Juanita Wilkins, cafeteria hostess;. Miss Mary Smalley, recreational and social hostess: No. 3, Harmony Church, Miss Mildred Cawthon, director; Miss Olga Parker, cafeteria host-ess; No. 4, for colored troops on the main post, Miss Adeline Mich-ael, cafeteria hostess; No. 5, Har-mony Church, for colored troops, Mrs. Bernice Smith, director; Miss Louise Harris, cafeteria hostess; Lawson Field Recreation Hall, WAC Lt. Lois Price, temporarily assigned as director, and No. 7, in the Alabama area, Miss Sarah Head, director; Miss Elizabeth Heap, cafeteria hostess.

PING-PONG KING WINS

Ping-pong king Pvt. Wilner P. Rhine and Lt. Paul M. Ragla of the Seventh Armored division otok two out of three doubles games from Sgts. James C. Murphy and William Summers of the Fort Ben-ning Academic Regiment in the 7th's Shepard hall Friday night. Sgt. Bill Summers is the 8th rank-ing table tennis player of this country. In a singles game played previously, Pvt. Rhine bester Lt. Ragla but lost two to Murphy and Summers while Lt. Ragla won one game from Murphy, losing one to Summers.

Well, He Did Get Transferred Didn't He?

Technician Fifth grade Hor-ace Weinstein of the "Lucky 7th" Armored division may have a few more gray hairs this week, but he is also breathing a bit easier after enjoying a furlough.

Weinstein had barely fin-ished unpacking when an im-mediate action order came through for him to prepare to leave the country.

In a mad swirl of activity he took his final physical exam, made his last will and testament, and repacked his belongings for overseas ship-ment. Then at almost the zero hour he was informed that a mistake had been made, and that he was only being trans-ferred to the 991st Engineer Treadway Bridge company in the Sand Hill area.

From Cpl. Weinstein's point of view at least, the Army works in strange and mysteri-ous ways its wonders to per-form.

7th Armored Band Formed

Formation of the Seventh Ar-mored Division Band, which has been combined from the 31st Ar-mored Regiment and the 40th Ar-mored Regiment Bands, has been announced b ythe Lucky Seventh Armored Division at Fort Ben-ning. The newly-formed band made its first formal appearance at a recent review held by Maj. Gen. Lindsay McDonald Silvester, commanding officer of the divi-sion.

Members of the band occupy barracks near the 33rd Engineers and Division Headquarters Com-pany in the Sand Hill area. The band held its first get-together party and dance at the Cherokee Inn in Columbus November 1. Mrs. Hugh Roberts, committee-woman from the Columbus De-fense Council, acted as hostess and chaperone for the evening.

H. C. Dental Clinic Bridges Many Gaps

Harmony Church Dental Clinic, under the direction of Major Nathan Alderstein, has been in the business in this area for over two and one-half years. Serving in the past the Officer's Candidate School, they are now concerned with the toothaches of the trainees and personnel of the ASTP Regiments. In addition to this, they also serve the 131st Infantry, the 252nd Field Artillery, 523rd Ordnance and the 25th Field Artillery. This is a pretty big dish (or should we say . . . tough grind) even for the fine group of Dental Officers and specialists stationed here. They're doing an excellent job.

The clinic itself might be called one of those three-in-one affairs. Under Major Alderstein, chief of clinic, are three sub-clinics—the Operative branch, under the direction of Major A. Stern, handles the usual filling and prophylactic work; Surgery, headed by Capt. B. Herzig, as the name implies, handles the extractions and other related dental operations, and Prosthetics, directed by Capt. R. Steinberg—which one might call the "Engineers" of the Dental Corps—construction and bridge work.

Personnel of the clinic is composed of thirteen dental officers, eleven dental specialists, nine enlisted men and two WACs, and one civilian employee, handling an average daily "production" of approximately one hundred men. From 8:30 a. m. to almost 6 p. m. one will find them busily grinding away at their work of making life more palatable for Harmony Church GIs. In addition, they are always prepared to administer emergency treatment after hours.

Major Alderstein speaks of his subordinates with a large measure of pride. "I believe the dental officers we have with us here compare favorably with any group of dentists, in the army or out, anywhere. And the service we are set up to render is as exacting and painstaking as that done anywhere in the United States."

Every man in Harmony Church is pulling for the dental clinic (or is it really vice versa?). Seriously speaking, they are a fine group of men and women—fine dentists, who are really performing a most excellent job.

The Thousand Islands comprise seven large and 1,600 small islands.

G. I. Takes His Sundae Heavy

"Gimme a choc shake!"

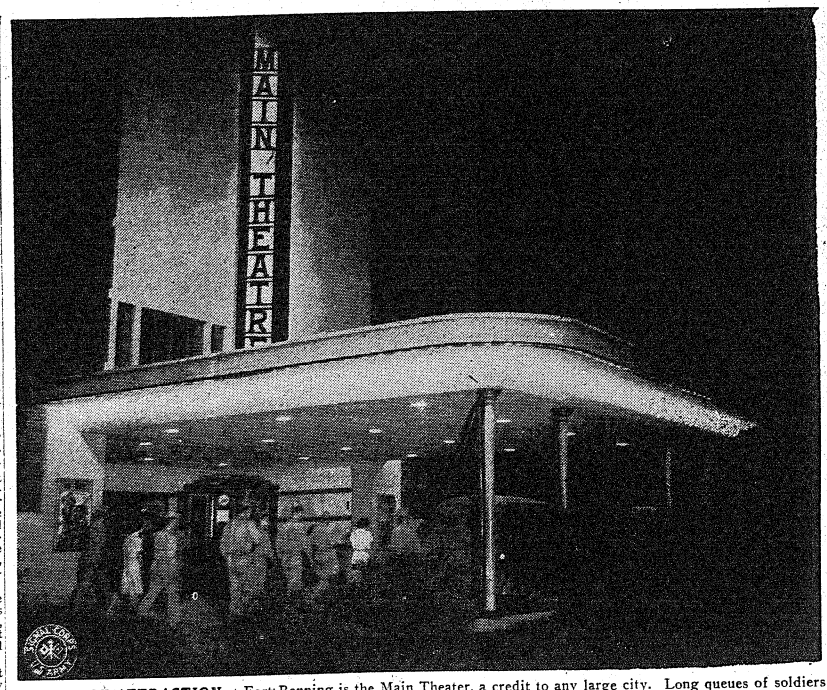
That's the emphasis that can be heard in the din from the GIs in the triple line that clamors for service before the only soda fountain in Fort Benning, the one in the PX across from the Main Post Theatre.



One "funny" thing about the "soda" fountain is that there is only a moderate demand for ice cream sodas, or other drinks with carbonated water, states T. J. Pitch, manager of the fountain. He and his assistant, C. E. Martin, both noted that the GIs get most of their plain drinks in bottles at the smaller PXs, and their plain pints of ice cream in the same way, or at the cafeteria, and when they come into the "fountain" they want "served" ice cream, with chocolate syrup on it, or in shakes with chocolate flavor.

During the hot months the place used an average of 120 gallons of ice cream a week, it is stated, and it has only dropped off about a third even in this very cool weather of late.

Women on the Post are about the only patrons of the more fancy concoctions of the fountain, the GI being too busy (or too hungry) to worry over such care in his selection of confections. The woman, WAC or civilian, can have syrups and nuts and fruits and such, mixed any fancy way she wants them, the GI just calls for a chocolate milk shake or a chocolate sundae—and is happy with results without bother. Of course, he eats the other things, sometimes, when he is accompanied by the "date," but it is a concession on his part.

In most animals the eyes look to the side and have separate fields of vision.

The sequoia trees of California are thought to be the oldest living things. Some are estimated to be 4,000 years old.

CENTER OF ATTRACTION at Fort Benning is the Main Theater, a credit to any large city. Long queues of soldiers form before the box office long before the selling of tickets is scheduled. If you don't believe it, just drop around a Sunday or a week-day and see for yourselves. This photo was snapped at night. (U. S. Army Signal Corps Photo).

Dozen Movie Houses Give Troops Latest in Hollywood Entertainment

War Department theaters here at Fort Benning have kept up with the pace set by the U. S. Army Motion Picture Service since it began operation Jan. 1, 1921.

Few but the "old timers" on the post remember the old main theater on Ingersoll Street near the post gymnasium. When the boys at Fort Benning today speak of the "main theater", they mean the Main Theater which stands on the post's busiest corner, Wold Avenue and Ingersol Street.

The Main Theatre was opened just about five years ago—September, 1938. It is completely modern in every respect and is comparable to the finest motion picture houses to be found in the civilian world. Aside from maintenance work always going on in the comfortable auditorium and luxurious lounges, the exterior and lobby appointments are constantly being modernized.

In addition to the Main Theatre, where Lt. Jack Campbell, post theater officer, maintains headquarters, there are 11 other War Department theaters scattered over greater Fort Benning. Theater No. 2 is located at Wold and Anderson Avenues on the Main Post and is for colored personnel. Theater No. 3 is in the Frying Pan area, and Theater No. 8 serves the First Student Training Regiment.

Theaters Nos. 4, 5, 9 and 11, supervised by Lt. Charles M. Clark, assistant theater officer, are located in the Harmony Church area, the direction of Lt. John D. Deggett, serve the Sand Hill area.

SPECIAL SERVICE FUNCTION

The Army Motion Picture Service was inaugurated after World War I when an agreement between the War Department and a commercial distributor proved unsuccessful. GI theaters are operated by the director of the Special Service Division of the Army Service Forces.

The enterprise is entirely cooperative, and profits realized in War Department theaters are returned to the camps. All posts where such motion pictures are shown share in the profits.

There is no censorship exercised in the selection of motion pictures for GI audiences except in the portrayals of Army life and activities. Bookings are made in district offices and a schedule is usually sent to the post more than a week before the performances.

War Department theaters are not run in competition with civilian houses. They are established quate motion picture facilities for only where there are not adequate Army personnel.

Aside from first-rate motion pictures, many times not released to biggest civilian theaters, War Department houses also feature USO camp shows.

SIX WEEKLY CHANGES

Pictures to play Fort Benning theaters are booked in Atlanta. A new plan of scheduling performances here was recently inaugurated. There are now six feature changes per week in post theaters. The old plan offered but five.

Attendance of the movies on the post would be something to gladden the heart of the most pessimistic manager of a civilian theater. An average weekly attendance of the 12 houses here showing a total of 84 performances is about 95,000.

Capacity of the Main Theater is 1,504 for a performance, which means, in short, that practically twice that number sees a picture there every night. In addition matinees are shown.

The Main Theater, of course, has the greatest seating facilities on the post. Of the other 11 theaters, all smaller, most are temporary structures, but certain of them are of a semi-permanent type.

Both civilian and military personnel man the Fort Benning theaters. Master Sgt. Kenneth L. Bauer is assistant manager at the Main Theater. He has worked for the Main Theater on the post since 1933 and has been at Fort Benning since 1925, formerly having served with the 29th Infantry Regiment.

Certain soldiers are assigned to work in the theaters, and four WACc are assigned to the Main Theater. Ushers and ticket takers, also soldiers, work after completing their military duties for the day.

USO Clubs Sure Curative For Loneliness

GI's who bewail week in and week out a lack of entertainment at Fort Benning must enjoy "singing the blues," or they would investigate the many enteratinment features not only on the reservation but at the USO establishments in Columbus and Phenix City.

In Columbus and Phenix City there are eight USO clubs serving Fort Benning troops in addition to two Travelers' Aid bureaus. Three of these establishments are for the sole use of Negro troops.

USO history in the Fort Benning area has been written parallel to that of the post. As the post grew and expanded to train more personnel, so the USO's grew to accommodate their leisure time recreational needs. In fact, they are still growing. The Troops-in-Transit Lounge was recently opened on Twelfth street near the Columbus railway station.

Six national welfare agencies co-operate to give servicemen and women the United Service Organizations. The agencies, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the National Catholic Community Service, the Jewish Welfare Board, the Salvation Army and the Travelers' Aid, are all represented in the Fort Benning area.

Their co-operation working together to provide recreational facilities for members of the armed forces is a tribute to our national religious freedom, and may well serve as a model for the post-war world.

One of the largest and most conveniently located of the Columbus USO clubs is at 100 Ninth street opposite the Howard Bus station. Operated jointly by the National Catholic Community Service and the Jewish Welfare Board, it offers a program to meet various tastes.

MANY FEATURES

Many features are scheduled for presentation weekly on the same days. Sunday's program always includes coffee and toast and jams in the morning, Town Hall and a musical program in the afternoon and a variety show and motion pictures in the evening. Other week-day events including basketball and other sports, motion picture shorts, quizzes with prizes, dances, games and parties are regular attractions in addition to specially programmed events.

Eugene Bergmann is local director of the National Catholic Community Service. The Jewish Welfare Board program is at present being handled by Maurice Rothschild and Miss Naomi Gailzaide, who are pinch-hitting until a successor is named for Edward Korn, who left November 1 to assume a position with YMHA and the YWHA in St. Louis, Mo.

The Army-Navy YMCA-USO is Floyd Francisco is director. The "Army Hour," a soldier radio broadcast on Sunday at 5 p.m. (EWT) is one that club's most famous programs. However, entertainment features and services to be found in all the USO's are programed.

Two Salvation Army USO clubs are operated in the Fort Benning area under the direction of Major Victor Tidman. The Columbus unit is located at 1323 Broadway, where James Scott is director, and the Phenix City club is at Third and 16th street. Program directors for the clubs are Mrs. Edna Scott and Mrs. Kathleen Barrow, respectively.

TRAVELERS' AID

The Travelers' Aid maintains central offices at Broadway and 10th street in Columbus. There is a booth in the Greyhound Bus station and one in Howard Bus station. Miss Elizabeth Mertz is director.

One Travelers' Aid unit and two USO's are for the exclusive use of Negroes. The Travelers' Aid station is at 500 1-2 Ninth street, where Miss Dorothy Butler is director. The USO clubs are the Army-Navy YMCA at 841 Fifth avenue, and the YWCA at 936 Fifth avenue. E. E. Farley and Mrs. Frances Penman are the respective directors.

Facilities offered at all of the clubs include information, travel and room service, lounging, libraries, personal counseling, games, music, radio, popular recordings, arts, crafts, writing paper, home hospitality, refreshments, sewing kits and sewing service and package wrapping and mailing.

In addition to USO clubs, four other service clubs are located in Columbus. The Presbyterian Service Center is at 11th street and First avenue. There is a service club in the Columbus lodge of the BPOE at 5 1-2 East 11th street. The Episcopal Service Men's Club is in the church building at 1130 First avenue, and the Masonic Service Center is at 1125 Second avenue.

Luckies Pride Selves On Leaders, Training

Stepping quickly and methodically into place with Armored Command in all matters of organization and training policies, the "Lucky Seventh" Armored Division, commanded by Major General Lindsay McDonald Silvester, occupies a unique and important position in the United States Army at Ft. Benning.

Now in garrison at Sand Hill, the 7th Armored Division, has continued to keep a pace begun when the division was activitated at Camp Polk, Louisiana, in March 1942.

Gen. Silvester, who set the pace less than two years ago, has led the 7th Armored through a concentrated and uninterrupted training program, which began on the day of his assignment.

The Commanding Officer of the snappy 7th Armored Division graduated from the Advance Infantry School at Ft. Benning in 1924. He ils also a graduate of the General Staff School and the Army War College.

Gen. Silvester was first assigned to the 2nd Infantry and went to Fort Shafter in February 1913, returning to the United States in August, 1915, for duty with the 1924. He is also a graduate of San Francisco, Cal. He joined the Punitive Expedition into Mexico with this regiment between May 1916, and February, 1917, then returned to border patrol duty at Columbus, New Mexico, for five months, from July until October 10, 1917. He was then transferred to Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

On March 29, 1918 General Silvester sailed with the 30th Infantry and served with it at the front until August 1918, and later with the 7th Infantry.

GENERAL WOUNDED

General Silvester participated in the Aisne defensive, the St. Mihiel offensive and the Meuse-Argonne offensive. For outstanding heroism he was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross and the Silver Star. He was wounded by machine gun bullets in the upper right arm in an engagement on October 11, 1917, and was awarded the Purple Heart, the French Croix de Guerre with Palm and Gilt Star, and the Legion of Honor.

Training grounds, firing ranges and fields in the entire Ft. Benning area were not unfamiliar then to General Silvester. He brought the division he and his fellow officers had trained into home territory and that training—including all that it takes plus his personal experience to make an Armored Division. That training is still in progress,—bigger and broader than ever as the soldiers who wear the 7th Armored Division triangle do their duties.

The Seventh Armored Division's war partially trained by the old Third Armored Division. Doubletiming, officers and enlisted personnel of the Division hurriedly responded to the call that brought them into the service. The Division was activated at Camp Polk, La., following 13 weeks of basic training.

In keeping with the Division's policies, established by the soldier who leads them, the 7th Armored Division men have been hardened through experience. The Division participated in Louisiana and Texas maneuvers and only recently returned to garrison following trying desert warfare training. Soldiers of the 7th are undeniably equipped to meet hardships, come as they may.

EVEEY OUNCE OF ENERGY

"From the very day of its activation," Gen. Silvester explains regarding the Division, "you have given every ounce of your energy to the cause of making the Seventh Division such a well trained unit that it will be abel to meet successfully any enemy against which it may operate."

It was a timed, pace-making business that took place in Louisiana last year—and ever since. The Seventh Armored Division was trained at Camp Polk in less time than ever known in the history of the Armored Force. The "Lucky Seventh" used the Third Armored Division's equipment, tanks, trucks, weapons, kitchens and time. Completion of the Seventh's first phase of training, "marged the culmination of a training period which is unique in our service," Major General Alvin C. Gillem, Jr., commanding the Second Corps, stated at the activation.

An all-out effort at prevision, plus perfect weather, won praise from General Gillem, who told the soldiers of the new Division. . . . "The 7th is lucky, for two reasons—you have had your initial training with the 3rd Armored Division and you have General Silvester for your commander." Like magic, General ?Gillem's allusion to the Division as being lucky, spread, and today it's the "Lucky Seventh" anywhere, everywhere the 7th Armored Division is mentioned.

The "Lucky Seventh" has established an enviable record and carved a niche for itself in military circles that will forver be a reminder to the rest of the world, htat the U. S. Army is one in which enlisted men share equally the opportunities for advancement wtih graduates of the country's greater military colleges.

A total of 897 men of the Seventh Armored Division have been enrolled in the 18 officers candidtae schools throughout America. Every day, now, plans are being made, and additional men "from the rangs" are being sent to the country's most important training centers and schools.

SECOND ACTIVATED

The Seventh Armored Division was the second armored divion to be activated in 1942. Many of the officers came from Ft. Knox, Ky., and the Third Armored Division, which was the first to occupy Camp Polk. Additional officers and enlisted men came from replacement centers scattered throughout the country.

Using the same grounds, the same experience in training and the same equipment, the new 7th Armored Division was built alongside the Third. Equipment was scarce at first. Quarters were cramped and minor mistakes caused short tempers. In spite of all this, added to an influx of recruits, the Seventh's soldiers put their shoulders to the wheel—worked and learned together.

By January 1, 1943, every man in the Seventh Armored Division had fired primary and secondary weapons. Men attended detailed schools for advance training and through practice familiarized themselves with new equipment.

Men of the 7th Division have been taught by experts within the division. Class work and laboratory experiment has occupied much of the men's time during through almost two years of training. Hundreds of classes are conducted daily—in addition to regular training—for every soldier who is fortunate enough to belong to this armored division.

The 7th Armored Division, ever expanding since its activation, has within its ranks some of the nation's leading officers, many of whom grew up with the parent First Armored Division at Ft. Knox. These men, especially qualified for their jobs in tanks, guns, light and heavy artillery, radio, motor mechanics and affilite subjects, have been to it that Seventh Division men had the best aavilable training. Neither time nor effort has been spared by General Silvester in providing opportunities at the very doors of the men of the "Lucky Seventh."

In 1942 farm mortgage indebtedness declined by about $300,000,000,000 in the United States.

327 Luckies Attend School Since August

Three hundred twenty-seven officers and enlisted men of the 7th Armored Division have been enrolled in advanced military schools throughout the United States since August of this year in continuation of an educational program uninterrupted since activation of the division.

Eighty-nine officers and 238 enlisted men, recommended by company and battery commanders have been accepted and are continuing advance studies in the various military schools, Capt. Lee H. Cassert, Division Schools Officer reported.

Carrying out a policy for enlisted men to share equally the opportunities for advancement in the United States Army by continuing study that would enable them to return to the Division better prepared, Maj. Gen. Lindsay McDonald Silvester, commanding General, has cooperated wholeheartedly.

Whenever any soldier within the 7th Armored Division has shown any special aptitude for any particular job it is a Division policy to encourage that soldier to continue his studies in that phase of work. Whatever the job there is a school somewhere in the United States where he may better prepare himself for that job.

Enrollment in the Army schools has been steady within the 7th Armored Division. Some 700 soldiers were selected from the ranks and have been graduated from the different Officer Candidate Schools since March 1942. Many of them have returned to the "Lucky Seventh."

The Armored School at Ft. Knox, Ky., Armored Command Headquarters, claimed the majority of the recent enrollees where officers are enrolled in the Officer's Battalin Commander's course, Commanding officer's school, and for further study in wheled vehicles, gunnery, tank mechanics, light and medium, and communications school.

Enlisted men sent to Ft. Knox, Ky., are taking advanced training in gun mechanics, radio, clerical courses, radiator repair and maintenance. Thirty men are studying radio operations and many of them are enrolled in tank maintenance courses.

TIS Doubles War Fund Goal

Contributions totaling $11,031—almost double the amount originally pledged, have been turned in to the National War Fund by units of The Infantry School, Captain Walter Gleason, School War Bond and War Fund Officer announced today.

Starting with an original pledge of $6,486, The Infantry School groups reached their respective goals and then proceeded to turn in additional sums as the officers and enlisted men received their pay at the start of the month.

Leading the units was the 3rd STR with a total contribution of $3,241. The second highest contributor was the 1st STR with the sum of $2,614, while in third place was the 300th Infantry with $1,686.

Captain Gleason pointed out, in making his announcement, that the money sent to the National War Fund is the total contributed by officers and enlisted personnel only, and does not include funds donated by civilian workers of The Infantry School.

MAJ. GEN. LINDSAY McDONALD SILVESTER, Commanding General of the 7th Armored Division, now garrisoned in the Sand Hill area, views troop movements from a tank turret. He was schooled in the Advance Infantry School at Ft. Benning, and has many times been cited and honored for bravery. The inset is a recent reproduction of portrait of the Luckies' leader. 7th Armored Division Rated Second To None

"Come hell or high water."... or even maneuvers, the "Lucky 7th" Aormored division continues to be one of the best entertained divisions in the country...due to the untiring efforts of the Division Special Services office.

From the day of its double-time activation up to the present Special Service has always offered to the men of the division a potpourri of morale-building diversion which has no equal in the Armored Command.

From "longhair to lowbrow" the "Lucky 7th" SSO has given the men of Maj. Gen. Lindsay McDonald Silvester's command every conceivable type of entertainment, t all began back in North Camp Polk, La., where Capt. David B. Van Winkle, division special service officer, took the reins of the office over, after several fruitless ventures had been made at sensing what the boys wanted in the amusement field.

Although these Armoraiders proved during desert maneuvers that they are capable and resourceful enough to provide their own entertainment, SSO was a welcome relief from reading, card games and the sack.

DESERT AMUSEMENT

For it was in the desert, during "break periods, that such movie stars as Kay Kyser, Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy, Eddie Cantor, Al Jolson and a host of other cinema greats generously donated their time and talents to amusing the men after long hours of gruelling combat maneuvers. Through SSO, guided by Capt. Van Winkle, stars who might have otherwise neglected these lonely desert troops put their hearts and souls into the task of making 7th Armored GIs lose their humdrum existence in a world of pleasant make-believe.

It was SSO too which arranged for recreational convoys to nearby points of interest as Hollywood, Grand Canyon, etc., on week-end or three-day passes.

In Fort Benning the story has been the same. Here SSO has gone to bat for the men again in providing "something different in every rec hall every night," in garrison.

To alleviate an overflow of soldiers into Columbus, where amusement facilities are always crowded, this section has provided a sports program (which does not interfere with training), variety shows, dances, and movies, to keep these hard-working huskies happy.

A fine division military band and four dance orchestras give this division all that it could wish for in the way of music . . . and "music makes morale." Nary a week passes but the 31st, 40th, 48th or 87th orchestra doesn't furnish danceable melodies for the enjoyment of the enlisted men.

Talented Rascals

In addition to all this, there is a wealth of talent in Maj. Gen. Silvester's 7th Armored.

Shining high in the musical firmament are Cpls. Fred Bowen and George Engles whose palatable twin piano arrangements have won the plaudits of both soldier and civilian music lovers.

There is home-grown division talent, but there is another side to the picture too . . . that of the entertainment fostered by recreational agencies as the USO, the Columbus, Ga. Three Arts League, etc. These too have played a major role in Army morale-raising on the post.

Through the USO the division has been given some of the better Broadway musicomedies and stage hits, as well as untold personal aid and consolation.

Here at Fort Benning, the Columbus Three Arts League through Mrs. Bass Lewis, president, and Mrs. Edgar Bullock, has made available a number of free season tickets to their winter concert series. Although this is something new for the "Lucky 7th," the Three Arts League has reserved approximately 200 seats for soldiers at their concerts for years.

And so it is that the Seventh Armored, pride of the Armored Command, is probably the best entertained division in this country. For although Maj. Gen. Silvester's men work hard in a late phase of training, they also know how to relax and enjoy their recreation.

Midget Music Maker Makes Much Morale

Lt. Walter L. Weaver of the "Lucky 7th's" 147th Armored Signal company is another in a long line of armored division men who believe that music makes morale.

Lt. Weaver never makes a trip to Division Headquarters these days without taking along his midget portable radio which rides just behind his driver in the peep (1-4-ton personnel vehicle).

Enlisted and officer personnel "up at division" are often pleasantly startled to hear dance music or war news coming and going on the late fall air, apparently from nowhere as a peep or jeep whisks by, which amuses both the lieutenant and his driver.

Then too, the music is an especially good morale sustainer for the driver who usually has to sit in the vehicle most of the day while the officer is indoors on official business.

If Peace Were Back? Oh Happy Happy Thought

Between duty on the firing range and problems galore 7th Armored Division soldiers took time out this week to meditate concerning what they would do if peace was declared at once and they were permitted to return home.

"The very thought of it is that it is too good to be true," a soldier from a combat command said. "By golly, my wife and my job are waiting for me. Oh, no, I don't want to think about it!"

Everyone asked was ready and willing to go home. Cpl. Don Mendelson replied: "That's a tough question to answer. If peace was declared today I would try to get back into my father's good graces and our business that of publishing."

Other replies came from hither and yon, as follows:

Sgt. Warren Jones: "I would take six months vacation before I returned to my work as a labor organizer."

M. Sgt. Clifton Phillips: "I would take it a little easier than I do now. I wouldn't have to worry about m yjob in the textile mill in Pelzer, South Carolina. My wife and my job are there. So is my heart."

T-4 R. J. Klunk: "If war was to end I would get married, first. Then I would become athletic director in some high school and settle down."

Pfc. Edward Hildebrand: "I wouldn't strike a lick or do any work for awhile. After a good rest I would return to my taxi business in Baltimore."

HE'S A SOLDIER NOW—This morning Private Arthur Lee Williams, (left), of Crichton, Ala., was a civilian, but after his visit to the quartermaster he is ready to commence training. Shown examining him is Colonel Ulric N. James, reception center commander, and Executive Officer, Major William C. Tippins. Frequent spot checks such as this are made by Col. James and his assistants to assure continued smooth functioning of the center. School days lie ahead for Reception Center soldiers who can neither read nor write. Although tentatively accepted into the army, they must undergo 12 weeks of the three R's before shipment to their first station. Shown above (center) is Sgt. William L. Graham, instructor from the center's specialized training regiment, who is explaining the fundamentals of expression, the putting of thoughts in words, to a class of selectees. One, two, three, four . . . head erect eyes front, chest out, chin in . . . Reception Center soldiers pass in review to the music of their band at a regular Sunday morning parade. The center group, (right), is doing 'eyes right' as it passes the reviewing stand. Two weeks ago, most of these men were civilians; now they are mastering the fundamentals of drill and have already gotten the feel of soldiering. They are ready for their first assignment.—U. S. Army Signal Corps Photo.)

Speed, Efficiency Mark Reception Center's Work

That in a nutshell is what Fort Benning's Colored Reception Center, largest unit of its type in America, does daily for hundreds of selectees, being introduced to army life for the first time. Of course the actual processing, clothing, equipping, and shipping are not quite that simple. But the outstanding feature of this reception center, under the command of Colonel Ulric N. James, is the tireless rapidity and efficiency with which each man is handled and introduced so to speak. An amazing amount of individual attention is given the average soldier, including testing, classification, medical examination, and on to painstaking care in the fitting of clothes and shoes.

The first step in this transition process is the Induction Station, commanded by Captain Earl R. Turbyfill, where each selectee's draft record is rechecked, and a series of mental tests and a physical examination are given. If somewhere along the line an individual fails to meet minimum mental requirements, trained psychologists arrange a recheck or personal interview. Men who cannot qualify at fourth grade level are often retained for service if interviews show that 12 weeks schooling might raise them to acceptable standards. These inductees are salvaged and sent to the Reception Center's Specialized Training Regiment for their additional training.

Others who pass all examinations, mental and physical, are inducted immediately and sworn in. All do not go to the army, however. Representatives from the Navy, Coast Guard, and Marines are stationed at the center and take certain likely candidates for those branches. Following induction, soldiers are allowed a three week furlough, to go home, dispose of any property, and to generally straighten up personal affairs.

Although officially in the army now, these soldiers do not wear the uniform, and are classed as reservists. Upon returning to duty, they first report to the reception center's checking station, where all records are again reviewed. Dog-tags and a processing tag are issued here. On the processing tag will be listed pertinent data as to inoculations received, blood type, score on intelligence tests, classification, orientation lectures heard, date of induction and clothing issued. This is carried along the way, to show succeeding stations just what each man has had or missed.

RECEIVING COMPANY

After leaving the checking station, soldiers go to a receiving company, where quarters and mess hall assignments are made. Then follows a visit to the quartermaster section, to be outfitted with everything from shoe-strings to helmet. All apparel is checked for size under the supervision of Captain George Fogie, quartermaster, and experienced personnel like Sgt. Norman LaCoste, a former retail clothing salesman.

Leaving the quartermaster, soldiers return to their company in the Receiving Battalion, which is commanded by Major Robert C. Landley, for training as time permits. This will include rudiments of military courtesy and discipline, and salute, facings, and drill with the rifle up to and including dry firing.

However, most of the men are shipped out in a very few days, receiving any of numerous assignments. They may go to nearly any arm or branch of the service, including Quartermaster Corps, Medical Corps, Chemical Warfare Service, Air Base Security, Infantry, Artillery, Cavalry, or Armored Forces. Some few are selected as Flying Cadets, and others may have been chosen for duty with the Marines, Navy, or Coast Guard before leaving the induction station. However, most of the men go into the army and predominately into the Army Service Force.

Before embarking on their new assignment, all soldiers are given another physical recheck to assure that all are in the best of condition. Then, with at least one commissioned officer as train commander, and numerous non-coms assisting, the recruits are shipped to their destination ready to start work immediately.

Specialized Training

But what of the men who fail the minimum requirements tests? Here begins operation of the other half of Colonel James's dual command, the Specialized Training regiment. It is a sizeable educational institution, charged with raising apt illiterates to fourth grade educational level in the short period of 12 weeks. This is so they may be able to absorb a regular basis training course.

Not only are inductees from Fort Benning sent to this regiment, but illiterate colored soldiers from all induction stations in the Fourth Service command, who by interview show definite ability to progress, but need additional schooling.

Making up this Specialized Training Regiment are four battalions, each directly responsible to Col. James and with Lt. Gordon S. Crawford, assistant S-3, designated as regimental educational supervisor. Commanding the four battalions respectively are: 1st Bn., Major Calvin A. Cottrell; 2nd Bn., Major Charles Heard; 3rd Bn., Major William F. Upton; and 4th Bn., Lt. Col. Frederick H. Titchenor.

The actual teaching is done by colored soldiers picked for their exceptional ability, of which there are 16 to each company. One of these is designated company educational supervisor, who is in turn under the various battalion supervisions.

In the classroom, studies follow a definite pattern, as outlined by the War Department, whereby soldiers are taught the three R's a la army. For instance men learn to read by learning the parts of a uniform, the parts of a rifle, the different drill commands, and the uses for each article. In a similar manner arithmetic is taught. The soldier learns addition and subtraction in terms of his pay and allotments. Expression, as the third R is called at the Reception Center, is mastered as soldiers seek to explain themselves in terms of their new surroundings, and is brought out by writing exercises, letters home, and by seeking to write about what they wear, and what part of the body it goes on. It is broader than ordinary writing.

Typical of the colored instructors is Sergeant James A. Huling, of Columbus, Ga., who has been in the army one year, and is at present 4th Bn. educational supervisor. He is a graduate of Georgia State College, Savannah, where he received an A.B. degree in English and did further work on a M.A. In his present position, he supervises work of 96 instructors in the 4th battalion, seeking constantly to raise the standard and quality of training prepared for uneducated members of his race.

HALF-DAY OUTDOORS

But the trainee's day does not begin and end in the classroom. Only half of each day is spent indoors. For the other four hours trainees are given the fundamentals of basic training, foot drill, dry rifle firing, calisthentics, and road marches. Colonel James has arranged this training program so that uneducated soldiers will leave not only with sufficient classroom learning, but also with enough field instruction to give him, self-confidence to meet them every day problems alone.

Twelve weeks is the maximum period alloted for this schooling, and 95 percent of the soldiers qualify. Many finish sooner for literacy is a matter of relativity, and some trainees learn and progress faster than others. Soldiers who can neither read nor write when they first enter have memorized the General Orders in the short space of two weeks. Great use of visual aids is made in this work.

Once men qualify according to army standards, they are transferred to the Receiving Battalion for assignment and shipment.

But not all men are shipped. From time to time, outstanding individuals are selected as members of the permanent cadre, which numbers about 1000, including a recently arrived detachment of colored WACs. The WAC detachment commanded by 2nd Lt. Lucile Mayo, handles details in the center's headquarters, message center, and records section, supplementing work of the male cadre. The latter is under the command of Captain Charles R Rougland, of Akron, O., and furnishes the personnel for the checking station, classification, quartermaster assignments, records, and medical sections, in addition to operating five messhalls, under the watchful eye of Captain John R Foster, Jr., mess officer.

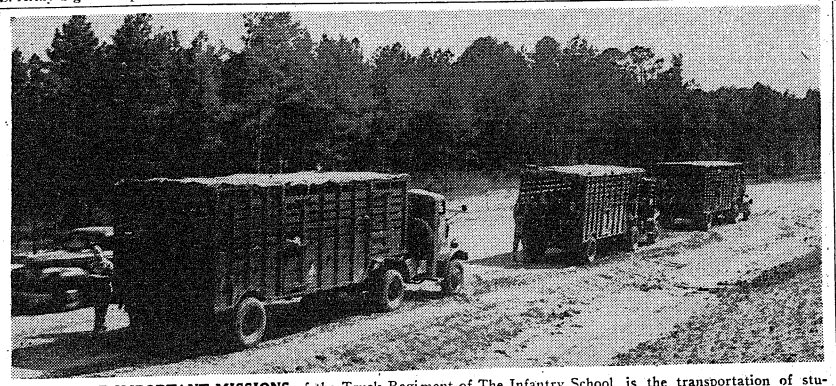
And the food at the center is one thing to which Colonel James justly points with pride. It is good. It is well prepared, and speedily served. Cases of illness with cold food at the end. Quality of the cuisine, is demonstrated by the fact that most men gain weight while at the center.

MESS MORALE FACTOR

While the mess is a big morale factor and source of great satisfaction to all the colored G.I.'s, there is an extensive morale program under the direction of Lt. Robert Reynolds, special service officer which includes nightly outdoor movies during the warmer months, an organized chorus which appears regularly on the air, a military band, two dance orchestras, a baseball team which won the colored southeastern conference championship during the past season, and a football team which at present writing boosts three victories and no defeats. Trainees do not have time to play on regular teams but enjoy watching and themselves participate in inter-company softball, volley ball, baseball, and tug-o-war. By playing together with other men, the new soldiers come to realize the value and necessity for teamwork, and therefore gain another point in their training.

Otherwise there are numerous dayrooms, with quiet games, and a 1000 book library for the literary minded.

Another side of the morale program is presented by the center's chaplains, 1st Lts. Isaac I. McDonald and Simmie P. Holland, who conduct regular religious services for men of all faiths. Many buildings in the area are used for this purpose on Sundays, including messhalls, recreation halls, and the theater. During summer months, open-air services are held for large groups. The chaplain serves to help new soldiers with advice and counsel, and to keep them from being weaned away from the church during the first bewildered hours after induction.



THE DISPENSARY

Safeguarding physical fitness of the new recruits in the Reception Center Dispensary staff, headed by Major Dennis L. Halliley, and aided by two assistants. As yet there has never been a complaint of a soldier, arriving at his destination physically unfit for duty, because of fault of the center's authorities.

Looking back for just a moment, all of this has evolved from a very modest start in the fall of 1941, when the center was authorized. At that time the center was under the command of Lt. Col. Frank Lockhead, with Colonel James, then major, as executive officer. Upon Col. Lockhead's departure, Lt. Col. Hubbard assumed command, but left shortly for a new assignment. Colonel James was then promoted to lieutenant - colonel and placed in charge of the center. Recently in acknowledgement of his fine work, he received the eagle of a full colonel.

During the first days, the center processed barely 100 men per day. A banner day was later reached when 528 were handled between opening and closing of doors. Now the induction station thinks nothing of processing 2500 men in one day.

Members of Colonel James staff, besides those previously mentioned include, Major William C. Tippins, executive officer; Capt. Arthur W. Frye, operations and training officer; Capt. Boyd J. Baggett, adjutant and Lt. Ruth P. Chelfay, assistant adjutant.

Truck Regiment Plays Vital Role in TIS Training Program

The Truck Regiment, an Infantry School unit, is one of Fort Benning's newer outfits—having been activated less than one year ago—but occupies a place of great importance in the daily functioning of this large army installation.

This organization was activated on December 18, 1942, by authority of the Replacement and School Command, Army Ground Forces, Birmingham, Ala., to fill a transportation need made acute by the transfor of another truck unit from the post. At the time of its activation, it was designated as the Provisional Truck Regiment and held that name until just recently when War Department orders decided that it be known by the name which it now uses.

Realizing the importance of its mission, higher authorities provided the regiment with a capable leader, a man well fitted for the job of Regimental Commander, Colonel Frank J. Vida. This officer brought to the newly forming organization a military background of honor and achievement gained in World War I, and the experience of later training gained in camps scattered from one end of the country to the other end. Prior to his assignment to his new duty, Colonel Vida was Chief of the Automotive Section of the Infantry School and, as such, was familiar with the very latest trends in motors as they pertain to the army.

Soon after, Lieutenant Colonel Edward G. Herlihy, another World War veteran, was ordered to join the regiment in the capacity of Executive Officer and, in this man, the organization gained an officer of experience enjoyed great and successful army career filled with varied and profitable experience.

TOP EFFICIENCY

Other orders provided the regiment with men destined to be commanding officers of the unit's four battalions and, today, these men. Lieutenant Colonels Russell H. Anderson, Joseph S. Phillips, Thomas M. Evans, and Ralph Cisler, have the responsibility of insuring the regiment efficient service from the first, third, second, and fourth battalions respectively.

Rounding out the Regimental Staff and Headquarters official personnel are Captains George S. Williamson and Ernest L. Godshalk, regimental Adjutant and Claims Officer, respectively, Lieutenant Everett Bell, Regimental Supply Officer, Lieutenant Floyd M. Fuss, Regimental Motor Officer, Lieutenant Henry A. Talbert, Special Service Officer, and Chief Warrant Officer George Goldsmith, the Regimental Personnel Officer.

The enlisted personnel represents men who, in a large measure, were handpicked for definite duties either because of excellent background or because of potential ability to serve their regiment in a creditable manner. The wisdom prompting their selection is easily apparent in the fine records made by these men in various phases of army activity as they work daily—vital links in the chain of progress being forged by the Truck Regiment. Numbering close to 1,900 soldiers, these men are commanded by an official staff of over 70 commissioned personnel with approximately half of this group being colored Quartermaster and Infantry officers who hold jobs as Regimental Supply Officer, Battalion Adjutants, Company Motor Officers as well as Mess and Supply Officers.

Having four battalions and such a large personnel, the Truck Regiment is, of necessity, scattered to the extent that no two battalions are in the same area and one battalion is 10 miles from the regimental headquarters. These battalions are so organized that each operates as a unit, practically independent of the others yet coordinated into one great big regiment. One unit, the Second Battalion, is quartered on and operates from Fort Benning proper, while the First, Third, and Fourth Battalions claim Harmony Church as home.

WELL-EQUIPPED PARKS

Each battalion maintains well-equipped motor parks capable of storing, servicing, and repairing hundreds of vehicles ranging from the quarter ton "jeep" to the giant tractor-trailer vans. These units maintain dispatch systems that daily are directing all types of transportation to every corner of the huge reservation fulfilling requirements for the Infantry School's many needs, and there are men in the organization who can boast of having driven, in their vehicles, some of the world's greatest and most famous personages—military as well as civilian. So numerous and varied are the Infantry School's demands on this unit for transportation that Truck Regiment drivers and vehicles may be seen on some undisclosed mission at any hour day or night along any road or trail within a radius of more than forty miles. As though proud of the trust and responsibility placed in them, these drivers maintain such a high degree of efficiency and "attention to duty" that the Regimental Commander has initiated a system whereby those drivers and mechanics who have fulfilled high qualifications are awarded pennants, appropriately inscribed, denoting their achievements. Motor parks keep the soldier ever mindful of his duty by having displayed in prominent places reminders of "accident free days" and "late dispatches." Opportunities for individual advancement are heightened by the frequency of details sent to various schools and, to date, well over 200 men have been sent to the Infantry School, scores have been sent to take courses of instruction at the School for Bakers and Cooks, while others have been students in advanced classes in Administration and Supply at Camp Lee, Virginia, while still others have been sent to various branch Officer Candidate Schools.

The efforts of these persons are recognized by the higher commanders within the regiment and many of the enlisted personnel receive well earned promotions, while all are certain of receiving frequent and generous periods of time in which they may return to their homes and families for short visits.

GO TO SCHOOL

The officers within the regiment are also afforded many opportunities for advancement and training. Recent figures show that thirty have been sent by the regiment to pursue courses in various army fields that will be of great benefit to them. Others have shown inclinations toward other branches of the service and have been transferred to Military Police Units, Air Corps groups (two of the colored officers are now at the world famed air base at Tuskegee, Alabama) and the Parachute School at Fort Benning. Probotions have been evident and over forty officers have changed the insignia of rank in the ten months since the regiment was activated.

In addition to the many opportunities offered by the regiment along the lines of military training, other instruction is available for those persons who have been deprived of normal educational advantages in civilian life and the regiment has organized a Literacy School that fills a vital need. The advantages offered through army courses of instruction are made known to the personnel and at present many of the men are studying from Self Help text-books. Orientation programs are carried on in the various units and the average man in the regiment has a new sense of his responsibility to his country in these times of world conflict.

While mindful of the soldier's need for motor and mental training, his physical needs are not neglected but are carefully attended by ever watchful superiors who try to insure that this soldier's food or that soldier's barracks is the best that the army, plus personal initiative, can provide.

Each company has well appointed dayrooms where the men may have access to a large variety of magazines and periodicals, enjoy writing facilities, and amuse themselves with many types of indoor games amidst pleasant surroundings. Entertainment features are made available to all personnel of the regiment and transportation is provided for any important activities given on the reservation. Various battalions stage programs and the use of GI Movies, augmented with other feature films, is quite common. Company dances are arranged and enjoyed by the personnel and the regiment lends financial support where necessary.

Many important groups get their start in the Truck Regiment. Just recently, final approval has been given for the organization of another officer's group on the post and, through the initiative and planning of a number of the Truck Regiment officers, the Collin's Road Officer's Mess is now beginning to function.

ORCHESTRA PLANNED

An orchestra is in the process of forming and many promising musicians are rehearsing in anticipation of their formally joining the Fort Benning musicians' ranks. The regiment boasts a chorus that has been compared favorably with professional groups while two quartets—one of the spiritual type and the other specializing in popular music—have brought additional attention to the regiment.

Athletics have not been neglected and there are very few persons who are not familiar with the two baseball teams, the "REDS" and "BLUES," who performed creditably in the Fort Benning Service Conference. At present time a football team is representing the regiment on the gridiron and has won its opening game over one of last year's outstanding conference teams. Basketball teams are already unpacking stored away equipment in anticipation of a championship season and prospective "stars" are reporting daily.

To sum it up briefly, the Truck Regiment, The Infantry School has made great strides forward in the ten months of its existence—starting from a small group of officers and a cadre of enlisted men and working, training, and growing day by day until it proudly stands alongside of other, more famous organizations, confident of its ability to maintain the high standard set by the regimental commander and necessary for the requirements of the Infantry School.

Thermos Family Has Good Luck All 'Bottled' Up

Lieutenant Thermos, Assistant Intelligence and Public Relations Officer of The Infantry School's 1st Student Training, hastily opened the War Department letter addressed to "First Lieutenant Nicholas J. Thermos." A few minutes after his promotion, Colonel Robert H. Lord, Commanding Officer, announced the lieutenant's advancement to regimental intelligence officer. He was almost as elated as on that day six years ago when the wire came informing his dad that he had won $30,000 on the Irish Sweeps.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Thermos, live at 1836 South 50th Avenue, Cicero, Ill., Chicago suburb. When Thermos senior learned that his horse would run in the 1937 Sweepstakes, a neighbor prevailed on him to sell a half share in his $50,000 ticket for $5,000. When the horse came in, their transaction left the family $30,000 to the good.

B & C School Trains Men to Work Under Fire

Fort Benning's Bakers and Cooks School, which furnishes bread for every organization on the post, trains Army cooks and bakers to produce food for their comrades regardless of whether their field kitchen is smashed by enemy shells, baking and cooking equipment riddled by machine gun fire, or fuel oil or kerosene exhausted for their ranges.

Every class at Fort Benning's B and C School is taught how to meet just such emergencies when they are charged with the task of seeing that the fighting men on all far-flung battle fronts are kept fed under any conditions.

Kitchen equipment may be smashed, and most of the utensils destroyed, but so long as the cook can find a discarded oil drum and a shovel he can produce bread and full meals. He even is taught to prepare a meal in a hole in the ground, somewhat on the line of the old Maine woodsman's beanhole.

When they go into the field, American bakers and cooks are provided with the best equipment of its kind in the world, but, if necessary, they can function under conditions that would make an Indian wonder what to do, Lt. Col. Grover M. Ford, commandant of the school and of all B. and C. Schools in the Fourth Service Command, asserts.

Cooks are taught how to make improvised ovens of clay and straw, hay or grass, and a little water. They are heated thoroughly by a fire which is removed and the meat can be cooked by the retained heat. Another type is dug out of a hillside, working on much the same principle, and it is advised where clay and straw is not easily obtainable.

TRENCH COOKING

But even if the hillside is not available, they can bake in a trench type over which is burned out thoroughly. Eighteen hours is recommended. Then the meals are placed inside and the trench is covered with any metal that can be salvaged. Coals are then placed on top of the oven to give an even heat.

Even if the yeast, without which palatable bread could hardly be made, were exhausted, the bakers are prepared to create the proper conditions for making a yeast culture of their own. They are trained to obtain virgin yeast from the air. They do this by making a mixture including water, mashed or boiled potatoes, flour, salt and sugar, and leaving it exposed to the air at a temperature of 80 degrees.

The Fort Benning Bakers and Cooks School is the parent school for all bakers and cooks school in the Fourth Service Command Its commandant, Colonel Ford, directs the work of these Service Command schools from his headquarters at Fort Benning, and visits each school every month. Prior to his call to active duty July 1, 1940, Colonel Ford was a professor of biochemistry at Emory University.

In addition to the parent school at Fort Benning, there also is Bakers and Cooks School Number 2, which is for colored soldiers. This school is under the immediate direction of Major Abraham Pfefer, assistant commandant of the school, who is assisted by Captain Louis Albert.

Aside from the two schools at Benning, there are at present six other Fourth Service Command bakers and cooks schools which are operated under direction of Colonel Ford. These are at Miami Beach, Camp Shelby, Miss.; Camp Forrest, Tenn.; Fort Bragg, N. C.; Maxwell Field and Camp Sibert, Ala.

Warrant Officer Daniel H. Siroty, who is stationed at the Benning parent school, is chief of the military personnel branch for all Fourth Service Command B. and C. schools.

Senior instructor at the Bakers and Cooks School here is Master Sergeant Henry B. Whitehorn, Jr., while Master Sgt. John W. Shaffer is chief baking instructor.

Courses are given for cooks and for bakers, and for officers who are trained as mess supervisors, for mess sergeants, and in dehydrated foods. Also, two day conferences for colonels and field grade officers in the Fourth Service Command often are held for discussions on the latest and most scientific methods of baking, cooking and mess supervision and management.

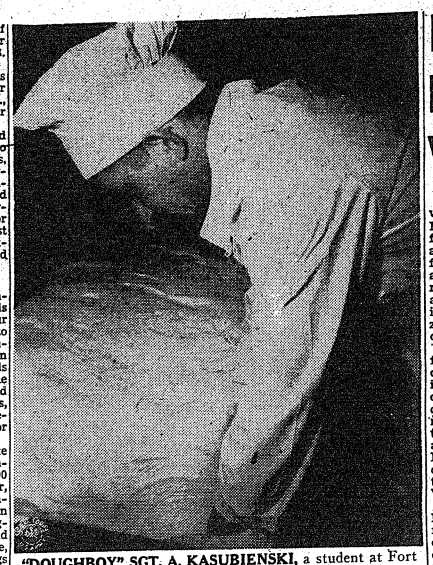
DEHYDRATED FOOD

The highly publicized and immensely valued dehydrated foods which are being used by our armies overseas are no mystery to the B. and C. schools here. Students who attend local courses in the cooking of dehydrated foods are taught to serve delectable meals, complete from soup and fruit juice cocktails to desserts, making their meals from ingredients composed of little shreds or powderlike substances.

The students learn how to take four pounds of dehydrated potatoes and prepare servings for 100 persons in the style they prefer, whether mashed, au gratin, Lyonnaised, scalloped or American fried. They can take a few nuggets of dehydrated apples and whip them up into a luscious pie, or a few ounces of beef and eggs and do them up like a chef in a fine hotel would prepare them in the natural state. Taste, color, flavor and orama of the foods are retained, for the most part, as in the original article.

These students learn that the substances they cook with originally were fresh foods from which a large percentage of water and inedible portions, like peels bones and seeds have been removed, and that such foods are harvested at the peak of their maturity, are carefully selected varieties, and are thoroughly cleaned and dried by scientifically controlled processes. They retain most of their original food value and vitamin content.

MIRACLE FOOD



But in addition to learning about the "miracle food" of dehydration, they also learn the art of baking to the fullest. They see the school in its vast garrison bakery bake all the bread used by the various organizations located on greater Fort Benning, including both the Sand Hill and the Harmony Church area, as well as the main Post and the Alabama Parachute area. This baking is done by personnel of the school and a handful of students. The bakery operates three shifts a day, on a full 24-hour a day basis, to provide all the bread for this vast Army post.

During the past four months, each of the two Benning B. and C. schools have twice won the monthly award for having the outstanding mess hall of all Fourth Service Command units at Benning. B. and C. School No. 2 won the award in July and August, while the parent school won it for September and October. The parent school is now flying the flag, which is given the winner each month, in front of its main building on Vibbert Avenue on the post.

Infantry Board Keeps Foot Soldiers Equipped With Newest Weapons

Located at Ft. Benning and working in close harmony with the Infantry School faculty is the Infantry Board. The board was created shortly after the end of the first World War, as the official agency charged with studying the requirements of the Infantry arm, and, advising the War Department in all matters relating to organization, technique and equipment of Infantry troops.

The Commandant of The Infantry School is ex officio President of The Infantry Board, and is therefore a position to insure close collaboration. Subject to this coordinating authority of the Commandant of The Infantry School, the actual direction of the Board's activities are in the hands of the Director of The Infantry Board, designated as such by Headquarters, Army Ground Forces, in Washington.

The Board is composed of senior Infantry officers specially selected for broad experience and knowledge of Infantry matters. These constitute the Board, proper. In addition, it also comprises a larger group of junior officers, known as the Test Section, each of whom is a specialist in some particular phase of Infantry activities or in a particular class of Infantry activities or in a particular class of Infantry equipment. These junior officers are primarily test officers who conduct physical tests of items of equipment under study by the Board, and, under the direction of The Infantry Board, develop and submit to the Board recommendations for changes in design or prepare new designs to fill Infantry needs.

The Infantry Board formerly functioned under the Chief of Infantry. Since the reorganization of the War Department in March, 1942, it has functioned under the Chief of the Requirements Section of Army Ground Forces, who, in turn, is directly under the Commanding General, Army Ground Forces, in Washington.

PERMANENT AGENCY

The Infantry Board is thus a permanent field agency of the War Department charged with informing and advising the Commanding General, Army Ground Forces, regarding the adequacy of Infantry equipment and the need for new equipment. Its studies and recommendations have been, and still are, of the ost decisive importance in enabling the U. S. Army to match its equipment with that of foreign armies. Its success or lack of it in the performance of these duties is measured by the difference between the equipment carried by the Doughboy of 1917 and 1918 and that available to his prototype of 1943. Except in the rarest of emergencies, no article of equipment for the Infantry soldier is adopted except after exhaustive study and test by The Infantry Board, and many of the articles now standard equipment owe their original design to that Board.

The rosters of The Infantry Board since its organization in 1921 contain a large number of names that have since acquired nation-wide and even world-wide fame. A few examples are: General George C. Marshall, Lieutenant General Courtney H. Hodges, Lieutenant General Omar Bradley, Major General O. W. Griswold, Major General Alexander M. Patch, and Major General Paul B. Malone (now retired.)

FARM INCOME

Gross farm income, which has increased steadily since 1938, is estimated to be 22.7 billion dollars for 1943, the largest on record. Production expenses have also risen since 1938, but not as much relatively as gross far income. Net income has increased sharply during the past five years.

In a war we try to get the better of the other fellow before he gets the best of us. In peace our problem will be to get the better of ourselves before the other fellow brings out the worst.

Columbus Churches Greet Soldiers of Ft. Benning

DR. J. CALVIN REID, Pastor, First Presbyterian Church

I am happy to extend greetings to the men in the service at Fort Benning in the name of the churches of Columbus. I am very grateful for this privilege, and I am sure I express the sentiments of all the churches in our city when I say that we desire in every way possible to extend a cordial welcome to you men in the service, and to do everything we can to make your stay in our community both pleasant and profitable.

Of course, programs and schedules differ in the various churches and some are better equipped to provide special parties and other activities for the soldiers, but all, I am sure, are trying to do their part in the present crisis.

Several of the downtown churches have social rooms or service centers provided especially for the soldiers, and a number conduct regular parties and other social activities to which the soldiers are invited as honor guests. Refreshments are served from time to time in connection with the parties, and special dinners are provided frequently. In addition, many soldiers are invited into Columbus homes for Sunday dinner.

CONTRIBUTE MUCH

Every church, of which I have any knowledge, is very much inspired by the response of the soldiers to these special activities and also to our regular worship services. Since so many of our own members are in the service and away from home, it means much to us to have their places taken by the men in uniform from Benning; and it is my feeling that these men attending in such large numbers contribute as much to us in the way of inspiration as we to them. Quite a number of them are singing in our Columbus choirs. Also, from time to time, some of the special choirs which have been organized on the post come in and render programs in our various churches. Thus, in our effort to serve our soldier friends, we find that we in turn are being richly blessed.

NO COMPETITION

A special word of appreciation is due the fine Corps of Chaplains who are serving on the post. From time to time, these men attend the meetings of our Ministerial Alliance, and we try to assure them there, as well as in our personal contacts with them, that it is our desire in no way to compete with them in the magnificent work which they are doing on the post, but rather to cooperate to the fullest of our ability. It is never our purpose to draw men to our churches in preference to the chapel services on the post but simply to provide the proper facilities and a warm welcome for those who happen to be in Columbus on week-ends and Sundays.

I feel sure the ministers of the city would like for me to say that we are grateful for the opportunity to serve our friends in the armed forces, not only in and through the activities of our churches, but also, if we can at any time be of personal help to any soldier, we will count it a privilege to do so, if he will make himself and his need known to us.

We ministers are convinced that there is a very close connection between morality and morale, between courage and consecration, between prayer or performance; so, in holding aloft the light of Truth, and in challenging our hearers from week to week to do their duty and to live according to the revealed will of God, we trust we are making a very definite contribution ourselves to the noble purposes and lofty ideals for which Fort Benning stands.

Our forefathers both wrote and spoke well. But when they wrote about a "firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence" they meant reliance on the gifts of God, not on the gift of gab.

The new world will consist not so much of doing new things as of a new spirit in all the things we do.

We Wish
FORT BENNING
Congratulations
On Their 25th ANNIVERSARY

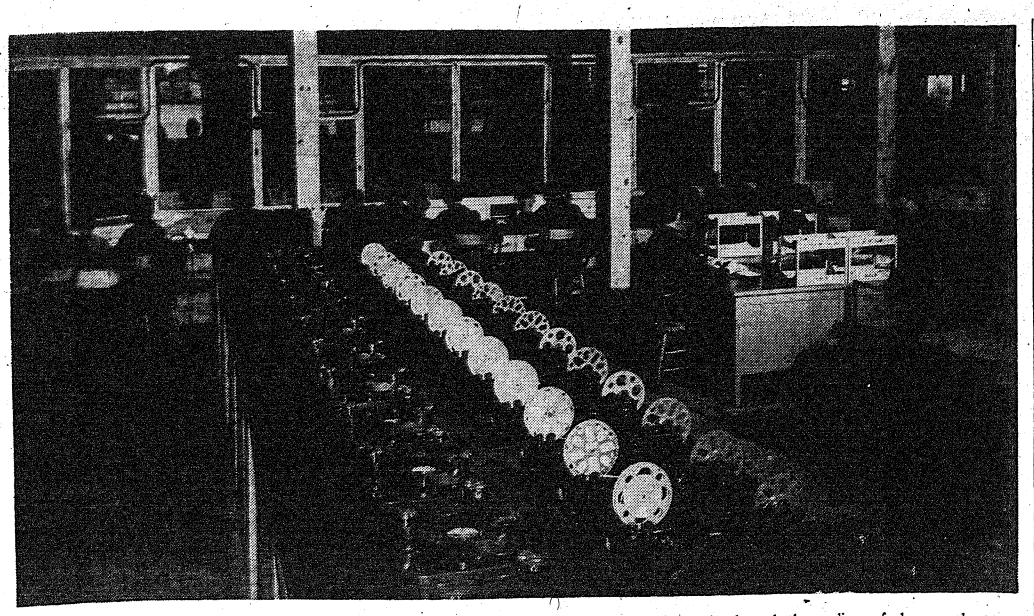
Yes, the men of Fort Benning are the cream of American manhood, and they have been for twenty-five years.



This war is demanding more of us than the last war. It is the business of every loving Columbus citizen to co-operate with Ft. Benning and its personnel. We are set on making the armistice to come more glorious, more secure, than the armistice of 1918. It must be the inauguration of a new and better, truly lasting peace.

We at Wells are thankful for our association with Benning and are happy to serve them in any way possible.

Spirits Boast Over 300 Years Of Distinguished Service to Country

Regimental Motto 'Liberty Or Death' Is Epitome of National Life-Blood

In 1628, due to encroachment of the Colonists and the consequent hostility of the Indians, a militia was organized in the Colony of Virginia. This marked the birth of the 176th Infantry Regiment, now a member of what was prior to Nov. 1 the School Troops Brigade of The Infantry School. However it was not until 1652 that the official title "regiment" then new in England, was applied to the Virginia Militia.

Fort Benning is rapidly becoming accustomed to the insignia of the 176th Infantry, formerly the First Virginia, with its motto, "Liberty or Death" standing out in bold relief. On that insignia is written the history of which the regiment is so proud. The blue background represents the infantry; the arrow at the top is a reminder of the French and Indian wars; the cross of red is representative of the Revolution and the War of 1812; the gray crossed bars are symbolic of service in the Confederacy; and the fleur-de-lis for service in France in World War I.

On April 17, 1862, when the First Virginia Regiment marched through Richmond, the weariness known only to infantrymen was evidently felt by many of the foot-weary soldiers. One wrote these pregnant words: "I suppose if it was intended to reinforce Savannah, Mobile or New Orleans with our division we would be compelled to foot it all the way. "Intermittently, for 254 years prior to 1862, members of the First Virginia had uttered the same thought. For 81 years since that time, this same regiment has plodded onward, through mud and on parade, in battle and on maneuvers—a regiment with a glorious heritage.

When, in 1675, part of the Iriquois Nation moved south into Virginia, Nathaniel Bacon led the Virginia regiment and completely vanquished the Indians. Dissension immediately arose with the royal governor, Berkeley. Bacon was declared a rebel. Supported by the colony, he led the militia against Jamestown and thus struck for liberty in the New World, anticipating the Revolution by a century.

OVEE MOUNTAINS

In 1754, the English settlements had crossed the mountains and were pushing into the Ohio Valley where contact with the French was made. War between the French and English in Europe extended to America. The House of Burgesses ordered the Virginia militia mobilized. George Washington was appointed lieutenant colonel. It was the next year that the British general, Braddock, approaching Fort Duquesne, was decisively defeated and the First Virginia Regiment, under Washington, who had assumed command, covered his retreat. The regiment remained in service for 20 years, manning the forts on the western frontier.

In 1775, with tension rising the Colonies and the Mother Country, Lord Dunsmore dissolved the House of Burgesses in Virginia. Lexington and Concord had been followed by the action of the First Continental Congress and the choice of George Washington as Commander of the forces.

The House of Burgesses moved to Richmond and, in a session in which Washington sat as a member, Patrick Henry electrified the colonies with his speech of "Liberty or Death." In October, 1775, Patrick Henry was appointed colonel of the 1st Virginia Regiment, and afterward became Governor of Virginia.

The regiment was in the battle of Great Bridge which succeeded in driving Lord Dunmore out of Virginia. One of the officers of the regiment in this engagement was John Marshall, later Chief Justice of the United States.

CROSE DELAWARE

The regiment moved north and took part in the battles of Long Island, Harlem Heights, and White Plains. On Christmas night, 1776, when Washington made his historic crossing of the Delaware and captured Trenton, the 1st Virginia was with him. It participated in the battles of Brandywine, Monmouth and Princeton, being cited for gallantry on all three occasions. During the severe winter at Valley Forge they served as demonstration troops.

The regiment moved into the Southern Theater and from 1779 until 1781, participated in the battles of Savannah, Charleston, Guilford, Hobkirks, Hill 96 and Eutaw Springs. A part of the regiment was present at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

After the Revolution the entire army was reduced to 80 men, commanded by a captain. However, under the Militia Act of 1792, John Marshall was appointed Colonel of the 19th Virginia Militia Regiment, one of the units organized as successors to the Old First.

In the War of 1812, the regiment participated in the Battle of Craney Island, a minor engagement that protected Norfolk. This was one of the few American victories of the war. During the Mexican War the 1st Virginia was stationed at Monterey and Saltillo. During much of its time in Mexico it was commanded by Major Jubal A. Early, later Lieutenant General, Confederate States Army.

In the War Between the States, the 1st Virginia was in active service from the secession of Virginia to Appomattox. From the First Battle of Manassas to Appomattox it served in more than thirty battles. On the afternoon of July 3, 1863, at Gettysburg, the 1st Virginia was in the right assault brigade in what has come down in history as "Pickett's Charge."

After the War Between the States, the First was again organized. In the War with Spain, the regiment was broken up and assigned to other units of the Virginia Militia. The Richmond Light Infantry Blues, long a component of the regiment, served in the Army of Occupation in Cuba. Reorganization as a regiment followed this war. In 1916 and 1917 the 1st Virginia served on the Mexican border.

WORLD WAR I

With the declaration of war against Germany in 1917, the 1st, 2nd and 4th Virginia Regiments were consolidated into the 116th Infantry of the 29th Division. This unit trained at Camp McClellan, Ala., and sailed for France on June 15, 1918. Again, with honor, the regiment served first in Alsace and then moved into the Meuse-Argonne offensive where it participated for twenty consecutive days in the attack.

After the passage of the National Defense Act of 1920, and the consequent reorganization of the National Guard, the units in Eastern Virginia were formed into the 1st Infantry, Virginia National Guard, of which the Richmond Light Infantry Blues constituted the First Battalion. In the fall of 1940, the regiment was alerted for induction into Federal Service and was designated as the 176th Infantry in significance of its history.

On February 3, 1941, the regiment was inducted into Federal Service and moved to Fort George G. Meade, Md., where it was brought up to strength. From July until December the regiment was in the field, first at A. P. Hill Military Reservation, Va., and then in North Carolina on the First Army Maneuvers. The day of the attack on Pearl Harbor found the regiment northward bound for Fort Meade.

GUARDS CAPITOL

On December 15 the regiment was ordered to move immediately to Washington for the security of the National's Capitol. This selection was made because of the outstanding record made during the Carolina maneuvers. For 10 months the regiment guarded vital installations as well as furnishing the Honor Guard for the White House, the Capitol, the Combined Chiefs of Staff, and serving as (history of the regiment) demonstration troops for the War Department. Many commendations were given the regiment for this duty.

In February 1943, the regiment was transferred to A. P. Hill Military Reservation, alerted for overseas, and passed with high commendation, final battle tests. On April 10th the regiment entrained at Milford, Virginia (where, in 1864 it had covered Lee's right flank following the Wilderness and Spotsylvania) for Fort Benning.

Now assigned to the School Troops Brigade and quartered in the "Cuartel" the 176th is endeavoring to carry on in the footsteps of those who, over a span of three centuries, by devotion to duty, loyalty, and courage, have given the regiment its enviable record. One hundred and sixty-five years ago the regiment had furnished Demonstration Troops for Baron von Steuben at Volley Forge. History repeats.

VITAL POST UNIT

During its stay at Fort Benning, the regiment has, so far, participated in several events, and has contributed to the well being of the personnel stationed here. On Sunday, May 9, in the Main Theatre, the famed Richmond Blues, the First Battalion staged a special service commemorating the founding of their organization.

On May 14 the graduates of the N.C.O. school took charge of the Regimental Review; an N.C.O. club was also started, the first of its kind since their induction into federal service. Members of the regiment participated in a gruelling 120 miles hike from Atlanta, Ga., to Fort Benning in an effort to determine how fast a body of troops could cover a given distance and still be prepared to put up a good fight.

The regiment held a field day on July 3, with all the companies participating. Spirit-men were chosen to demonstrate the "Bazooka" before the press, news reels and many visitors. Members of the 176th were the honor guard for General Henri Honore Giraud, commander of the French North African armed forces and for Maj. Gen. Eurico Gaspar Dutra, Brazilian Minister of War during their visit to the post. The winning of the Post baseball championship by the Spirit-men topped the regimental athletic program.

Post P.-T. A. Is Quite Active

The Fort Benning Parent-Teachers' Association has the ever changing nature of an army post with parents coming for a short period bringing new faces and thoughts to further its progress.

This year's projects are equipping a supervised lunchoom which is attractively furnished in a red and green color scheme, also supervised rest rooms and their equipment. In the past year the Parent-Teachers' Association has furnished each room with recreation equipment, namely: puzzles, books, globes, maps and song books. Every year they sponsor a Hallowe'en party for all Fort Benning school children. Their capable president for 1943.44 is Mrs. C. G. Stillinger, whose untiring efforts to serve the school, the parents, and the teachers are bringing forth better cooperation for all concerned.

One of the demonstrations that appears frequently on the itinerary of distinguished visitors when they visit The Infantry School is the hand-to-hand fighting stint done by members of Company I, Academic Regiment which is regularly scheduled for classes in the BAR, bayonet and grenade group.

The demonstration, the non-coms selected for the job, exhibit a fast, thorough, and scientific technique of rough and tumble combat in which they successfully disarm opponents armed with bayonets or knives.

They do their work in a manner which makes the methods appear simple yet one mistake in timing could work to the sad disadvantage of either the armed or unarmed opponent.

Tech. Sgt. William Tillman of Bay Saint Louis, Mo., and Staff Sgt. Fred Poulnott of Athens, Ga. (pictured above as Tillman disarms knife man), are two of the best demonstrators. Both are former members of the 29th Infantry. Tillman has been in the Army for seven years and Poulnott for twelve.

Another pair that is equally as good consists of Staff Sgt. Angus Shelfer and Staff Sgt. Willie Wright, both from Jacksonville, Fla. They're former 124th men and they've been doing this demonstration for a couple of years.

This pair is unusual because they've grown up together. They live near each other in Jacksonville, went to Kirby Smith, Jr. and Andrew Jackson Sr. high schools together, and were transferred from the 124th together. (TIS Photo.)

Busy Soldiers Still Take Time to Read

One cold day this fall, Librarian Frances Chandler found a paratrooper, absorbed in a magazine, huddled on the steps of Library No. 1 on the main post.

"Why in the world don't you come inside and read in comfort?" she asked.

That seemed a strange habit for a young man, so Miss Chandler asked why.

"I'm playing football and I've had to quit smoking, so I substituted chewing tobacco," he explained. "My mother would bawl me out if she knew about the tobacco—but I guess she wouldn't object to the magazine."

Mothers or anyone else inclined to worry about how soldiers spend their spare time would be satisfied with what they would see in the six recreational libraries on the post. Not all the readers go to the extreme of reading outdoors on a cold day, but they are busy people, many of them faced with heavy training schedules, who give their few hours of free time to reading.

They come at their lunch hours or when they have an hour or two free during the day. The libraries are usually packed in the evenings and on Sundays, and several hundred books a day are checked out for reading in barracks or day rooms.

The newest fiction is popular, but non-fiction of various types gets the most calls in the majority of the libraries. The men like books on current events, reports by foreign correspondents from the war fronts, and technical books on radio, electricity, aviation, etc. The latter are used both in connection with their own work or training and to enable them to qualify for further courses in these subjects.

HOW-TO-GET-AHEAD

Equally popular are books on philosophy and psychology. Calls in this field range from the most abstract philosophy to the how-to-get-ahead books.

Books on cartooning, hobbies, palmistry and similar amusements get a good play.

One of the features that attracts considerable interest at Library No. 1 is the correspondence course service of the Armed Force Institute. The library has catalogs and blanks for the courses, and Miss Chandler and her assistants help the soldiers in filling them out and in arranging their courses. The institute enables soldiers to complete either high school or college educations, and many of them have used the opportunity to finish their schooling or to study particular subjects which interest them or would be helpful in their army jobs.

The librarians take on a lot of odd jobs for soldiers that have little or no connection with books. They are asked all kinds of questions and get requests for odd bits of information that sometimes tax their ingenuity.

One soldier with a problem came in one day to inquire whether the 21st or 22nd of October was on Monday two years ago. He remembered that he had been married on a Monday, but he couldn't recall whether the date was the 21st or 22nd.

With the aid of the World Almanac, the librarian was able to give him the correct date, so his anniversary gift to his wife would arrive on time.

TRACER BUREAU

GIs leave messages for their friends, and sometimes the desk of a library takes on the characteristics of a Missing Persons Bureau. Wives or sweethearts come in carrying pictures of the soldiers they are looking for, and ask the librarians' help in finding them.

Soldiers leave packages at the desk when they are going into town or to the movies, and during the summer months, they leave their wallets there for safekeeping while they go swimming.

A lot of the boys just want to talk for a while, and a librarian with a sympathetic air is sure to see pictures of the wives or sweethearts back home and to hear all about the families and home towns.

Many soldiers ask for help in writing letters, particularly love letters. The librarians help them with their writing or suggest books on the subject.

A special feature of Library No. 5, for colored troops in the Harmony Church area, is its Bookmobile, the touring library which takes books to the men each week. The Bookmobile distributes about 300 books a week, visiting each unit at a stated time. The vehicle is stocked with an assortment of fiction and non-fiction, and the men choose what they wish. Requests made one week are carried back the following week, if the books are available.

Recreational libraries on the post are:

Library No. 1 on the Main Post, Miss Frances Chandler, librarian; Library No. 2 at Sand Hill, Miss Mary Clark; Library No. 3 in Harmony Church, Miss Laura Cates; Library No. 4 in the Reception Center, Mrs. Elizabeth Brown Harris; No. 5, Harmony Church, Mrs. Hazel Reed, and Library No. 7 in the Alabama area, Miss Frances Dozier.

Each is located in or adjacent to the Service Clubs of the corresponding numbers.

1st STR Was Nucleus of TIS War-Time Officer Training Plant

Regiment Supplied All Cadres For STB After Pearl Harbor

New Year's Day, 1941, dawned on a pioneer Infantry School training Detachment that would seem a far cry from the present bustling First Student Training Regiment. That chill January sun almost three years ago came up on a nation desperately arming to defend her place in a world at war.

Expansion was already in the air. A few days later the growing Infantry School Detachments were merged into the Student Training Units under command of Colonel Sevier R. Tupper, later Student Training Brigade commander. These training units speedily became the nucleus of a vast program training officers to lead the armies gathering under the impetus of national emergency.

Some fifteen companies—there are 29 in the 1st S. T. R. today—comprised the units. Classes were conducted in the Basic and Advanced Officers' Courses, and Officers and Enlisted Communication and Motor Courses.

An experimental platoon of paratroopers training in the Autumn of 1940 had grown into the jump-training course of the units. From this beginning in turn stemmed the present Parachute School. And in July, 1941, the first Officer Candidate Training Battalion was activated within the Unit's framework.

December 7 greatly accelerated the expansion of The Infantry School's program. When a second Student Training Regiment was formed out of the ranks of the Student Training Units, the original outfit received its present designation—the 1st Student Training Regiment. In March, 1942, the Regiment was again called upon to furnish an experienced cadre to found the 3rd Student Training Regiment.

New combat Infantry divisions were being activated monthly. To meet the special command problems that these small-scale, complete armies presented, a Division Officers Course was added to the 1st Regiment. Cohesive leadership of many of the divisions winning battles today in Italy and the Pacific sprang from training in these classes.

PLAYED PROUD ROLE

Said Colonel Gibson when he left the organization he helped lead into greatness: "The 1st Student Training Regiment is proud of the role it has played in the program of The Infantry School. Proud and at the same time conscious that its responsibilities are great ones. We have a unique role to play: There is nothing of greater importance in the present situation than the training and schooling of the officers and technicians of the expanding Army that will bring tomorrow's victory.

"The officers of the 1st S. T. R. are grateful for the opportunity to serve in this direction. It is a matter of great pride to us that we are directly contributing to the development of the leadership of our Army.

"The present staff of the 1st S. T. R. shall continue to make every effort in the future to guarantee that the officers and men who go through our organization are equipped and ready to meet the responsibilities that befall them." These words are as true today as when Colonel Gibson uttered them.

In April of this year, he received another assignment and was succeeded by Colonel Robert Sharp, at one time his executive officer. Colonel Sharp himself is a product of the officer candidate program of World War I.

FRENCH ARRIVE

That month the first class of French officer-students began their training at the Regiment. They became forerunners of a veritable "Foreign Legion" of United Nations fighters from all corners of the world.

Army officers of Bolivian, Brazilian, Chinese, French, Haitian, Hawaiian, Japanese - American, Philippine and Puerto Rican extraction flocked to the 1st S. T. R. to attend The Infantry School's unequalled courses. The students learned the latest, deadliest word of exterminating Axis-ites—and the best instructional methods to put this training across to the troops they lead.

June brought 92 newly graduated West Pointers sto the 1st Regiment as students in the Officers Basic Course of The Infantry School. The new 2nd lieutenants, having completed four years training at the Military Academy, chose Infantry as the branch in which to best serve their country in wartime. Here they put finishing touches to their knowledge of Infantry warfare.

In June, when the new ASTP took Colonel Sharp, Colonel John S. Roosma stepped up from head of the 3rd Battalion to command the entire regiment. He had served at Fort Benning right after graduating from West Point in 1926. Later Col. Roosma sailed to Hawaii to command the 2nd Battalion of the 21st Infantry on Oahu. There on December 7 when the Japs attacked Pearl Harbor, he and his command were rushed to the base immediately and saw action there.

DISCIPLINE STRESSED

Colonel Roosma continued the 1st S. T. R.'s emphasis on superb training of the thousands of enlisted and officer students whose future careers are shaped here. Added stress was laid on the discipline and efficiency that win battles and win wars.

Nor did the Colonel neglect those less tangible factors that create a pleasanter atmosphere spurring each individual to contribute his utmost to the war effort. He went to work with an entirely practical conception of the word "morale."

Hundreds of yards of trim cement walks sprang up to link barracks, lecture halls, mess halls, and offices. Attractive lawns were planted to hold down dust clouds that once blinded the regiment and to keep rains from washing away needed top-soil.

Launching a program to improve mess-halls throughout the 1st S. T. R., Colonel Roosma placed particular emphasis on wholesome food, temptingly prepared and served in attractive surroundings. And so efficiently was the food-conservation phase managed that the Regiment earned hearty praise from nutrition experts on its record low per-capita waste.

On October 27 Col. Robert H. Lord, at one time executive officer of the 1st STR, later CO of the 3rd STR, the STB, and acting TIS inspector, assumed command of the 1st STR. Col. Lord is a regular Army officer with 26 years service. Col. Roosma, at his own request, was assigned to an Advanced class for further study.

By constant attention to such small but important details, the 1st Student Training Regiment is striding ahead to better and better performance of its mission—training the officers who lead our Army to victory on all fighting fronts.

Numerous USO Shows Visit Post In 1943

The 1943 season at Fort Benning was crammed with entertainment thanks to the efforts of the Office of the Chief of Special Service Branch, Lt. Colonel Charles C. Finnegan.

Renowned personalities in the world of art, music, theatre and sports have made appearances at frequent intervals. Some of the outstanding were Brenda Joyce, motion picture actress; Alan Jones, singing star of stage, screen and radio; Jascha Hiefetz, world foremost violinist and Earl Hines and his famous all-colored band.

Soldier shows have been staged or aided in production problems. "Swing, Benning, Swing," featuring the Reception Center Band and Chorus was produced through arrangements of the Post Special Service Office and the Reception Center. This musical show played to over 7,000 soldiers in Doughboy Stadium and Lawson Field. The ASTP, "Priorities" staged by the ASTP Special Service Office was another G. I. presentation to tread the boards on the big portable stage in Doughboy Stadium.

USO Shows were a major part of the seasons 'live' attractions. The first six camp show units to appear on the Benning circuit were real big-time musical featuring name bands, novelty acts and most refreshing of all, a chorus of shapely dancing girls in colorful and usually scant costumes. In addition to these big time units which were known as Red Circuit productions, there were White Circuit troupes consisting of approximately eight to ten players which were booked to play the Alabama Area on the average of one every month.

LARGE UNITS CURTAILED

Due to transportation difficulties and housing conditions, these large productions were doomed and USO Camp Shows Inc., wisely condensed the two units (Red and White) and formed what is known as the "Victory Circuit." Shows on this circuit are composed of ten to fourteen persons. This includes a company manager, a musical director, who conducts whatever military band is assigned to tour with the show during its stay at Benning, a master of ceremonies and the remainder are performers.

These smaller shows while stereotyped in style of presentation are nevertheless excellent entertainment for only the best and most outstanding variety artists were retained when the Red and White units were combined to form the Victory Circuit. The 300th Infantry Band has accepted the assignment to troop along with Camp Shows at all the Benning presentations and have been commended both by the audiences and the performers who laud their ability in aiding and abetting the entire performance.

It has been estimated that these USO Camp Shows play to over 19,000 people during the outdoor season and about 13,000 when it is necessary to play in the War Department Theaters. The troupes usually open their engagement at the Main Theatre or Doughboy Stadium (depending on the season) for two days and then proceed to Sand Hill, Harmony Church and the Alabama Areas.

3rd STR Choir Plans Concert November 11

A pre-Thanksgiving concert featuring members from Bach to "Boogie" will be given by the choir of the Third Student Training Regiment Thursday evening, November 11, at 8:30 o'clock in the 3rd STR Service Battalion Recreational Hall, in the Harmony Church area of Fort Benning.

The choir of 20 voices, which is directed by Pfc. Joseph D. Cole, is composed entirely of enlisted men from the Service Battalion of the 3rd STR. Sponsored by Chaplain Levi L. Stanmore, battalion chaplain, the choir will include "Hospodi-Pomiloi," one of the most difficult songs in all choir literature, on the program, singing it in Russian.

The concert, to which all personnel on the post are invited, will include such numbers as The Ministrel Boy, Jesus Joy of Man's Desiring, The Prayer of Thanksgiving, Hark the Vesper Hymn is Stealing, Ah! Love But a Day, Flanders Fields, When I Grow Too Old to Dream, Coming In On a Wing and A Prayer, The Ranger's Song, Tom Cats, The Old Woman in the Shoe, Heav'n Heav'n, Give Away Jordan, City Called Heaven, His Name So Sweet, Were You There, and finally The Minstrel Boy, theme song of the choir!

Sgt. William Boradley will be soloist in "Flanders Fields," while Pfc. William Jones will sing "Roofs" and a baritone soloist, Pvt. Alfred Jones will be featured in "The Old Woman in the Shoe," while Pvt. Charley Eaton and Pvt. Shade Marshburn will take the parts of tom cats in the feature number of the same name. Pfc. Cole will be piano accompanist.

The choir, which was organized last April, has appeared on several radio broadcasts, and concerts, and has performed many times in Columbus and nearby communities. The choir will go to Atlanta for three concerts on November 14, 15 and 16, when it will appear before audiences at Spellman, Clark and Morehouse colleges.

McRobert Brothers Cited In War News

Deeds of two former Fort Benning paratroopers, Captain Neal Lane McRoberts and his brother, 1st Lt. William Norman McRoberts, have been recorded in recent news dispatches from combat areas in Italy and the South Pacific.

Captain McRoberts participated in savage fighting on October 6 when American doughboys took German-held Arnone on the south bank of the Volturno river, it was recently revealed by Fifth Army headquarters in Italy.

Jumping ahead of an armored unit, American paratroops filtered through the town, clearing out German machine gun nests, until the German counterattack. Then they fell back to join the main forces at the railroad station. One of the last Americans to fall back from the most advanced post at the town square was Captain McRoberts, who, according to the report, stayed behind to pick up and carry out a wounded comrade.

His brother, William, also a paratrooper, is now serving in the South Pacific and is reported to have jumped into Lae in the first battle of New Guinea.

Captain McRoberts saw his first action in July when he parachuted into Sicily. It was there he received his promotion to captain.

Sportscasting

BY SGT. CARL NEU

Fort Benning's 25th year undoubtedly has been the greatest sports year in history. We doubt if there's an Army camp anywhere that could pause and look back on such an eventful year on the fields of friendly strife. The sports pages of the Bayonet have thoroughly chronicled the events of this past twelve months, and just so you, too, could enjoy a trip down memory lane, we present herewith a topical review of the "year in sports" starting just a year ago this date.

NOVEMBER—The 117th Breakers and 124th Gators are deadlocked for first place in the Fort Benning grid conference as the month opens. . . 55th Engineer (10th Armored Division) entry in loop drawn from a cadre of 120 men and bill themselves as the "Mighty 55th" . . . An overflow crowd of 15,000 watches the powerful Pensacola Naval team thump Benning's all-stars, 35-7. We use a different conference team intact in each period . . . All-American Joe Routt from Texas A & M. (now a Saber star) returns to the Infantry School after playing with Western Army squad . . . Maj. Gen. Paul W. Newgarden (commanding 10th Armored) along with Lt. E. J. Stahr captures officer's doubles crown in tennis . . . Gators defeat Breakers, 20-7, to step into first place in grid race . . . Thousands of Benning fans watch an underdog Auburn eleven stop Sinkwich and Georgia in "upset of year" at Memorial Stadium in city . . . The Gators roll over 55th Engineers, 55-20, to clinch 1942 grid crown.

DECEMBER—124th avenges early loss to Auburn "B" team, Tampa topples 29th Blue Devils, 117th mows down Brookley Field Fliers . . . . 3rd Armored Dragons sweep to 12-0 win over 11th Armored Tankers to capture 10th Armored crown . . . 2nd STR Commandos, in one and only game, trip 3rd STR Panthers to take post colored grid title . . . Roy Cestary, Mr. Big of Benning football, closes out 1942 campaign by leading Gators to rousing 21-7 win over 29th in final game of season . . . 124th squad is presented post trophy by General Fulton in impressive pre-game ceremony . . . 11th Armored captures Tiger ring crown . . . 124th and 117th land three positions each on Bayonet all-conference selections . . . All Benning gridders are honored at dinner given by F. B. A. A. with Jack Meagher, Auburn coach, as guest speaker . . . Lefty Francis, Academic Regiment baseball and basketball star, is named as "athlete of year" by Bayonet . . . George Pace, former world bantam champ, leads 1st STR boxers to victory over 3rd STR Panthers.

JANUARY—Jim Todd (Georgia), and Sam Sharp and Jack McKewen (Alabama), gridiron bowl heroes on New Year's Day, arrive at post by plane within two days to pursue O. C. course at Infantry School . . . Ricks to Pilot Profs In TIS Court Circuit

Former All-American Guard Led 2nd STR To 1942 Post Laurels

By SGT. WALTER MILLER

This year's edition of the basketball Profs will be coached by the 1941 All-America guard who (while starring with the second STR Leaders last winter) was the main reason the Academics were crushed in the title playoffs.

Lieutenant Troy A. Ricks, assigned to the Academic Regiment of the Infantry School since he was commissioned in April, will pick his team from the stars of the company tournament now in its third week.

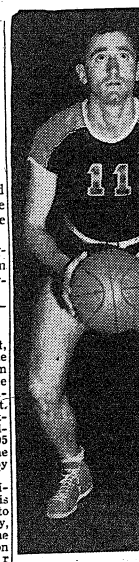
Although many of last season's vets are certain to appear in this year's Prof line-up, there are several positions open to newcomers who have been outstanding in the Monday, Tuesday and Thursday night tiffs at the post gymnasium. Ricks, himself playing with Headquarters in the preseason tournament, believes that the blend of the old and new will put a first-rate quintet on the court this year.

SHANNON WITH EAGLES

"We'll have to be first-rate," the soft-spoken, twenty-four old all-American says. "There'll be plenty of opposition from the Third STR—they've got players like Ott and Bland. And Shannon, last year's Prof star, is coaching the Sixth Regiment Eagles—we can expect trouble from them too."

Ricks developed his hoop talent under the tutelage of his brother John, captained his high school team, made the All-Mississippi aggregation, and immediately got offers from some of the South's top colleges. Thinking however, that he needed more preparation for the big-time, he attended Sunflower College, making All-State on the junior college level. The offers increased in number and attractiveness, but deciding to follow in his brother's footsteps, Ricks ignored Alabama, Texas A. and M. and L. S. U. and went to Delta-State Teachers' College in Cleveland, Mississippi.

NEW RECORD



Operating from the guard slot, Ricks captained the Delta-State five which emerged second from the 32 teams competing in the 1941 National Associated Intercollegiate Basketball tournament. The Booneville, Mississippi cotton farmer's boy set a new guard-scoring record by hooping 105 points in the five games of the finals which Delta-State lost by only one point.

With an All-American certificate and a B. S. degree in his pocket, Ricks went in 1942 to study engineering at Kansas City, where he played in his spare time with a corporation team that won the Missouri Valley amateur crown. During the same season Ricks performed with the National Intercollegiate All-Stars at the Golden Jubilee of Basketball in Chicago.

SAVES LEADERS

Entering the army in July 1942, Ricks began playing at Benning last winter just in time to help save the Second STR. The Leaders had lost every game in the first half of the Infantry School competition. With the addition of OCs Ricks and Jackson, the Leaders suddenly earned their name, reversed the record by going through the second half undefeated. In the playoff series they crushed the Profs, first half champs, to cop the post title.

With Ricks now on their side, and stars like Prasse, Zientara, Sullivan, Ossi, and others warming up in the company tournament, the Profs are looking forward to some fast and furious court play this winter. And one thing that's on the mind of every Prof fan, player and Coach Ricks is the Prof jinx, which must be broken—the jinx of winning the first half and losing the second and the playoffs.

TROY RICKS

NEW PILOT of the Academic Profs in The Infantry School Basketball League will be Lt. Troy A. Ricks, sparkplug of last year's 2nd Student Training Regiment Leaders who has been transferred to the Academic Regiment. He succeeds Capt. Frank Shannon, who will pilot the 6th Training Regiment. Title At Stake As Great Tilt Looms

20,000 Fans Expected To Jam Way Into Stadium For Classic Tussle

BY SGT. FORREST R. KYLE

The 1943 football championship of the Infantry School conference will be at stake Sunday afternoon when the 176th Spirits and the 300th Sabers clash before what undoubtedly will be the greatest crowd ever to jam-pack historic Doughboy Stadium.

The two highly-rated, star-studded elevens will get down to business at 2 p. m., and if it's humanly possible to squeeze 20,000 spectators into the stadium, there will be 20,000 spectators watching the payoff grid classic of Fort Benning's season.

The stage was set for Sunday's tussle on Sunday, Oct. 24, when a slightly underdog Spirit eleven whacked the Sabers, 14-0. Previously, the Sabers had thumped the 124th Gators, 19-7, and the Spirits had suffered a one-point setback at the hands of the Gators, 13-12.

So when the 176th prevailed over the Sabers three weeks ago, it fixed everything up for Sunday's battle to be the game of the season, both teams having won one and lost one conference game.

176TH FAVORED

The Spirits, who for obvious reasons will be the favorite Sunday, will have in mind making it two in a row over the Sabers, thus proving that what you can do once you can do again.

On the other hand, the Sabers will be following a revenge motif, intent on punishing the Spirits for that late-October whipping.

Since that first tiff, both teams have played just one game against the same team, and you can ferret out absolutely no inside dope by comparing the performances of the two elevens.

PICK ON FLIERS

Two weeks ago this Sunday the Sabers flashed to a 47-7 triumph over the Daniel Field Fliers of Augusta, Ga. Last Saturday night at Augusta, the Spirits took picks on the Fliers and emerged with a 48-7 decision. So it would appear the two teams will go to it Sunday on a strictly even-stephan basis.

Once again the Spirits will open their bag of "T" formation tricks, replete with quick-opening thrusts, laterals and passes. The master-magician of the Spirit attack is Bob Waterfield, quarterback, who mastered the intricacies of the "T" at U.C.L.A. so well he steered the Uclans into the Rose Bowl.

Waterfield, a past-master at passing and punting as well as caring for the multiple ball-handling assignments of any quarterback working under the center, also can leg it with the ball. As a matter of fact, the Sabers know all about this, since Waterfield presented his heels to the 300th on as pretty a naked reverse as you'll ever see to produce an 18-yard touchdown jaunt in the first meeting.

NOTABLE CAST

The Spirit quarterback is surrounded by a notable cast, no less a beast of which is George Poschner of Georgia fame, who turned in an All-America end performance against the Sabers last time out. Up and down the forward wall Poschner has such sturdy mates as Walter Ruark of Georgia, Frank Heidel of Missouri, Johnny Cagle of Clemson and Bob McBride of Notre Dame.

These linemen in particular wrecked the Saber attack in October with their viscious charging and it was Heidel who blocked a punt on which Harry Hales pounced in the end zone for a touchdown.

The Sabers will have to keep an eye on tricky Sully Harris of L. S. U., linebucking Cullen Rogers of Texas A. & M., and Pat Ronzone of Indiana. Ronzone polished up his ball-toting tricks last Saturday night by scurrying to three touchdowns against the Daniel Field Fliers.

SABERS REVISED

The Sabers will set forth Sunday with a slightly revised lineup. Gone from the team are Al Solari, U. C. L. A. tailback, and Bill Meek, blocking back. Solari has been transferred and Meek is inactive because of an injury.

In the meantime, however, the Sabers have regained the services of Noah (Moon) Mullins of Kentucky and replaced Meek with John Kulikowski, once of Georgetown's undefeated eleven.

Mullins frisked back into ac-

First Come, First Served For Seats At Sunday Game

It'll be first come, first served in the matter of seats for the 300th Infantry-176th Spirits football battle for the Infantry School Conference championship Sunday.

The 300th rooters will be seated on the south side of Doughboy Stadium and the 176th on the north side, which houses the press box.

Bands of both regiments will present new marching formations between the halves.

Sabers Rely On More Versatile Attack Sunday

New Aerial Offense Clicked In Victory Over Daniel Field

By SGT JAMES TUITE

That bubbling overconfidence which exhilirated the 176th Spirits after their upset of the 300th Sabers two weeks ago faded to a weak fizzle when The Infantry School Big Blue regained its championship form in crushing the Daniel Field Fliers on Sunday.

NEW DATE

The Spirits will only have to chew their fingernails until November 14th instead of Nov. 21, for the game has been moved up one week from the original date scheduled. The contest, from present indications will be the most bitterly fought on the post this year, for the opposing clubs are building up to a keen pitch for their meeting.

Those who saw the Sabers perform against the Daniel Field eleven on Sunday realized that the Big Blue was missing a cylinder in their battle with the Spirits for since then they have revised their strategy and lineup until the club has everything a winning combine needs.

DIBLASI SHIFTED

For one thing, Capt. Friedlund has developed a lethal passing attack which paralyzed the Fliers and which should keep the Spirit backs on their toes most of the time. Sam DiBlasi swapped his job as blocking back for a ball handling job, and is one of the main cogs in the aerial offensive.

The cut and dried strategy of Ermal Allen hitting the line for three plays and then punting has been discarded, and replaced by a well juggled bag of tricks which might be run off with or without the shift from the T formation.

The lineup has likewise been changed, and strengthened, with the return of "Moon" Mullins and Mary Plus several new players recently acquired by the regiment. One new addition, in particular was outstanding in last Sunday's contest.

MYSTERY MAN

He was Roger McCommons, the Mystery Player, who blasted his way through the Daniel Field line for play after play while 18,000 fans wondered who he was. His name was not in the lineup, he was wearing someone else's jersey, and no one had seen him before.

McCommons, a Georgia boy from Greensboro hails from Presbyterian College, Clinton, S. C., and is expected to be one of the

ASTP Sports Program Designed For Conditioning, High Morale

Appeal To Competitive Spirit— Reached Through Athletic Games

Unquestionably, the youth of our nation needs more physical education. Competitive sports seem to offer the most effective answer to building up and maintaining the high physical standards of ASTP trainees of Basic Training Center at Fort Benning. The "one-two" stuff that goes to make up the greater part of calisthenics is undoubtedly required to a certain extent, yet, obviously it doesn't contain the appeal of competitive sports.

It is a known fact that competitive spirit runs high in the breast of every American lad, and is the arterial system which makes America pulsating and alive. Participation in a game gives a fellow a chance to show off his own skill and to give the other guy a trimming, as well as the opportunity to relax from the gruelling daily Army routine which is so essential in the training of a basic. In recognition of these facts and in an effort to cater to the likes and dislikes of the individual, in the general, imperative effort of creating a he-man's Army, the Special Service Officers of ASTP have constantly set a pattern of switching from one sport to another.

FULL PROGRAM

Baseball, football, basketball, softball, volleyball, tennis, ping pong, badminton and boxing—equipment for all was obtained and distributed to the Regimental Special Service Officers' who in turn set up each unit from the battalion down to the company with sufficient paraphernalia for every trainee to engage in a full sports program. Under the supervision of the Battalion Special Service Officers, group games were arranged as part of the daily schedule.

In addition to these daily all out competitive sports activities, outlets were given to the specially skilled sports enthusiasts by the formation and participation in tournament and league play. Baseball, softball, tennis, golf, volleyball and touch-football, all came in for a good share of inter and intra company, battalion and regimental competition. Keen rivalries developed, bringing into the limelight the best athletes in the ASTP. Extra-curricular activities were arranged and practically every company participated in some kind of game on a competitive basis.

ENTER LEAGUE

During this period of the ASTP program, teams representing the 4th Training Regiment and the 6th Training Regiment were entered in the Post and The Infantry School Baseball League. Considering the crowded basic training schedule, the showing of both teams were quite creditable. The 4th Training Regiment GOLDBRICKS playing in the Post League closed the season in fourth place, while the vaunted 6th Training Regiment EAGLES playing in the Infantry School League, ended the season play in fifth place, after earning the enviable record of having beaten every team in the league at least once.

ASTP was also represented in the Russ Pool all-Post watermeet, and did right well, considering the fact that there was little time to point for the affair. The aquatic stars of the 5th Training Regiment clinched second place, while the Dolphins of the 4th Training Regiment tied for the third spot.

CAGE SEASON

Basketball, the "Queen of the Indoor Sports," opened its fall season for ASTP with battalion quintets mixing under the cages at the Sports Arena at Harmony Church. The Battalion League play will continue until the early part of December, at which time regimental teams will take the floor in the Infantry School Basketball League scheduled to open December 15. All signs seem to point to a great season.

USO Basketball Will Get Under Way On Monday

The 9th Street USO Basketball League will open their season next Monday, November 15, when the first four teams of the two ten-team leagues will take the floor of the mammoth gym at the USO Club in the city.

Schedules are now being made up and all team captains will be notified, and a mimeographed copy of the schedule presented to the teams' captains as well as to their Athletic Office.

Rules and regulations for the league were adopted at a recent meeting of the captains and everything is in readiness for not only some keen basketball playing but some real entertainment for the spectator, as the roster of practically every team includes some well-known college cage stars.

The following organizations at this Post will be represented in the Leagues, which will be known as the American and National Leagues:

Division Headquarters, 7th Armored Division.
23rd A. I. Battalion, Headquarters, 7th Armored Division.
147th Armored Signal Company.
"Ramblers" of Company D, Academic Regiment.
"Black Cats" of Company A, 300th Infantry.
"T. P. S. Motor Pool" of Headquarters and Service Company, The Parachute School.
Company F, 300th Infantry.
Headquarters Company, 3rd Student Training Regiment.
"E. T. E." of Headquarters 2nd Battalion, 1st. P. T. R.
"Sure Shots" of Company D, 300th Infantry.
53rd General Hospital, 131st Infantry.
Combat Command "B" Headquarters Company.
Company B, 709 Tank Battalion.

3d STR Has Ace Gridsters

Bracketed alphabetically in the Seventh Company, Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School Officer Candidates Anthony S. Cemore and Paul E. Carroll can meet on another common ground, both having been outstanding collegiate football players who were chosen on numerous all-star teams.

Cemore played guard on the Creighton University team from 1936 to 1940 and while he was with that eleven he was named on the Missouri Valley Conference team for two years. He also was chosen as a member of the American-Italian All-Star Trophy for being the outstanding player on that team.

In 1941 Cemore played first-string guard with the Philadelphia Eagles in the American Professional League. This was the team owned by the millionaire sportsman, Alexis Thompson, who often had as his guests for the games Lane Turner and Gene Tierney.

ARMY ALL-STAR

In 1942 Cemore was a member of the Army All-Star team and played in games against the Washington Redskins, the Chicago Cardinals, and other professional clubs. It was during the All-Star—Cardinal game that he scored his only points, a field goal from the 33 yard line which put the game on ice for the All-Stars. Cemore names Stendlee and Kimbrough as the greatest backs he competed against and Bulldog Turner of the Bears, as the greatest linesman he ever opposed. His choice for the best all-around player is Don Hutson of the Green Bay Packers.

Carroll, on the other hand, confined all his ball playing to his college days at Louisiana State University. There he played the tackle position and was star linesman for three years, from 1934-36. In 1936 Carroll was chosen on the all-Louisiana, All-Southern and All-Southeastern teams.

Wesley Roth Is Grid Winner

7th Armored PFC. Has Clean Slate

First-place honors in the Bayonet's weekly score-guessing contest for last Thursday went to Pfc. Wesley Roth, a member of Battery B, 440th Armored Field Artillery Battalion, a unit of the 7th Armored Division.

Another private first class, Charles E. Moore, of the 5th Troop Carrier Squadron at Lawson Field captured second place, while Sgt. Harold J. Schmidt of the Academic Regiment's "G" Company took third.

All three prize winners picked the correct winner in all fourteen games—and they were the only ones to score a clean skeep. Roth was adjudged the winner because his predicted scores were more like the actual returns than the others.

Because of the huge anniversary issue this week, and the consequent strain on advertising facilities there will be no grid contest, but the feature will be resumed in next Thursday's paper.

Gebert Tutors Spirit Cagers In First Work

Wyoming's Weir And UCLA's Lee Are On Hand For 176th

While the Spirit football team is still rolling along at top speed, the 176th Infantry's basketballers are going through light practice sessions, preparing for the Infantry School Basketball League campaign. Lt. Kirk Gebert, who captained the Washington State hoopsters in 1942, has been named to coach the hoopsters.

WEIR AND LEE

Twenty-two players answered the first call and several outstanding men are on hand for the campaign. Heading the list is Jim Weir, a six-foot-five center from Wyoming University and Marv Lee, who stands six-three. Lee was an excellent performer for UCLA during the past three seasons.

Another candidate for the five is Sparky Sucharak, late of the championship Spirit baseball team. Suchara, who hails from Detroit, has played with club teams prior to entering the service. Joe Novocal, hurler on Company G's softball titlists, is also looking good in pre-season warm-ups.

TWO VETERANS

Two men who performed on last year's quintet, and who will be wearing the Red and Gray again, are Steve Blanchard and Buck Konopasek; while Leo Mogus, Slick Rogers and Sully Harris will join the courtmen following the football season. Others now working out under Lt Gebert's tutelage are Donald, Grey, Mallory, McCarel, Waller, Tulley, Olson, Stout, Knight, Pealzer, Michaels, Heath, Aldrice, Proyer, Ready, and Poland.

Sports Program Has Vital Role In Saber Activities

BY SGT. FORREST R. KYLE

Even though the 300th Infantry, demonstration regiment of The Infantry School, has yet to celebrate its first birthday, already its athletic program has played an important role in the day by day life of the regiment.

In addition to regimental baseball, golf, boxing and football teams, all types of athletic competition within the regiment has provided recreation for practically every soldier.

At the present time interest centers on the Sabers' football team, which, through October, had won four games and been defeated twice. And already Lt. Frank A. Hebenstreit is whipping a basketball team into shape to represent the 300th in The Infantry School basketball league.

The gridders are anxiously awaiting their second contest with the 176th Spirits. Beaten 14-0 in the first clash, the Sabers are pointing for the tussle Sunday afternoon, Nov. 14, when The Infantry School conference title will be at stake. Both the Spirits and the Sabers have won one and lost one game in league competition.

Saber victories have been over Draper Prison, 65-0; 124th Infantry Gators, 19-7, and Daniel Field of Augusta, Ga., twice, 35-6 and 47-7.

Georgia Tech smacked down the Sabers, 27-0, the weekend before the Spirits prevailed over the eleven coached by Captain Bob Friedlund and assisted by Captain Ermal Allen and Captain Joe Routt.

ALLEN, ROUTT STAND OUT

Allen and Routt have been two of the standouts so far this season. Routt, a former All-American from Texas A. & M., has been playing All-America football all season at his right guard position. Allen's running, passing and punting has been outstanding all season. He's a former star halfback from Kentucky.

The 300th's first venture of an athletic nature was pitting a hastily trained boxing team against a veteran 29th Infantry squad in the post gymnasium early last spring. The Sabers won only one bout.

Lt. Roger Reeves took over the coaching assignment last summer and began training a squad of top-notch amateurs which, in two matches, broke even. The Sabers defeated the 176th before a large crowd at Doughboy Stadium but dropped a close decision to an all-star aggregation at Camp Rucker.

The team still is in training and will be ready for any indoor shows scheduled this winter.

BASEBALL SLUMP

The Saber's baseball team didn't win any championships but a lengthy winning streak was one of the highlights of the first half of The Infantry School league. A slump near the end of the first half of the race ruined their chances of qualifying for the playoffs.

The nine never got started in the second half and a tail end of the season victory over the Acaremic Profs was the only bright spot. Lefty Francis, who once twirled for the Profs, beat his old teammates after flunking twice.

The Sabers' golf team was consistent, if nothing else, losing all of meagre number matches. Pfc. No. 1 golfer, Buckley, was not to blame, however. Buckley, former champion of the Illinois Intercollegiate conference, won every one of his individual matches and consistently clung to par figures over the Fort Benning course.

TOUCH FOOTBALL

Within the regiment athletic competition has been worked in wherever possible. When the regiment was assembled in one area early this year, a softball league was formed. At the present time a lively touch football loop is in progress and a basketball league soon will be started.

Strictly on the catch-as-catch-can side is volleyball activity. Courts scattered throughout the regimental area are popular spots whenever soldiers have the time for sports activity. Every day there is a "combat" volleyball game between two motor park teams where the competition often reaches a white heat.

And then there's a smattering of tennis, horseshoes and badminton.

All in all, the soldiers of the 300th have had ample opportunity to participate in regimental athletics as well as watch Saber teams make their mark in post competition.

With the recent changes, the Sabers have a multiple attack. The outstanding yard marker is Allen, but the presence of Mullins, Di Blasi, Ike Peel, Simcox and other Saber backs will take the opponents attention from him, and allow greater latitude in his ball handling.

NEW PLAYS

This will also be accomplished with the new reverses, and other plays adopted by the Sabers. A few of them were displayed against the Fliers on Sunday, but as the score piled up, Capt. Friedlund threw the blanket over his innovations and has given the Spirits something to think about.

The advanced date for the game will have little important effect on the teams except to give both clubs one weeks time in which to perfect their attacks and work out new plays. The Sabers expect the Spirits to change their plays, and possibly their system for the game, but instilled with a new spirit and determined to win, feel confident that they will take the next contest.

Former Montana Gridmen Are In Same O. C. Class

Clawson Heads Group Of Ex-Grizzlies In 7th Co., 3rd STR

Seven western huskies, all versatile athletes, are doing a first-rate propaganda job for the University of Montana in the Seventh Company, Third Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School, where they are officer candidates. All but one devoted most of their athletic efforts to the gridiron.

Big Gene Clawson heads the lineup, having been the third man in the history of the University of Montana to garner nine letters in his four college years. Most widely known for his ability to toss the discus, he participated in national track and field meets two years in a row and his record throw was 156 feet.

VARSITY TACKLE

Clawson put in three years of varsity football at the tackle position and also was the Grizzliers' starting basketball center for the same period of years.

OTHER GRIDDERS

Other Montanans in the company who received three letters for their work on the gridiron are Roy Storm and Bill Robertson who were pillars of granite in the guard positions and Karl Fiske, who starred in the fullback spot.

23rd Armored Five Wins Overtime Tilt

Three pre-season basketball matches held the spotlight in the Seventh Armored division athletic program this week.

The 23rd Armored Infantry battalion nosed out Headquarters company of Combat Command "B" 32-30 in a contest that filled two extra periods. Dotson paced the victors with 10 points, while Di Angelo held up the losing side with an equal number of tallies.

In a free-scoring contest at Murphy hall the 563rd Tank Destroyer battalion trounced the 434th Field Artillery battalion by a 54-44 count. The first quarter found both teams deadlocked at 14 all. The 434th crept ahead at the half and was leading by four points, but the tankers roared back in the third quarter and scored 16 points to cinch the contest.

O'Hara, Livabich and Williams contributed 24, 14, and 10 points, respectively, to the winning cause for the Tank Destroyers.

Dinicola and Sipe led the Artillerymen with 14 and 10 markers to their credit.

At Molony hall the 87th "Recon" and the 738th Tank battalion matched strides in one of the tightest games ever played here by the 7th. The tankmen stormed the troopers to the tune of 30-28. This game was undecided, though, until the last few minutes of play. Even then the 738th sneaked in a basket with seconds to go, to clinch the game in its favor.

These games marked a warm-up contest for the regular twin league (C. C. "A" and C. C. "B") schedule, which makes a season bow Monday evening.

Spirit Soccermen Defeat Athens Pre-Flight Squad

Frankie Schultz Tallies Winning Coal In Nip-and-Tuck Athens Tilt

Coming from behind late in the final period, The Infantry School's 176th Infantry soccer team opened its season by defeating the U. S. Navy Pre-Flight School at Athens, Ga., on Sunday afternoon. This score was 3 to 2.

The Navy booters were off to an early start as they tallied in the first minute of play with Cadet King denting the nets on a close-in shot. The hosts, with the wind behind them, continually threatened the Army eleven but fine defensive play by fullback Frankie Schultz and Steve Gimak turned the Pre-Flighters back.

SCORE ON FOUL

Midway in the first half, the Army eleven received a break as a foul within the penalty area was called on a Navy player. Gimak, 176th fullback, made the free kick good for the tally to knot the count.

In the second half, the Athens club once again went out in front with Cadet Anderson booting the sphere through the uprights. The hosts held this lead until late in the game when the 176th attack began to roll. On a play down the right side, Limy Hallaway shot a long pass to Art Leckie, who hit the nets from about 15 yards out with 12 minutes to play remaining.

With the score tied at 2 each, the Benning eleven put the game on ice with another tally as the game drew to a close. Harry Fenstermacher crossed a pass to Schultz, who was playing on the line and the husky Spirit athlete counted the final tally.

The Pre-Flighters attempted to score twice in the last four minutes but were repulsed by the 176th backfield. Later in November, the same two teams will meet at Benning in a return game.

Joe Antinozzi At 36 Has Devoted Past 30 Years To His Profession

There is hardly an angle to the game of golf which has escaped Staff Sgt. Joseph Antinozzi of Headquarters Company, Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School, during the close to 30 years he has been associated with the game. To say that a man has put in three decades in any profession or buiness would automatically spot him as getting along in years. But in Joe's case, his career in golf started when he was six years old.

At that age Joe, naturally enough, was a caddy. But when he was 14, he left school to take a job making golf clubs, and at the age of 18 he went to the Winged Foot Golf Club in New York's exclusive Westchester County. When the Army called him in 1941, Joe was instructor at the club, collaborating with Craig Wood, National Open champion of that year and Winged Foot pro.

Joe was doing well with the game before he went to work for Uncle Sam. As he tells it: "The Winged Foot Golf Club is a 36-hole affair with two championship courses. It's usually the first stop made by the internationalists when they congregate for championship play."

BUSY INSTRUCTING

Although Joe has played with and against such links personages as Sam Snead, his associate, Wood, and numerous others, he has never formally entered any big competitive golf event. Instruction took up virtually every hour of his day at Winged Foot, and during the winter months, instead of taking off for Florida as most pros do, Joe had an indoor class going at the New York Athletic Club.

A serious-minded teacher who wanted to see his pupils become good at the game, Joe never hesitated to make what appeared to him a worthwhile investment in his profession.

"A month before the Army called me," he said, "I spent more than $300 for movie equipment so I could show my pupils how they appeared to others when they were doing the wrong thing. I hit on the idea one day when I attempted to correct a pupil's wide swing and he indignantly denied that he was swinging too wide. He wouldn't take my word for it even though he was paying me for the lessons —he wanted proof."

PLAYS FINE GAME

Joe plays a fine game of golf—he shot a 71 on Fort Benning's course soon after coming in the Army, but he has never been interested in championship laurels for himself. He is concentrating on making his kid brother, 14-year-old Larry, a future champion.

"I started Larry playing golf when he was four years old," said Joe. "I made him a special set of clubs, a new and larger set every couple of years. That kid now can drive 250 yards and plays consistently between 80 and 85. He's won every caddies' tournament he has ever entered."

CADDIED WITH GENE

The golf game has brought Joe into contact with many interesting personalities. When he started his caddying career at Apawamis Country Club near his home town, Rye, N. Y., Joe lugged bags with Gene Sarazen, who is his senior by four years. He has played with all the topnotchers in the game, and has given lesson to Fred Waring and Horace Heidt, the band leaders, and to Les Stoefen, the tennis star.

Joe has played but little golf since coming into the Army, but he has not lost interest in the game. He has continued his membership in the PGA, and if anyone wants a few hints on how to improve his play, Joe will gladly help out.

All of Joe's Army career has been spent in Fort Benning. He got his basic training with the 29th Infantry when that regiment was quartered on the Main Post, and later went with the Second Student Training Regiment. He was transferred to 3rd STR several weeks ago.

tion against Daniel Field two weeks ago and the Fliers were somewhat at a loss on how to hold on to his weaving hips. Teamed with Ermal Allen, Mullins greatly strengthens the Saber running attack.

ALLEN'S AERIALS

The aerial tactics of the Sabers no doubt will be closely observed by the Spirits, in view of the fact this mode of advance was used so successfully against the Fliers. Allen's tossing to Sam DiBlasi, the Sabers' leading point-producer, Bute Simmons and Mullins, was definitely on the beam.

As in all games previously, it will be Allen who will carry the brunt of the Saber attack. The ex-Kentucky star is an eceptionally clever runner, passes and punts above the average, and is a comforting safety man on defense.

The Sabers can also boast an above-the-average line paced by All-America Joe Routt from Texas A. & M. Routt has been outstanding all season and he has had fine support from such as Jim Robinson of Baylor, Lloyd Arms of Oklahoma A. & M., and Bill Smithwick of Nevada. In Bute Simmons, the Sabers have one of the best pass-snatchers in the business.

Soldiers purchase more than $21,000,000 in war bonds each month.

West Point Athlete Takes TIS Course

"Amphibious athlete" could well describe Lieut. Hubert E. Tansey, who came to the Infantry school from the soccer courts and drill fields of West Point. A member of the 11th Company of the 1st Student Training Regiment, he recently graduated from the Officers' Basic Course with several other Military Academy classmates who starred in sport.

Tansey, who's from Washington, D. C., won letters in soccer and swimming in 1941, '42 and '43. Even West Point's fiercest rival recognized his aquatic accomplishments by awarding him the Navy Star for swimming in 1942.

Gridiron Guesswork

BY SGT. CARL NEU

And so another grid week goes by with an upset here and there, but with our "system" still clicking fairly well. Of fifteen selections last Saturday, we missed only on two games—the Penn-Navy affair and San Diego's upset victory over Southern Cal. And frankly, we must admit our biggest reason for picking Penn over Navy was sentimental, rather than practical. You see, we happen to be a Quaker rooter from way back. So anyway, it was 13 out of 15, which will do the season-al average no harm. So here goes for another week's prognostications, with the first-named team our selection.

GEORGIA VS. V. M. I.—Bulldogs often bite as well as bark!

NAVY VS. COLUMBIA—Poor Lou Little!

YALE VS. PRINCETON—Odell of the Elis should win also!

MISSOURI VS. OKLAHOMA—Tigers will get Sooner meat whatever that is.

NOTRE DAME VS. NORTHWESTERN—How you pick anyone else, but the Wildcats may give the Irish their toughest test.

TEXAS AGGIES VS. RICE—An easy one.

TEXAS VS. T. C. U.—A hot tussle but we like the Longhorns.

Reception Center Faces Rockets In Stadium Tilt

Fort Benning's bowl-bound Tiger gridmen of the Reception Center will be in action under the Doughboy Stadium arclights tonight when they take on the Infantry School's Truck Regiment Rockets in a return engagement.

The Service Conference tussle will get under way at 8 p. m. and will provide an opportunity for the rampageous Tigers to clinch Benning honors for the year. The R. C. machine rolled over the Rockets, 32-0, in a previous setto and have also thumped the 3rd STR Panthers, the other Infantry School entry in the all-colored circuit.

GET FEELERS

With two "feelers" from post-season bowl committees already in the hands of their coach, Capt. Charles R. Houghland, the Tigers will be out to strut their stuff tonight before the home crowd.

Houghland, a former Notre Dame grid luminary, has already heard from the sponsors of the famed Vulcan Bowl in Birmingham, and the three-year-old Flower Bowl classic, which is played annually in Jacksonville, Fla. Indications are that the Tigers will accept one or the other date for New Year's Day, probably going to the Vulcan Bowl if they are actually invited later on.

TOP COLLEGIANS

The star-studded Reception Center combine has rolled over a pair of the south's strong collegiate elevens in addition to its service foes. In their season opener the Tigers trounced Clark College in Atlanta by a 26-6 count, and a couple of weeks back they invaded Columbus to defeat the famed Florida A. and M. Rattlers, 21-7.

Besides tonight's clash, the Tigers have two other scheduled frays. Next week-end, they trek to St. Augustine, Fla., to oppose the Florida Normal Lions, and on the 28th they are carded for a return tilt with the Panthers in Doughboy Stadium.

Plans are also underway for a post-season game early in December against an all-star collegiate aggregation, either in Atlanta or Columbus.

ROCKETS BETTER

Houghland's red-clad warriors are expecting stiffer opposition from the Rockets tonight than they met the first time. In Joe Dismond, the Truckmen have a powerful line-plunger, while Manny Costa is one of the best punters at the post.

The Tigers, however, are counting on their manpower to rack up another victory. Using a two-team system, the Reception Center has managed always to have fresh operatives on the gridiron all the time, and they have simply worn-down most of their opponents.

The Tigers will probably open tonight with their regular backfield which lists the two former All-Americans, Leo Harrison and Macon Williams at the quarterback and fullback slots.

Academics Top 7th Armored In Table Tennis

Summers, Murphy Deal Out Defeat To Post Champ

By CPL. J. C. WOODALL

The Academic Regiment standard-bearers—Sgts. Leonard Summers and Jim Murphy of Hqs Co.—swept through the 7th Armored table-tennis team Friday night at the 7th Armored Division Recreation Room. Murphy and Summers trounced the post champ, Pfc. Wilner Rhine, Service Co., 31st Tank Bn., though the Benning crown was not officially at stake. The Pfc. had deemed it unwise to risk the Benning crown that Service Club Number One had awarded him.

The meet had been provoked by the Mirror which claimed that Sgt. Summers was the champ and that the Service Club had not invited their champ to the tournament which Pfc. Rhine had won. Rhine challenged Sgt. Summers for play.

In the opening match, Sgt. Murphy gave a grim warning of things to pass when he disposed of Pfc. Rhine 12-21, 21-16, 21-17. After being ousttroked in the first set, Murphy threw the green "go" signal on, to completely take apart the 7th Armored champ in the next two sets to the consternation of the onlooking Tankers. The victory surprised practically everyone, excepting Sgt. Summers who had warned your correspondent before the match that "Murphy will probably beat Rhine."

In the next encounter, Sgt. Summers took the measure of Lt. Paul Ragla, 40th Tank Bn., 21-12, 20-22, 21-15. The sarge blazed through the first set and had a 20-15 lead in the second, only to lose. Summers had been awarded the second set 21-15 by the referee but Summers gallantly refused to take the point and set, saying the Tanker's ball had hit the table-edge on the 20-15 pint. In the final set, Summers got down to business and annihilated the lieutenant 21-15.

In the doubles, Pfc. Rhine and Lt. Ragla beat the Academic pair 21-19, 17-21, 21-13. Ragla's forehand and Rhine's backhand were functioning beautifully in the final set.

In the next setto, Lt. Ragla took Sgt. Murphy "over the hill," 21-15, 21-17 in two closely contested sets.

In the grand finale, with victory and defeat looming for the team, Sgt. Summers lambasted Pfc. Rhine in straight sets, 21-11, 21-15, 21-15 to prove what the Mirror says concerning is so. To the satisfaction of everyone he completely demonstrated marked superiority.

Time and time again, Summers would go four or five yards back from the table to retrieve Rhine's blasts. Summers would only wait for the proper time and merely explode the ball with a tremendous sweep. Anytime the Academic needed a point on service, he would vary the delivery with startling results.

Academic Regiment Traces Its History Back to Presidio, Monterey

The Academic Regiment, a unique outfit of non-com experts and assistant teachers, performs duties pertaining to the smooth functioning of The Infantry School. It has grown to a full-strength regiment from its humble beginning in 1907 in the School of Musketry, at the Presidio of Monterey in California. Under various detachment designations, the outfit gathered numbers as it moved from California to Fort Sill, Oklahoma, to Columbus, Georgia, and finally, in 1918, to Fort Benning.

For 20 years our academic-military organization was known as the Infantry School Detachment. Two years ago, when the name Infantry School Service Command was introduced, the old I. S. D. was named the Academic Battalion. Seven companies composed the outfit, which on June 1st, 1942, was redesignated a regiment.

At present the Academic Regiment consists of Headquarters Company and Companies A, B, C, D, G, and H stationed in the quadrangles on the Main Post; Companies E, F, and I, stationed in Harmony Church; the WAC Detachment of The Infantry School (attached for administration and rations), Section One of which is quartered in Harmony Church with Section Two on the Main Post; and the Special Service Detachment (colored), stationed at the Infantry School Stables.

During the last year, G, H, and I companies were activated. The original G company was inactivated early in the summer and then reactivated this fall.

The attachment of the WAC Detachment to the regiment occurred early this fall, following the arrival of a new detachment from the Second Army at Memphis. The WAC Detachment (No. 1) at Harmony Church was formerly attached to the Third STR.

FOUR COMMANDERS

Since their organization into a regiment the Academics have had four commanders. They are: Col. Sidney S. Eberle, who left Benning in August 1942 to take up new duties at Camp Butner; Col. Harry N. Burkhalter, the CO for the next 13 months, has been on terminal leave since September; Col. John D. Hill commanded during the interim, with the present commander, Col. Edward P. Passolligue, taking over on October 1st of this year.

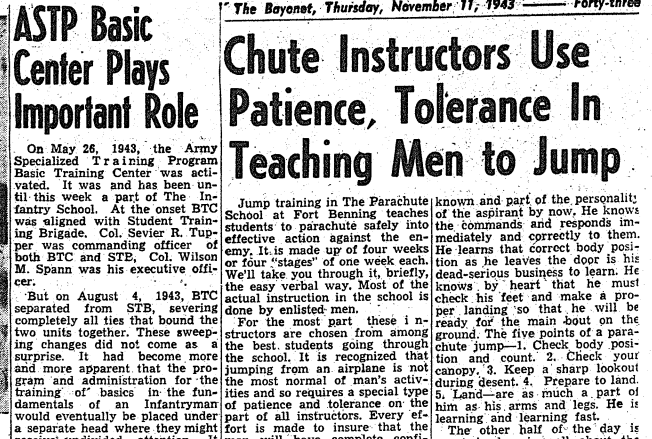
The enlisted personnel of the Academic Regiment are to be found at various tasks all over Fort Benning. Our non-com experts in weapons, communications, automotive mechanics and operations, and combat problems, assist in the instruction of officer candidates, officers, and enlisted technicians. Crack photographers and artists work in the Reproduction Plant. Clerical experts, scenario artists and writers staff The Infantry School. With the overwhelming majority of its membership wearing stripes, the Regiment is popularly known as the "most highly-rated regiment in the army."

BROKE MANY RECORDS

During the course of the performance of their routine duties the Academics have broken countless records and developed new techniques and devices essential to victory. It is a regular occurrence for the outfit's machine-gunners, mortar crews, BAR experts, anti-tank gunners, M-1 and tommy-gun demonstrators to set up and then break all-time army records—almost as a matter of course during their demonstrations for students. Practically every infantry weapon record in the army is held by men of this "outfit of stripes."

Not content with being experts, the men of the Academic Regiment have an enviable bond-buying record. During the Third Loan Drive the Academics — either through cash purchases, or pay allotment, or both—averaged nineteen dollars' worth of bonds (sale value) per man. Special Service Detachment and WAC Detachment No. 1 are outstanding for their record of 100 per cent bond pay reservations as well as their 100 per cent cash purchase of bonds during the recent loan drive. Among the numerous commendations from high military authorities on the regiment's postal system, clean barracks, bond records, etc.—is one from the commandant of the School citing Service Detachment for its bond record.

MORALE FACTORS



The regiment sponsors and supports three "morale factors." The PROFS, the Academic athletic teams, are well-known as ranking among the best basketeers and baseballers in the army. During the past year the Profs won the first-half basketball title and were squeezed out of the second-half post championship by only two points by the second STR—the score was 50-48. In baseball the Profs licked the Parachutists three straight for the first-half crown, and then were nosed out of the second-half title in a close seven-game playoff series with the 176th Infantry. The "little World Series" of Fort Benning drew a crowd of over 7,000 a night, or a total of 50,000 for the series.

In softball and basketball the regiment places both company and regimental teams into enthusiastically-supported competition within its own without the regiment.

The Academic Regiment Jazz Band is followed from engagement to engagement by music lovers and dancers the Post over. With an average of 15 bookings a month, the orchestra plays for soldiers everywhere on the post as well as for military affairs in Columbus and Phenix City.

THE MIRROR

The Regimental MIRROR is considered one of the most important morale factors of the Academic Regiment. Launched as four-page weekly sheet in September 1942, the MIRROR is now publishing as a six-page Thursday newspaper with full news and sports coverage, as well as cartoons and features and a definite editorial policy. Hundreds of copies are sent home and to buddies in other camps by the Academics, who apparently consider the paper as a scrapbook of life at Fort Benning. During its 60 issues of "reflecting the regiment" the MIRROR has publicized and actively supported every bond, blood bank, war fund, war prisoners aid, and Red Cross drive; has run war bond and football prediction contests; has pictured and noted in print the outstanding experts, record-holders, vets and personalities of the regiment. In addition to its publication of the newspaper, the MIRROR staff assists in public relations work for the regiment.

TO TEACH WEAPONS you've got to know something about them. In the case of Tech. Sgt. J. Johnson of the Academic Regiment, there is no doubt that he is qualified to instruct marksmanship, for one thing. Last May he pumped 32 dead-center shots out of 32 into a bull's-eye the size of a nickel on the 1000-inch range. (Courtesy—The Mirror).

709th Tankers Give Infantry School Boys Battle Atmosphere

The 709th Tank Battalion arrived at this station as an interior battalion of the 40th Armored Regiment on Aug. 15, 1943. From an interior battalion of the 40th Armored Regiment, the 709th was activated as a separate tank battalion and demonstration unit of the Infantry School on Sept. 20, 1943.

This new organization moved overnight to its newly assigned area on Scott avenue and 14th street in the Sand Hill area and began functioning as a separate battalion on the morning of the 21st with Lt.-Col. Odis L. Harmon commanding. The staff of the new organization consisted of the following: Maj. Frank G. Lumpkin, executive officer; Maj. John L. McLaughlin, plans and training officer; Capt. Joseph P. Somers, assistant plans and training officer; Fist Lt. Doran E. Waugh, adjutant; Capt. Lovett L. Newell, intelligence officer, and Capt. I. J. A. Colletti, supply officer.

In addition the 709th was fortunate to retain six well-seasoned captains as company commanders for the new battalion. These officers, Capts. Myrl C. Lynch, Michael J. Guley, John L. Wilner, Perry N. Cox, Jr., Morton H. Sill and John J. Cochrane, were selected for their ability to command troops.

The 709th was assigned to the Seventh Armored Division for administration and supervision of training it continued in full stride with its parent organization until Oct. 1, 1943, at which time it was relieved from Seventh A.D. and till Corps and assigned to the Replacement and School Command.

Two Maneuvers

The 709th is a veteran of two maneuvers, having particiuated as a part of the Seventh Armored Division, in the Louisiana and Desert Training Center maneuvers. It men are seasoned, well trained and energetic in all their endeavors. From the date of its assignment to the Infantry School this command has demonstrated its ability to go through problems with little rehearsal and has gained much from its association and participation with infantry troops. Much is to be gained from this type of training: the infantryman realizes the might of the tank and the tanker vulnerability and limitations of his vehicle.

The battalion commander, Colonel Harmon, assumed command of the 709th Tank Battalion Sept. 20, 1943. Prior to the activation of the 109th, Colonel Harmon served as a battalion commander in the 40th Armored Division and intelligence officer of the 753rd Tank Battalion. Colonel Harmon is a graduate of Command and General Staff School, Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and Wofford College, Spartanburg, S. C., where he received his initial appointment in June, 1927.

The battalion executive officer, Major Lumpkin,, Jr., is a native of Columbus, Ga. Major Lumpkin was called to active duty in February, 1941, for duty with the Second Armored Division. This assignment was followed by his assignment to the Armored Command School at Fort Knox, Ky., as commanding officer of the student officers group. In January, 1943, Major Lumpkin was assigned to the Seventh Armored Division, where he served until the activation of the 709th Tank Battalion.

APO Delivers the Mail No Matter the Address

Delivering 95% of incorrectly addressed mail is the record hung up by the Army Post Office here at Benning, with the system worked out for handling such a colossal chore now being a model for other APO units through the country.

Capt. William H. O'Connell, a veteran of 24 years in the army postal service, is commanding officer of the APO. He recently succeeded Capt. Joseph O. Howhig, who had built up the organization at the post and who had been transferred to New Orleans. Capt. O'Connell had served with various army units, putting in many years overseas. He came to Fort Benning after building up the post office service at Fort McClellan, Ala.

Assisting him in the big job at Fort Benning are Lt. Willard Mather, West Palm Beach, Fla., a veteran of 16 years in the postal service, and Lt. Melvin G. Hartman, Martinsburg, Pa., who also served for 16 years, part of the time as postmaster. A veteran enlisted man in the unit here is Sgt. Roy Levey, who for 23 years worked in the post office at Union City, N. J.

TRACER SERVICE

Handling all of the mail that is incorrectly or partially or improperly addressed is just part of the work of the unit, however. Besides that, Capt. O'Connell is charged with the task of keeping up a 24-hour-a-day information service for military personnel seeking the whereabouts of any soldier; training postal units that will serve with various organizations overseas; investigating all cases of claims on insurance and otherwise performing the duties of a postal inspector in a city post office, and a few other assorted jobs.

In order to track down eventual recipients of incorrectly addressed mail, Capt. O'Connell's organization maintains a complex card file system. Every organization is supposed to send in a card for every member. They are placed in a "live" file and clerks consult the file for names of soldiers when mail is received—sometimes simply addressed "Johnny Doughboy, Ft. Benning."

These files, also are utilized in the information bureau, and constitute the only complete file of personnel on the entire post.

THE LIVE FILE

Whn an organization leaves the post, names are kept in the "live" file for a time, then placed in the "dead" file. An intricate system of consulting the files day after day to locate the correct names is followed on any piece of mail that remains undelivered after the first day. If the mail is undelivered at the end of two weeks, chances are that the man never was on the post—or that his organization slipped up in sending in a card.

Another little job is the holding of mail for men who are to be assigned to the post. Sometimes Officer Candidates come in to find several pounds of mail awaiting them, for instance. Whenever any unit anywhere in the country or abroad assigns a man or a group or a whole organization such as a regiment to Fort Benning, the APO is Cantified and mail is redirected here. Then it is held until the man—or organization—arrives.

Offices and files of the APO were moved recently from the Old Theater building to the former Red Cross building on the Main Post. There 10 soldiers and 32 WACs keep busy handling the mail. In addition, the APO maintains four men in the United States post office in order to catch and redirect quickly the incoming mail for men or units that have recently left the post.

BIG TURNOVER

One of the greatest problems confronting quick delivery of the mail, of course, is the enormous turnover of men. It is larger than for a metropolitan area of 300,000. In the Parachute School, in the training classes of The Infantry School and in the Officer Candidate Schools, the Bakers and Cooks school, and other such groups, turnover is high and rapid. In every case, the man's card follows his shiftings and when he eventually leaves, it is maintained for a year in the "live" file before being shifted to the "dead" file.

One big job of the unit is that of notifying newspapers, magazines and other publications of changes in address of men. Several clerks are kept busy on that chore alone.

The APO also supplies cards to members of organizations due to be sent to other stations. These are to be filled out and sent to the family and correspondents of the men. When the unit is scheduled to go overseas, the APO fills the cards for a certain time, and then forwards them on to the friends and relatives so that they may have the mailing address of their loved ones.

At present the APO officers and clerks are doing a bit of post-war planning, too. They are building up files of home addresses of men stationed at Fort Benning. They're looking forward to the time when mail will be coming in to the post and will have to be forwarded to a home address.

ASTP Basic Center Plays Important Role

On May 26, 1943, the Army Specialized Training Program Basic Training Center was activated. It was and has been until this week a part of The Infantry School. At the onset BTC was aligned with Student Training Brigade. Col. Sevier R. Tupper was commanding officer of both BTC and STB, Col. Wilson M. Spann was his executive officer.

But on August 4, 1943, BTC separated from STB, severing completely all ties that bound the two units together. These sweeping changes did not come as a surprise. It had become more and more apparent that the program and administration for the training of basics in the fundamentals of an Infantryman would eventually be placed under a separate head where they might receive undivided attention. It was felt at the time that both Student Training Brigade and Basic Training Center were too large and too important in their purposes and functions to be run together. The separation came at a time when the independent identity seemed most practical.

On October 16, 1943, ASTP Basic Training Center was directed to deal directly with the Replacement and School Command, Army Ground Forces, and the commanding officer, Fort Benning, Ga.

This, in effect, relieved The Infantry School of the duties incident to an intermediate headquarters. However, the Commandant of The Infantry School was to continue to co-ordinate all activities of Basic Training Center. At the time the order came down directing BTC to deal directly with Replacement and School Command, Col. Spann expressed his appreciation for the great assistance rendered by the Infantry school in the organization and operation of the Training Center from the time of its activation.

The first influx of trainees to BTC began immediately after the activation of the unit, but it shortly came to a standstill. The first cycle—1st Battalion of the 4th Training Regiment—began to institute basics with only two complete companies. But shortly before the first cycle was completed, men began to arrive here by trainloads daily. Now, nearly every regiment has at least three cycles in process of training or in process of filling up. When BTC is in full operation it is expected to have a strength fluctuating between 10,000 and 12,000 troops.

THREE REGIMENTS

As it stands at the present time, BTC is made up of three regiments—4th Training Regiment commanded by Col. V. S. Burton, 5th Training Regiment commanded by Col. Kenneth S. Whittemore, and 6th Training Regiment commanded by Col. Robert Sharp.

It was expected that ASTP basic trainees assigned to the three regiments of BTC would have an inordinate amount of talent in addition to their soldierly procivilities. Here, as it so seldom happens in the Army, expectations were more than realized. Perhaps, no other group of men anywhere in the service were so well adapted to entertaining themselves, who possessed so many facets for providing their own recreation.

As an example, in the three regiments, none of which is yet complete at this time, there are eight dance bands, three military bands, and other instrumental organizations. In addition to these instrumental groups, every battalion has its own chorus.

In sports, two of the three regiments managed to place baseball teams in Fort Benning league competition, and all three regiments will have basketball teams competing in The Infantry School League — major Post league. In addition to the teams participating in the major leagues, each battalion has a basketball team playing in the Basic Training Center cage league.

Provisions have been made to furnish a radio outlet for the wealth of talent so abundant in the regiments through the facilities of WDAK, Columbus. Two studios for broadcast purposes are being set up in Harmony Church area, and a Radio Workshop is being organized to guide the project.

The PINE-BUR, formerly published by and for the men of 2nd Student Training Regiment, was upon the Second's inactivations transferred lock, stock and barrel to Headquarters, BTC. The PINE-BUR is the official organ of the ASTPs stationed at Fort Benning for the period of their basic training. The weekly is intended to be so flexible that it can at all times provide the media for the full expression of the men.

Col. Wilson M. Spann, commanding officer, BTC, came to The Infantry School in March, 1943, from Fort Lewis, Washington, where he had commanded the 123rd Infantry. His staff is headed by Lt. Col. Burriss E. Claypool, executive officer. Lt. Col. Jack I. Davis is adjutant; Major Russell L. Tuttle, S-3; Major John G. Macfarlan, Special Service and Public Relations Officer; Col. Herbert B. Laux, S-3; Lt. Col. Harold J. Lipscomb, S-4; and Lt. Col. Lysle W. Croft, Classification and Testing officer. With the exception of Lt. Col. Claypool, officers of the staff succeeded in posts they held while the Basic Training Center was still a part of Student Training Brigade.

Chute Instructors Use Patience, Tolerance In Teaching Men to Jump

Jump training in The Parachute School at Fort Benning teaches students to parachute safely into effective action against the enemy. It is made up of four weeks or four "stages" of one week each. We'll take you through it, briefly, the easy verbal way. Most of the actual instruction in the school is done by enlisted men.

For the most part these instructors are chosen from among the best students going through the school. It is recognized that jumping from an airplane is not the most normal of man's activities and so requires a special type of patience and tolerance on the part of all instructors. Every effort is made to insure that the man will have complete confidence in himself and the equipment he works with. The desire of The Parachute School is to encourage and help every man who has the determination and natural equipment to become a trooper. This attitude is reflected in the entire personnel of the school. Wherever personal attention is needed to show a man the proper way to something—it is gladly and freely given. The school is particularly proud of its instructors who, it feels, are doing a bang-up job.

FIRST WEEK

Mental alertness is stressed from the first minute a man sets foot in "A Stage." He must remember to respond instantly to all commands. When he hears "Jab!" he must snap to attention with heels and toes together and strigke himself snappily on the left breast, holding this from hell to breakfast until he hears the releasing command of "Recover." This very effective device for riveting a class' attention is used throughout the school. The position of heels and toes together is the landing attitude used to absorb the shock.

A typical day in "A Stage" includes a running-walking period, a period of calisthenics, rope-climbing and group-games, practice in making exits from simulated C-47 'plane doors and tumbling (instruction in the technique of absorbing a landing shock). In addition all classes are instructed in the organization of Parachute units. Officers and enlisted men receive identical instruction.

From the first day a man starts jump training he is being paid as a parachutist—his base pay plus a flat fifty dollars a month extra. In "A Stage" those men who by nature are simply not adaptable as parachutists are spotted and tactfully eliminated. Those men who learn more slowly are given extra instruction. No possibility of material is overlooked and every attempt is made to encourage the man. Contrary to some rumors there is no attempt made to break a man down or make him look weak or ineffectual. Every man with normal courage and determination qualifies.

SECOND WEEK

Half of the working day is spent on apparatus such as a landing trainer which simulates an actual landing in a plane and which develops the proper landing attitude in the man: Mock tower jumping which is jumping out of a tower about thirty feet high to simulate the actual jump and opening shock of the parachute; Suspended harness: learning to maneuver the parachute, to make body turns, check oscillation and slip (descend in a definite direction); more mock door work—learning to make mass jumps (leave the 'plane quickly as soon as the man in front of you has jumped) and continued practice in absorbing that all-important landing shock.

The unique commands "get ready!, standt up!, hook up!, check equipment;, sound off for equipment check!, and stand to the door!" as well as "go!" are well-known and part of the personality of the aspirant by now. He knows the commands and responds immediately and correctly to them. He learns that correct body position as he leaves the door is his dead-serious business to learn. He knows by heart that he must check his feet and make a proper landing so that he will be ready for the main bout on the ground. The five points of a parachute jump—1. Check body position and count. 2. Check your canopy. 3. Keep a sharp lookout during desent. 4. Prepare to land. 5. Land—are as much a part of him as his arms and legs. He is learning and learning fast.

The other half of the day is spent in learning all about the parachute—how to pack it and take care of it in the field. The man is impressed and readily learns the necessity of extreme care in this work.

"C STAGE"—THIRD WEEK

In all stages of training preceeding the actual jump, practice and more practice is given the student in leaving the plane properly and landing correctly, absorbing all the shoc kwith no injury. The alert student gets all these things down pat. He does them automatically.

So in "C Stage" in addition to the main work of the stage—jumping free from the 250 foot towers, constant drill in all the other phases of the jump is carried on.

The candidates for wings and boots are first taken up the control tower in the "buddy seat" holding two men. This is their first taste of height and is the same as the amusement ride of the New York World's Fair. Then they are put in parachute harness and go up the tower, descending at approximately the same rate as in a real jump. These preliminary exercises are, of course, leading to the free jump from the tower. With the exclusion of the exit from the 'plane door, everything taught the men in previous stages is brought into play.

When he is wound up to the top of a tower and released free in a 32 foot canopy 'chute to float earthward, he has to maneuver the 'chute properly as taught in "B Stage"; to assume the proper landing attitude and land, absorbing the shock as taught in all stages commencing in "A". In addition to day jumps from the towers, the students get an opportunity to jump at night.

A man who has gone through "A, B, and C Stages" has undergone every part of an actual parachute jump. He has been taught exactly what to do—How to cope with every eventuality. He is informed and confident and he is ready to make his five jumps to qualify as a parachutist.

"D STAGE" FOURTH AND QUALIFYING WEEK

All that a student has learned in the school is now put to test and use. As mentioned before, the student, starting in "B Stage" is given a half-day, every day of work of Parachute Packing. He packs all the chutes he uses in his qualification jumps.

The first three jumps are made from 1200 feet and the other two from 800 feet. One night jump is made as the increasing tactical importance of the night jump has become evident.

All jumping is under the constant supervision of trained "Jumpmasters" as instructors in "D Stage" are called. These men have a ticklish and serious job to do in jumping these newly-trained men. Special training of an advanced nature is necessary.

The trainee who makes his 5th and qualifying jump has really only learned to debark from his vehicle of transportation. The advanced training he gets to make him double—effective on the ground is the real object of all his training.

Post Hospitalization Below Army Average

Fort Benning has a good bill of health, its hospitalization average being far below the Army normal of four per cent.

This record is attributed to the mild Georgia climate, plus the fact that most training and activity is outdoors. To this can be added excellent medical attention and care under the supervision of Colonel William Denton, post surgeon and senior medical officer.

Under his command are numerous dispensaries, both medical and dental, and two hospitals, the Station Hospital, commanded by Col. William Starnes, and the convalescent hospital in Harmony Church area, under supervision of Lt. Col. William C. Kennedy. All dental activities are headed by Col. Melville Sanderson, chief dental surgeon, and all veterinary corps work, including food inspection and that of the veterinary hospital, are supervised by Col. Samuel C. Keilsmeier, post veterinarian.

HIGHER IN WINTER

Of these units, the largest by far is the Station Hospital, where the majority of the hospitalization and care of the men is coordinated. Some idea of its size can be gained from the fact that last year 449,000 patients days were recorded. This year figures should reach half a million. The daily admission varies somewhat depending on the season. Admissions are higher during the winter, Col. Starnes said, due to increases in colds and upper respiratory illnesses.

Compared to civilian hospitalization, he added, these figures may seem high. However, Army care requires that men be released only when they are again ready for full duty. For that reason the local hospitalization averages 10 days per case. Cases requiring long convalescent periods are usually sent to Hospital Unit No. 2, which has been designed to handle this work. Here during their recovery periods, men are given special attention and exercises, including hikes, drills, and body reconditioning treatments. Oddly enough, this is a hospital without a nurse. None are needed since the men are not confined to bed.

300th Saber Regiment Has Set High Standards Since Activation

The date of December 10, 1942, at Fort Benning, saw the birth of an Infantry Regiment destined to take its own proud place in the annals of military history of World War II. December 10, 1942 was the natal day of the 300th Infantry Regiment.

The primary work of this Regiment at Fort Benning, has been that of demonstration troops for the Infantry School. However as a condition precedent to the performance of that work, it was necessary to develop thousands of recruits to an efficiency possessed only by seasoned soldiers. From Fort McClellan, Ala., and Camp Joseph T. Robinson, Ark., came enlisted men who but a few weeks before had stepped from civilian life—men to whom Army life and its attendant hardships were unknown quantities.

At Camp Robinson and Fort McClellan, however, these same men had been given some insight and consideration of the tremendous function that was to be theirs, some idea of the importance of the work that lay before them as soldiers. Consequently, upon their arrival at Fort Benning, they presented themselves with a frame of mind and attitude entirely amenable to every ounce of instruction that was offered to them.

FIRST COMMANDER

Colonel Richard G. McKee, formerly of The Infantry School and School Troops Brigade and now with the Third Army, was the father of the 300th Infantry Regiment, its first commanding officer. His executive officer was Lt. Colonel T. T. Long, formerly with the 124th Infantry. With keen foresight, and with a view towards moulding the 300th Infantry to an unsurpassed perfection, the senior officers were carefully selected. From the graduating classes of Officer Candidate School, the Infantry School sent the finest officers, leaders in their classes, as junior officers for the Regiment. They came to the 300th Infantry, schooled in the latest methods of teaching and fortified with a wealth of information in the latest developments of modern warfare.

Within the thirteen weeks that followed, the raw recruits were whipped into the height of physical condition and trained thoroughly in the use of modern weapons.

With meticulous care, the Regiment gradually reached the stage where it was able to assume the duties of school troops, taking over one demonstration, then another and another, and executing each with the "eclat and elan" fitting the standard for which the Infantry School has always been world renowned.

PRESENT C. O. ARRIVES

On June 29, 1943, Colonel Henry L. Hunt, Jr., the present Regimental Commander, came to the 300th Infantry Regiment to replace Colonel McKee. Colonel Hunt, a graduate of the United States Military Academy at West Point in 1920, has seen a long military career. From years of service with the Infantry and Signal Corps, at home and abroad, from the 29th Infantry at Fort Benning, and finally from the Infantry School itself, the Colonel came to the 300th Infantry qualified, to the highest degree, to assume the command.

The second ranking officer of the 300th Infantry, serving as Executive Officer to Colonel Hunt, is Lt. Colonel Fred W. Kushmer, a soldier of unusual administrative ability. His military background dates back to the year 1916. One year later Colonel Kushmer saw his first action on the Mexican Border. Enlisted as a private, here is a man who rose through the ranks as a result of his unquestioned ability. Colonel Kushmer came to the 300th Infantry from the 124th.

OUTSTANDING IN SPORTS

Through the current year, the 300th Infantry has attained a proficiency in many fields. Not limited to the performance of military duties alone, it fielded a baseball team of no mean reputation. Its football team at the present writing is a feared aggregation which may well prove at the close of the season to have been the greatest ever seen at Benning. The boxing team, still in its infancy, presents a star-studded line-up which other service organizations have found provides an interesting and close evening. A 300th Infantry golf team has found its place in the sports activities of the Post.

The 300th Infantry's Regimental band and dance orchestra have been developed to a degree through growing popularity which has placed them in demand to fulfill engagements throughout this section of the state of Georgia.

With a wealth of talen in basketball, the coming season will find the Regiment sending forth an unusually strong combination to try the mettle of any and all competition offered.

All of these activities are demonstrative of the spirit and morale which is the key-word in the lives of the 300th Infantry's personnel from start to finish.

Through it all, the Regiment has increased steadily in the wisdom demanded of the American soldier so that today it is fitted to accomplish whatever tasks lie ahead and in the present world conflict to carry the colors of the 300th Infantry to deserved glory.

Women's Club

The next meeting of the Music Appreciation Group of the Fort Benning Woman's Club will be held Tuesday, November 12, in the ladies' lounge of the Officers' Club at 2 p. m. The work selected by the group for study and discussion will be Cesar Franck's Symphonic Variations for piano and orchestra, using the Columbia recordling which features the London Philharmonica and Walter Gieseking, pianist. Mrs. Donald W. Noake will give a resume of the work.

Most concert-goers are familiar with the Symphony in D minor by this French composer of the Nineteenth century. His compositions for piano are no less appealing to those who already respend to his chromatic harmony and improvisatorial style.

This music should be an interesting contrast to that of the Russian composer Prokofieff, whose life and composition, "Peter and the Wolf", were discussed at the last meeting. All members of the club are cordially invited.

Khaki'd World

By PVT. G. I. GRIPE

Maj. Hammargren, boss of Public Relations Division, is wondering just how they meant it. Seems a group of WAC officers and special feature writers were on the Post week or so ago, gathering material for stories. After they left, the Major received a letter saying "you personally were the subject of many flattering remarks on the way back." Looking for a movie contract, Major?

Sgt. Carl Neu, who has been around these past several weeks picking up those gorgeous pin-up girls whose pictures have been running in the bi-yonet, was slightly miffed when he read here last week that Sgt. Bates was being prominently mentioned as the WAC pin-up boy of the week. "I don't see why nobody ever picks me as a pin-up boy," he grumbled. But some fan mail the next day perked up the picker-outer no end.

And as for picking me as a pin-up boy. Hah, hah. I even have to laff at that myself.

"Tennessee Slim" Church, the tall and gangly member of the Hillbilly Band from the 176th Infantry, is in the hospital (apparently he was forced to eat too much of his own cooking or something) and when Corp. Don Hasselvent to see him the other day, Slim said, "Oh, boy, I am going to get some of that 'dear' meat (correct) from home—that'll fix me up—yessir, some of that 'dear' meat from good old Tennessee."

"Nope, I mean dear meat—dear old sowbelly meat," replied Slim.

They have some good newshounds in that 131st, too. Their paper, "The Infantry News," sure makes our chore easier. Hope they'll keep it up. Frinstance, here's a couple of swell items we got out of it and are passing along to the rest of the Post to chuckle over (why can't the other organizations around here keep their ears open and shoot us along some stuff like this now??)

Pvt. Henry Fuoto of Company F sent out a letter to his gal friend in one evening. Hey, that's enough for a correspondence school.

And then Corp. Dana V. Mick, baker at Cannon company, thought he'd save flour and double-led the amount of baking powder in biscuits the other day. They must have made a bride's first attemptlook like a balloon filled with marshmallows.

And they claim that an Anti-Tank sgt. forgot to remove socks while taking a bath.

The Band members are a bit excited because somebody chopped off part of their ping-pong table so it'd fit in a corner—and now they have to play on a short table.

In the 300th Infantry they're swearing this actually, took place: Seems that few weeks ago a Sgt. gave command "Hips on shoulders, place!" which caused considerable merriment through the entire regt. Well, along came Lt. Harry Smith and Co. B and said: it coud be done. And proceeded to do it through a series of contortions. They don't say whether the Lieutenant was a circus performer in civilian life—but they do claim it's absolutely true.

War Is Making Better Americans of Us All; Through Clouds of War Shines Star of Peace

BY S-SGT. WAYNE HARBERT
Co. B, Acad. Reg't., ISSC.

Though it may not be realized in this great American struggle for life and liberty, there are millions of Americans who are becoming greater Americans in the very course of their struggle.

In a country the size of this America, especially with the nation itself divided into 48 states and into geographic, political and economic spheres, regionalism cannot help but develop. Even though the power of a democracy lies in the healthy being of the individual, even as of the many states, too much of the routine of common day life may be narrowing in its effect. Americans, citizens of a great community of space, have too often been ignorant of the true greatness of the republic because they've been too content in their own little regional world of happiness. They have been too busy under the shade trees growing down their own parking strip to realize they only hold a small space in a magnificant forest.

Today the American soldier has been sent from his own community to others, sometimes as far distant as the continental bulwark between great oceans. Although that soldier may be more preoccupied by the duties of the day and the responsibilities of tomorrow over there where they're going to count, he is incidentally learning about the rest of his America.

It is healthy for the peoples of a nation the width and breadth of this America to learn to know their neighbors. It is well for them to know there are people living 3,500 miles apart who share the treasury of the nation.

Now, while there is war, the soldier from the great, proud state of Texas is learning about the Saturday night satisfaction of a supper of baked Boston beans. The soldier from the crowded little world of Brooklyn is seeing the beauty of Oregon fir trees green-jeweled on mile-high mountains. He is finding the good smell of the desert air of the cactus and the sand of Arizona. The prairie-born Nebraskan, his speech as flat as his country, is getting that big city pride in the halls of Manhattan. The Alabama fellow with the easy slowness of the southland is getting acquainted with the Maine lobster fisherman. The Detroiter is off in California tasting the sunshine of the magazine ads. The soldier from Cheyenne has learned about tobacco and peanuts and cotton in Carolina. The man from Montana has been wintering in Florida and the fellow from Oklahoma is finding how big apples can really grow in Wenatchee.

Americans are learning that Grand Coulee dam on the Columbia is the largest thing man has made on earth, that the Chicago skyline holds the first skyscraper and that in a little town in Michigan the American Dutch put on their wooden shoes once a year and scrub the streets.

The American soldier at Fort Benning is learning what he's never known about Georgia: that Georgia was the first state to steamboat to go across the Atsupport a university, that the first lantic sailed from Savannah, that the first Sunday school in the world was attended by Georgians, that the first long distance telephone call originated and ended in Georgia, that Georgia peaches—so they say—are they finest in the land, that the first anaesthetic was introduced to medicine in Georgia and that Madame Chiang Kai-Shek used to go to school in Macon. He has found it was a Georgia writer who told the world about Georgia's own "Tobacco Road."

The soldier, of course, will return to his own great and favored American region when the war is won. But he is not going to forget Maine lobsters and Oregon trees and cotton in Carolina. He will not forget the roar of Manhattan and the California sunshine and the air of Arizona.

Though the American soldier will instinctively remain a citizen of his own part of these United States and will almost every case return there to find his share of American life, his eye is going to see farther, his mind is going to think more broadly. He will think in terms of America, not in terms of part of America. The American soldier today is becoming the greater American of tomorrow.

Where practical, plowing up cotton stalks will be most effective in preventing hibernation of boll weevils, the Agricultural Extension Service says.

In addition to the food and feed they furnish, grain crops give protection to the soil and add organic matter, according to the Georgia Extension Service.

Georgia farmers should take advantage of every method that will help get more milk, the Extension Service says.

TIS Musicians To Entertain Warm Springs

Headed by a former violinist of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, three members of the 14th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School, are preparing a Thanksgiving musicale for patients of the Warm Springs National Foundation. The concert, to be presented in the Chapel of the world-famous paralysis foundation on Sunday, November 21, promises to be a memorable one for music-enthusiasts of the institution. High-lighting the program will be selections by Lt. Sigmund Salacinski, who, until his entry into the armed forces, held a violin soloist scholarship with the New York Philharmonic.

A male group composed of men from the 1st and 3rd Student Training Regiments and of patients of the foundation, will augment the program with vocal selections. The chorus is under the direction of Lt. Gerald E. Mohr of the 14th Company, who was formerly student conductor of the Washington State College Symphonic Choir and director of the 100-piece State ROTC Band when it won national recognition from the Adjutant General's Department in 1942.

Lt. Mohr's assistant is Lt. Philip E. Miller, also of the 14th Company, who was formerly connected with the Acapella Choir of Holyoke, Mass.

The feature of the program, which is being arranged with the aid of Mill Flora Chase, Chief Physiotherapist at the Foundation, will be the presentation of the famous Brahms' "Horn-Trio." Accompanying Lt. Salacinski, will be Lt. Mohr on the French horn and Mr. William Wardlow, well-known Columbus organist and console master at Fort Benning.

Classification Teams Arrive

Interviews with all Army Service Force troops at Fort Benning began today by a Fourth Service Command classification survey team, which will determine if all enlisted men are properly assigned in accordance with the Army's policy of placing men so that they will be round pegs in round holes, it was announced today by Capt. Marvin L. Holland, chief of the enlisted section, Military Personnel Branch, at post headquarters.

The classification team, which is headed by Lt. Walter W. Bibson from the Fourth Service Command in Atlanta, is composed of 10 enlisted men and two officers. Individual interviews with all Army Service Force troops at Benning will be held by the enlisted personnel of the team, which also will attempt to discover men with critically needed skills during the interviews.

The tentative schedule, Captain Holland said, calls for interviews with station complement units through November 12, while medical units will be interviewed during the period of November 13-17. Military police units at the Prisoner of War camp are tentatively scheduled to be interviewed on November 18-19, while personnel at the Reception Center will be interviewed from November 20 to November 23. Following completion of individual interviews, during which time classification cards will be checked and brought up to date in regard to classification, the team will make up its reports and recommendations.

In case enlisted men are found improperly assigned, the team will make recommendations concerning the individuals to the post commander and the unit commander involved. A list of men found to possess critically needed skills will be sent to Service Command Headquarters in Atlanta, Lt. Sibson said.

The tem is scheduled to stay at Benning through November 30, at which time work is expected to be completed.

Paratrooper Sells Home, Buys Bonds

Sergeant Leegate of Headquarters and Service Company, who has been in the school for a year and a half, has served in the Army nearly 15 years. After 15 more he intends to retire.

Recently Sergeant and Mrs. Leegate sold their home. They decided that the wisest investment for their money would be war bonds, not only for patriotic reasons, but as a cornerstone for a new home when the sergeant's Army career is ended. To date the Leegates have over $1,500.00 in bonds.

Mrs. Leegate who is head of the Medical Supply Clerks at the station hospital adds to this $25.00 a month. The sergeant intends to purchase an additional $100.00 bond every pay day

The college kids were dancing to the sweet melodies of some king of swing; the playboys were on their Saturday night spree; the grade school teachers were just getting home from the latest historical movie; in every beer tavern in town, the nickelodians were whirling out some hot tune. But an old man walked slowly over to the court-house terrace wall, and sat down alone.

It wasn't the man's shabby clothing, for others along the terrace were poorly dressed; and it wasn't the tired, wrinkled face, for others had worked, and others were aging; yet there was something magnetic about this man, as he stared up into the night, and began to mumble prayers to some God somewhere to smile once again on the nations of the world, to implore of the omnipotent, ubiquitous gods, whoever they might be, to grant peace on earth.

"My boy," the man dropped his dim, dark eyes from the skies, and the hardness of his face somehow spoke of gentleness, "did you ever listen to such beautiful music that you were overcome by its splendor; did you ever see a tornado so big that you could only think of bigness; did you ever see a friend die; did you ever see blood and gore spread over square miles of land?"

STAR OF PEACE

"See," a finger gnarled like an old limb was slowly lifted toward the heavens, "see that star? That is the star of peace. That's the star my buddy asked the name of when he was bleeding to death in no man's land. That's the star that guided the wise men to Jesus Christ as he sat suckling in the stable in Jerusalem."

The man talked slowly, irregularly, and he breathed rapidly, his chest pounding up and down as though he had just completed a hard run. But his eyes were steady gray and hard they were —and his breeze-blown hair parted in little white ribbons that glittered in the light reflected from the red neon sign up the street.

"My buddy—Johnny was his name—he died, died in France." The man paused a moment, attempting to recall some memory picture of a pal dead 25 years. "We were going through the Argonne one night—God, it was shells, and, Lord, soldiers were out there crying, and moaning, and shrieking like so many frogs, and they were about as helpless." The man's face became cold and clammy, and his words came in little spurts like the chattering of a far off machine gun.

"Johnny and I were pals—we ate together in dirt holes; we sang songs and told stories and killed men together; we told each other about our girls back home and read each other the letters we got. We went together to the red light houses in the French towns . . ." a star shot overhead, and disappeared far in the east.

HORRIBLY BEAUTIFUL

Army Nurses Get Taste Of Real Battle

Crawling through barbed wire and water-filled shell holes, with dynamite charges exploding around them and live machine gun bullets whining just above their heads, a group of Army nurses went over an infiltration course at Fort Benning to get a sample of what they will undergo in actual battle areas.

Given the center position on the course as a post of honor because it was a danger spot, the nurses did themselves proud by at least equalling the average record on the course, according to Lt. Col. C. A. Will, director of training at Fort Benning, who was in charge of training on the infiltration course which saw 240 soldiers and nurses wriggle through the dangerous and hazardous barriers.

WET AND MUDDY

The paths of some of them carried them through water-filled shell holes, from which they emerged wet and muddy, but undaunted. The paths of others led them beside wire-surrounded holes in which charges of dynamite were deotnated as they crawled beside it, spraying them with dirt and pebbles. The smell of burning cordite from the four machine guns which fired life ammunition, including tracer bullets on every fifth shot, permeated the course and incerased the battle realism which the nurses were experiencing.

Like veterans, the nurses turned on their backs and wriggled underenath barbed wire entanglements, using their bare hands gingerly to prevent the barbs from digging into their tenderines and holding them up on the hazardous but speedy journey through the realistic "no-man's land". The first few nurses, dirty, panting and exhausted, rolled into the ditch at the end of the course, just under the mouths of the machine guns those holes felt that God was awfully close. We were crawling forward slowly, when a flare went up, and I saw Johnny had stopped. I went back to him, and when I got my ear close enough, above the roar of everything, I heard him say my name. And he asked me slowly, Bud, what's that star up there? I looked and saw shining out of all that hell a bright star, and I told him it was the star of peace, and he understood . . .

"And now there's another war. Can't you see—men don't want to fight; men don't like to fight; men don't like to die." The man shuddered as though some electrical current was passing up and down his nervous system, "war is hell."

I left him there that way, leaning back, far back, looking up at the star of peace, which shone now even as it had shone 25 years previously. The merry crowd from the cheap dance floor over on the ninth were just coming out and laughing and joking, and a couple of cars ran along side of each other, blasting in some disharmonious manner with their baritone horns.

But the old man remained, dreaming, praying perhaps, to a God to be merciful to an eantrh—an old man keeling on the court-house steps, talking with his dead buddy . . .

Expansion Ahead For Baker Village

Eighty more new family units have just been approved for construction in Baker Village, to be used only by civilians, according to an announcement made this week by Brown Nicholeo, executive secretary of the Federal Housing Authority in Columbus.

Admission to this area, a military project, and that of the Benning Park district, which during last spring were united under one city government, is made from applicants with certain organizational connections, both military and civilian.

Benning Park is open to first and second lieutenants only, with children or expected children

Baker Village is open to noncommissioned officers of the first three grades (staff sergeants up), and to key civilian employees of the Post. These sergeants must be from units of a permanent nature, and not from tactical units here for trainin gonly. Long lists of waiting applicants are on file for quarters in these two housing places, according to Capt. J. A. White, Post Billeting Officer.

The Baker Village-Benning Park city government had its start in June when a mass meeting was held at which a committee was named to get the matter under way.

Committees Named

With Wade Coggins, assistant manager of the Village, assuring the group that the Federal management approved the step, Sgt. A. A. Wonsick, Sgt. H. L. Shockley, W. W. Daughtry, J. R. Grayson, and Sgt. W. H. Lamb, as a ways and means committee went to work, while a by-laws committee got to work on the kind of government. On the latter committee were J. F. Harper, Mtc. J. S. Newell, Sgt. W. L. Harpe, Sgt. H. C. Skipper, and W. L. Crittenden.

Temporary officers were elected and put on the job with First Sergeant Percy I. Hopkins as mayor. He was assisted by W. W. Daughtry as commissioner of traffic; J. R. Grayson, commissioner of recreation; J. F. Harper, commissioner of welfare; and Capt. J. A. White, commissioner of sanitation.

BOVERNING BOARD

An election was called for July when ballots were distributed to the doors (in lieu of an election day at the polls), and on the 7th they were collected and counted with the result that a permanent set of offices were created with officers as follows: Mayor, First Sergeant Percy I. Hopkins; four councilmen at large, Master Sergt. J. F. Harger, First Sergt. Joe B. Sharp. Wm. W. Daughtry, and Maj. Henry M. Craig. A set of 15 councilmen from councilmanic districts of the two communities were also elected. The election, although somewhat different in form, was genuine in competition and rivalry, for each office had more than one candidate. There were five candidates for mayor and they included a civilian, a captain, a major, and two sergeants. Nine candidates competed for the four commissioner positions. In the council ballots one of the hottest was in District 7 where a sergeant opposed his wife and three other persons as candidates.

Three of the more important objectives of the new government, it is stated, is to take over the Federal nursery as a community affair, establish a shopping center, and set up a dispensary.

G. I. Analyzes Some Mess Hall Characters

BY PVT. L. ISRAEL
13th Co., 6th ASTP Reg.

There are many different types of fiends who have the good fortune of eating in the same mess hall that I do. Naturally being always on the alert and observing everything that takes place within sight and hearing, I can readily record their actions. They are:

1. The Bold Type — He comes rushing down the side of the table grabbing plates in each hand and balancing a third between his teeth. Usually empties about half the plate before he is forced to pass it.

2. The Meek Type—He asks very politely for the food to be passed. However, he generally leaves the mess-hall hungry because everyone, thinking he is trying to act smart, disregards him.

3. The Nervous Type—He can't enjoy his meal because he's afraid he'll miss the entrance of an officer and be strongly reprimanded for not yelling "at ease."

4. The Sneaky Type—When he thinks no one is watching he makes a frantic attempt to take a second pork chop. He pays dearly for such folly by having both his arms broken but he'll never stop trying.

5. The Greedy Type — Very closely related to the bold type. He is constantly looking into his comrades plates to see how much they have. Then he goes and by means of intricate calculations manages to take exactly twice their amount.

6. The Confused Type — After being fortunate enough to get hold of a morsel or so, he doesn't know which way to pass the plate. He realizes very well that no matter what he does he'll make enemies. Amid the curses of his table buddies he leaves the mess-hall a dejected figure.

These interpretations are grossly exaggerated, of course. But for your personal safety and the security of your loved ones be sure you take out a ten-thousand dollar policy before entering the mess hall.

Major Glaser To Play Flute In Chapel Sunday

Major Benjamin Glaser, flute-soloist, will play "Arioso" by J. S. Bach for the offertory at the morning service at the Main Chapel Sunday. He will also play an obligato in the anthem "Prayer" by Mascagni. Major Glaser is now in the Medical Corps at Fort Benning. He was formerly a member of the Doctors' Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn, N. Y., and was also a member of the New York Flute Society.

The senior choir will meet for rehearsal at 6:30 P. M. Friday night. After rehearsal it will attend a buffet supper at Col. Marshall Goff's quarters.

The junior choir and their mothers will have tea at the Officers Club Wednesday, Nov. 17 at 3:30. Mary Ann Tuttle will explain the significance of a restment. Eleanor Pollock will tell about some of the rules for members of the choir. There will be songs, hymns vocal exercises showing the work and purposes of the choir.

Juniors will meet Friday night for rehearsal at 5:45 in the chapel.

Colonel Burton Gets Legion Of Merit Medal

The award of the Legion of Merit was made to Col. Vincent S. Burton, a veteran of Pearl Harbor and commander of the 4th Regiment, ASTP Basic Training Center at an impressive ceremony on Monroe Field in Harmony Church, Friday night.

The presentation was made by Maj. Gen. Charles H. Bonesteel, Commandant of The Infantry School in the presence of guests and the Second Battalion of the Fourth Regiment.

The citation accompanying the award read:

"For exceptionally meritorious service in a position of high responsibility as Commanding Officer of the Hawaii District, Island of Hawaii, T. H., from December 9, 1941 to March 15, 1942, during the critical period of confusion, shock and extreme emergency immediately following the attack on Pearl Harbor. Faced with many complex problems including protection, welfare and administration of the island, he performed all duties energetically, impartially, and organized defense, administration and control of a large enemy alien population so as to restore the confidence of the civil population and gain their respect and admiration. His initiative, resourcefulness, leadership and other professional qualities were an inspiration to all who were called to serve with him."

The second battalion, which has been in training for only seven weeks, passed in review before Major General Bonesteel, Brig. Gen. George H. Weems, Assistant Commandant, Col. Burton, Col. Wilson McK. Spann, commander of the Training Center, and Col Harold E. Potter, executive officer of the School.

General Bonesteel inspected the troops prior to the presentation and, following the review, expressed himself as surprised at their excellent performance after so short a training period. "Their line, dress, and precision with which they executed their movements and manual of arms were excellent," he said.

Col. Burton took over the command of the Fourth several weeks ago after commanding the Second Student Training Regiment. He had previously served as Inspector for the Student Training Brigade and had spent a year at Howe Military School immediately following Pearl Harbor.

He has seen service in the Philippines and China, and spent considerable time as an ROTC instructor. Col. Burton enlisted in 1914 and was commissioned from the ranks in 1917.

Turkey Day Program Released

It will be business as usual with troops training for the grim business of war on Thanksgiving at Fort Benning, it was pointed out today.

Thanksgiving dinner of course will be the super-duper turkey feast, but except for that, the men in training will carry on their regular programs.

Many special events are being planned for the evening, however, in the various service clubs and the regular Thursday evening broadcast of the Reception Center Chorus from Service Club No. 1 will be devoted to Thanksgiving music. Incidentally it will be the 100th consecutive broadcast of the Chorus.

DANCES SET

At Service Club No. 2, there will be a tea dance in the afternoon for members of the Lucky 7th Armored Division after their training period. In Service Club No. 7, there will be a dance at 8 p. m. with the Lawson Field orchestra playing. Other service clubs are planning events, but have not arranged their full schedule as yet.

The broadcast over WRBL of "Listen It's Fort Benning" at 8:30 to 8:55 p. m. EWT on Monday also will be devoted to Thanksgiving. Several organizations on the post will arrange Thanksgiving parties or events for the week. The 269th Station Hospital will have a party Monday evening in their mess hall. The Medical Detachment at Hospital Unit No. 2 held its Thanksgiving party Tuesday evening with a dance as the feature.

The 528th Engineers will hold a Thanksgiving party on Thursday evening at the Infantry School Rest Camp. The WAC Detachment of The Infantry School will be guests.

Meanwhile, the USO Travelers Aid and the Post Eilletting Office warned that with wives and families of many Ft. Benning personnel planning on coming to Columbus during the week, the Thanksgiving holiday will mean increased housing problems in already overcrowded Columbus.

T. A. PREPARES

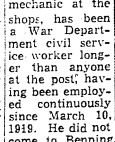
The Travelers Aid is making preparations to meet the demand as well as possible, and is arranging to ask Columbus citizens to co-operate in securing rooming facilities.

At the same time, military personnel were advised to make plans for expected visitors as soon as possible.

"The Travelers Aid is glad to be of assistance in contacting relatives at Fort Benning when visitors arrive—but it is best to make plans in advance so that families will not be arriving without any place to stay all set in advance," the organization said today in a communication. "Military personnel also are urged to make fool proof plans in case fate and the commanding officer of units decree that it will not be possible to meet visitors on arrival."

In cases of servicemen who have passes but will not be able to go home, the USO Travelers Aid will be glad to plan with these men for visits to nearby communities.

Civilian Employe Pair Boast 43-Years' Service



"A salute to Soldiers in Mufti," is the theme of the Bayonet's new feature which will herald the achievements of long-time civilian employes at Fort Benning. More than three-score of these "old timers" have worked at Benning for ten years or more. Their stories are interesting and will provide each week a fitting salute from the military to the civilians who contribute their time and energies to making Fort Benning America's "most complete Army Post."—Editor).

Two of the lengthiest civil service records at Fort Benning belong to two employees of the shops of the "Chattahoochee Choo-Choo," the post's narrow-gauge railroad system.

WHITAKER

Fred A. Whittaker, master mechanic at the shops, has been a War Department civil service worker longer than anyone at the post, having been employed continuously since March 10, 1919. He did not come to Benning, however, until November, 1922, and several other civilian employees have longer records of service at this post.

Among the latter is S. A. Tyler, now storekeeper at Benning since December 13, 1920, three days after he was discharged from the army here. He was first employed as a horseshoer — the job he held during his seven and a half years in the army—and has been with the railroad since 1930.

Mr. Whittaker, a native of Yorkshire, England, first came to the United States in 1900. He returned to England a year later, but came back to this country the following year and has been here ever since.

He worked as a machinist in various parts of the United States, and during the first World War he worked in ammunition factories in Washington, D. C., and Huntington, W. Va. He began his War Department civil service career at the Norfolk Army Base, where he served until coming to Benning. He has been with the railroad during all his years here.

Mr. Tyler, who is from Crystal City, Mo., was stationed in the Panama Canal Zone during the first World War. From there he was sent to Camp Shelby and then to Fort Benning, where he was stationed for more than a year before his discharge.

These two men have watched Benning grow almost from its beginning. When Mr. Tyler first came, the post had just been moved to its present location from its original site 3 miles east of Columbus. The only buildings on the post were the houses belonging to the farmers from whom the land had been bought. There were about 2,000 soldiers—units of the 29th Infantry and the Infantry School Detachment—housed in tents.

The railroad system was just getting started when Mr. Whitaker arrived. The area now occupied by the shops was then a cornfield, and one of his first jobs was to help supervise the building of the shops.

As buildings went up and the post gradually developed in the years after the war, Benning was a simple place for these men who watched it grow. But the mushroom growth of the past few years has been a little too much for Mr. Whitaker.

Dependency Check Thefts Causing F. B. I. Concern

To help eliminate theft and forgery of Army dependency checks, the U. S. Secret Service has drawn up several rules to be followed by soldiers and their dependents, according to word received at Fort Benning.

Observance of these rules will go far toward stopping theft and forgery, which have increased alarmingly in the past few months, the Secret Service said.

The rules are:

1. Be at home, or have a member of the family at home, when your check is due to arrive. If you remove it from the mail box immediately, it cannot be stolen by a check thief.

2. Be sure you have a deep, strong mail box, with your name clearly printed on it. KEEP IT LOCKED.

3. If possible, arrange with your mail carrier to signal when he delivers your check.

4. Notify your postmaster if you change your address.

5. Cash your check at the same place each month. This will make identification easier. The Secret Service is cautioning merchants to insist upon proper identification.

6. Do not fold, pin, or mutilate your allowance check or allotment check. This is very important to you!

WAC OFFICER ARRIVES

Lt. May E. Felts, of Paducah, Ky., has been assigned to WAC Detachment I of the Infantry School. Lt. Felts enlisted last February and was commissioned in April, service as mess officer at The Second WAC Training Center at Daytona Beach. Her brother Woodrow is now on maneuvers on the west coast.

HE'S AT HOME in the United States Army. Twenty-eight years of service he's seen, here and abroad with only two furloughs. What a man! T-Sgt. Oscar Johnson of the 40th Tank Battalion, 7th Armored Division, has forgotten more about the Army than he wants to release for publication. (Official U. S. Army Photo, 7th A.D.)

Tanker In Army 28 Years; Has Had Only 2 Furloughs

T. Sgt. Oscar Johnson, who has had two furloughs in 28 years of service in the United States Army, is plugging away, as always with hands and tools, brain and brawn. He clings everlastingly to his job in the maintenance shop of the 40th Tank Battalion, 7th Armored Division.

The veteran who has survived two insurrections, abroad in World War I, and many days rough and rowdy, tough and tumble problems seems as contented as they ever made a soldier. He is 61 years old. He has seen service in Cuba, Philippines and Mexico and became an enlisted man at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, in 1911.

"I had the army in my blood and when you get it in your blood it's pretty hard to get rid of it," Sgt. Johnson claims. Tiring of the mines in Missouri the hale, old sergeant laughed as he told of his years of experience with Uncle Sam.

SERGEANT'S FURLOUGHS

"When I wanted a furlough they didn't want me to have one. When they wanted me to take one I didn't want to go," is the comment Sgt. Johnson made about the 45 days leave he has had in 28 years. "It was just like that, see-sawing around. I didn't give a hang about one anyway. The first one was for 30 days and the last one for 15 days. Each time he went to see his sister and father. His dad is 84 years old

Fulton, Post Lauded By War Fund Chairman

Highest praise has been bestowed on Fort Benning personnel and upon their former commanding officer, Brig. General Walter Scott Fulton for the roles they played in the recent National War Fund drive.

General Fulton who served as chairman of the campaign for Muscogee county, Ga., his first civilian undertaking following his retirement from the Army, is the recipient of a letter from Prescott S. Bush, national campaign chairman.

"I have just seen the fine report from the Muscogee County War Fund campaign showing $90,000 in sight on your goal of $70,000, with more than $38,000 contributed from Fort Benning," Mr. Bush wrote.

"This is a splendid tribute to your outstanding leadership which resulted in the untiring work of your committees and the loyal support of Fort Benning personnel and citizens of Muscogee County.

"Please accept my hearty congratulations and the sincere thanks of the National War Fund on behalf of the men in our armed forces and our friends of the United Nations, in this important part of our war effort.

"Your success will mean much to the many campaigns now under way in Georgia as well as in all the states."

Over-Work Did It! Yes, Indeed, It Really Did

A crowd gathered the other day around a revolving water sprinkler in the 4th Battalion area of the 1st Student Training Regiment. It emitted noises strangely resembling code. Notebooks in hand, several new radio students of the 23rd Company were desperately trying to jot down the noises as Morse characters.

Major Jefferson of the Infantry School's Communications Section would call it code conscious. But the boys have a different word for it —"dit happy."

Sabers Humbled In Grid Thriller

BY SGT. FORREST KYLE

The Spirits of the 176th Infantry are champions again!

Winners of The Infantry School League baseball title last summer, the Spirit football team carried off the Conference pigskin pennant last Sunday by overwhelming the 300th Infantry Sabers, 27-20, before 20,000 pop-eyed spectators at Doughboy Stadium.

It was the Spirits' second triumph of the season over the Sabers and only a spectacular comeback by the 300th in the second half prevented the title game from becoming a one-sided rout.

The Spirits, capitalizing on two Saber fumbles in the first quarter, struck with shocking fury, rolling up three touchdowns. By halftime they were comfortably out in front, 27-0.

ALLEN SPARKS RALLY

A 29-yard touchdown sprint by the Sabers' great Ermal Allen along in the third quarter suddenly brought the 300th to life and two touchdown passes by Allen in the fourth period quickly cast a different light on the tussle. But the Sabers couldn't overtake the Spirits in the time remaining and when the game ended the 176th appeared to be marching steadily to another touchdown.

It was the passing of Bob Waterfield, major-domo of the Spirits' "T" formation, and the running of Sully Harris and Pat Ronzone which sparked the Spirits' first half scoring circus.

The Spirits were on their way to touchdown No. 1 early in the first quarter when Harris returned a punt to the Saber 34-yard line. Ronzone, on two straight reverses, made it a first down on the Saber 16. The Spirits were penalized to the 32 for holding, so Waterfield flipped a behind-the-line pass to Harris and the former L. S. U. gridder twisted his way to the five-yard line. There was a clipping penalty on the play, however, and the Spirits found themselves back on the Saber 29.

SCORE ON PASS

Waterfield immediately tossed a pass to Georgia's George Poschner, good to the 22, and Cullen Rogers of Texas A. & M. hit off left tackle to the 18. Again Waterfield passed, this time to Harris, who nabbed the ball on the three-yard line and smashed over the goal. Harris missed the conversion.

On the second play after the kickoff, the Sabers' Noah Mullins fumbled and Ronzone recovered on the Saber 31. Waterfield again hit Harris with a pass, complete to the Saber 18. Ronzone missed a sure touchdown pass on the two-yard line so the ex-Indian U. back grabbed the ball on a Statue of Liberty play and scampered to the one-yard line when he was flipped to the turf by Joe Routt, the Sabers' All-America guard from Texas A. & M.

Rogers hit over left guard for the touchdown and Harris booted the extra point.

FUMBLE AGAIN

Once again the Sabers fumbled on the second play after the kickoff and once again it was Ronzone who pounced on the ball. This time it was on the Spirit 37, since Allen had just completed a 22-yard jaunt on the first play.

This time Waterfield was forced to punt after a series of plays,

COLONEL GAITHER
Nominated For Promotion

Gaither Named For Promotion

Col. Ridgely Gaither, commandant of the Army's Parachute School at Fort Benning, Saturday was nominated by President Roosevelt for promotion to the rank of Brigadier General. The nomination has been sent to the Senate for confirmation.

As commandant of the Parachute School, Col. Gaither directs the training of all army paratroops who upon graduation from the gruelling parachute training course at Benning, find themselves fighting overseas.

Assuming command of the Parachute School at Benning on July 7, 1943, Colonel Gaither observed, "I consider American army paratroop training the best in the world, not excepting the Germans. And I hope to keep it that way."

Since he has assumed command, paratroopers have been used on the fighting fronts and many changes have been made in

Alabama Farmers Eat Food Dropped from Sky

The farmers who live in and close by the Alabama Training Area of The Parachute School were treated to a novel and interesting pre-thanksgiving Picnic and Parachute Training Demonstration last Thursday by the 515th Parachute Regiment under the command of Col. Julian B. Lindsey. The weather was perfect and the party was a pleasant and enjoyable one, both for the guest-farmers and the officers and men who were present.

The party met in the morning in the Alabama Area, where all present were given special lapel pins with their names inscribed and the fact that they were the guests of the 515th. When everybody was present the entourage moved over to the Main Post, where at Theater No. 10 special training films about Parachute Training were shown.

After the films the return to Alabama was made and the regular fourth parachute jump of the current Parachute School class was witnessed. All the goings-on were explained so the ladies and gentlemen would be better able to understand the problems and methods of the spectacular work. Now and then a booted trainee, due to winds' whims, finds it necessary to land in a farmers field. With an understanding of the jumpers' problems, the farmers, naturally, know why this is necessary.

By now it was lunch time. Lunch time and not a sign of food to be seen for miles. The thought must have come to the gracious guests that these parachutists perhaps don't eat—don't have time for such earthy things. A roar in the sky soon scouted that idea and from a C-47 cargo plane was seen floating a vari-colored parachute which cushioned to earth an interesting container which proved once and for all that 'chutists do eat—good, hot full course meals. This tasty dinner was served right in the field. Manna from heaven! current Parachute School class was witnessed. Cyclists Must Ride With Flow of Traffic

I. 'Kickem, notorious cyclist of the Post, in an exclusive interview with a Bayonet representative the other day, permitted himself to be quoted:

"Once upon a time," he stated, in a very original and different way to begin a story, "only kids rode bicycles. At that time rules were made to cover it, and Johnny knew what to do while chasing pedestrians off the sidewalks with his bicycle. But times have changed— or rather gasoline rationing has come. So, now even grown up soliers ride 'em, and sometimes officers do likewise. So that brings up my question:

"What is the strictly GI way to get yourself injured, maimed, or killed on a bicycle, especially a GI one? Do you ride on the right side of the road and let 'em run over you before you know it; or do you ride on the left side of the road, meet 'em head on, and die gloriously facing the enemy?

"In other words, does the Georgia law (or is it a GI law?) consider a bicycle a vehicle, or is it just a hard way to walk, and therefore subject to the pedestrian laws?"

The reporter hastened around on his GI bicycle, riding in the middle of the road so he would be right (?) in either case, and consulted all the "brain trust" of the Post to find the answer. At last, the Provost Marshal put said reporter back on the right side of the road, so the latter penned this answer (on a typewriter) to the cyclist:

"It's too bad, Ike, but there is no chance in this case to be a legal hero—and who wants to be an illegal one? You may have to ride that bicycle with the traffic. The Provost Marshal said so, and he looked like he meant it. It's a vehicle and therefore subject to all the regulations of vehicles and vehicular traffic. No chance to die like a hero. Instead, you just let 'em slip up on you—and then you wake up with the pretty nurses holding your hand, or with the pretty angels fitting a GI halo to your head."

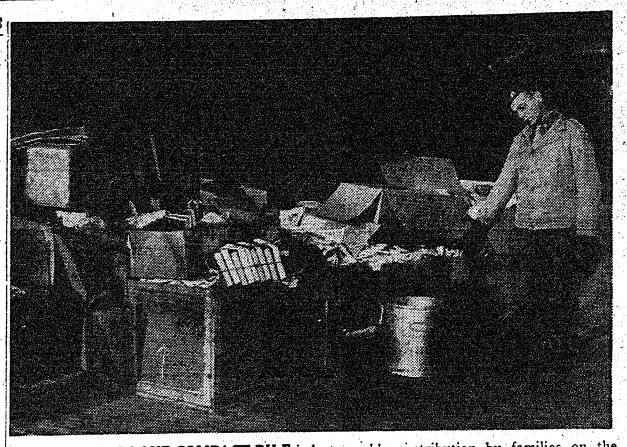
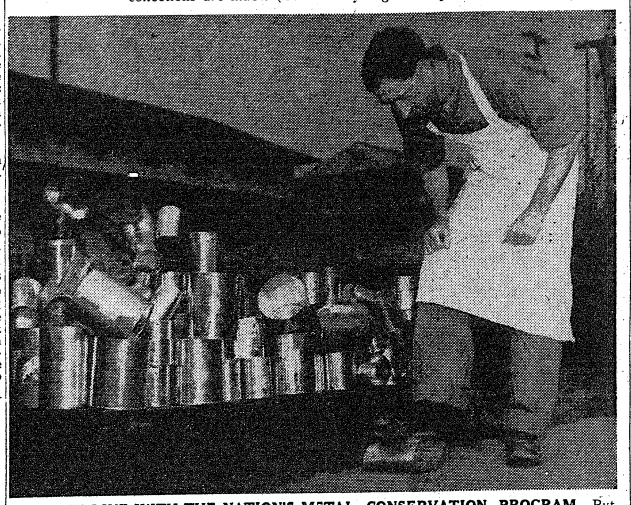
Yule Bond Poster Winner Gives Prize As Yule Gift

Captain James B. Sweeney, former Regimental S-2 and Public Relations officer of the First Student Training Regiment, the Infantry School, at Fort Benning, believes in practicing what he preaches.



Captain Sweenty won a prize of a $25 War Bond submitted in the Bayonet contest for the best poster promoting the idea of giving war bonds for Christmas presents this year.

When asked to submit the inscription he desired on his bond, Sweeney requested that it be made out in the name of a nephew in Philadelphia, Pa. You guessed it. The bond is going to be a Yuletide present for the younger Sweeney. And that's telling it to Sweeney!



CAPTAIN ENGSTROM

Dale McCoy Engstrom, of Madison, Wis., has just received a promotion to the rank of captain. He attended Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning. Since that time, Captain Engstrom has been assigned as an instructor in the Weapons Section, cannon group of the Academic Department at the Infantry School.

Strict Economy Need Stressed By Gen. Bryden

Maj. Gen. William Bryden, commanding general, Fourth Service Command, this week re-emphasized the army service forces program of economy by a letter to Colonel William H. Hobson, commanding officer of Fort Benning, and commanders of other posts, camps and stations within the command, renewing his instruction that "economy must prevail throughout this command."

General Bryden's letter stated, in part:

"Attention of all personnel in the Fourth Service Command is directed to the critical shortages in personnel and in materials. A reduction in funds is forecast.

"The tax burden imposed upon the people of the United States by this war staggers imagination. In the Fourth Service Command, alone, appropriated funds expended or obligated from January 1, 1943, to October 1, 1943, amount to more than $200,000,000. Each individual is, and will continue to be, affected personally by necessary military expenditures so, therefore, it is to each person's interest to practice economy.

"Economy must prevail throughout this command. The test for expenditures of funds, whether for employment of personnel or materials will be: "is this essential to winning the war?" No other standard will be used. The distinction between what is essential and what is desirable must be sharply drawn without compromise in any respect.

"Commanding officers without delay will forcefully present to all personnel under their command and supervision the need for economy . . ."

In recent months, civilian personnel has been reduced by more than 8,000 and military personnel by more than 21,000 in the Fourth Service Command.

New ASTP Patch To Appear Soon

Before very long Fort Benning will be seeing a new arm patch. The patch itself is not only an innovation for Benning, but will be an addition to the many colorful patches now being worn by the various branches of the service.

Like other GI patches, this one will be worn on the left arm. So far as it is known the new patch will be authorized only for men actually assigned to take the ASTP instruction in the nation's colleges, and will be worn during the time students are in college.

The new design incorporates both a sword and a lamp, with the sword super-imposed across the lamp. The symbolism implies valor and knowledge. Both sword and lamp are in blue, and stand against a yellow background of an octagonal shape.

It is expected that the new patches will be distributed before the end of November to men in training here under the provisions of the ASTP, Basic Training Center program.

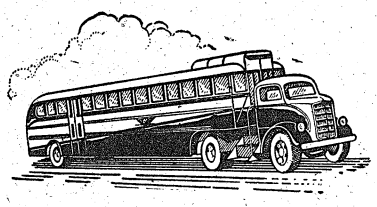
Ex-March Of Time Man In 1st Regiment

First Lieutenant Joseph Kelly Paull, one of 12 Signal Corps officers in 2d Co., 1st STR's Advanced Course at the Infantry School, stands high on a list of unusual occupations, having been associated with the March of Time film series prior to volunteering for duty with Uncle Sam's armed forces.

A flare for movie production and a healthy interest in the news of the day, backed up with a bachelor of science degree in chemical engineering earned at Michigan College of Mining and Technology was the interest and technical equipment that led him to March of Time work, Paull states.

Joining the organization in the summer of 1939, as a film cutter, he worked as assistant to the film editor in New York City until he enlisted in the Army in February, 1941, shortly after the beginning of the Selective Service system of induction.

While with the March of Time, Paull worked on the sensational "Ramparts We Watch" feature production of the film company which related the story of United States diplomatic and military activity from World War I, through peace years and into the early days of preparedness. His job was to cut the film after it had been developed so that it presented a coherent, understandable narrative. In addition, he was concerned with the regularly issued monthly releases of March of Time.



Now with six weeks of advanced course under his helmet liner Paull finds himself at the same place where he began his basic training almost three years ago for it was at Fort Benning that he received his basic training in February, 1941.

LT. CROWE IN COMMAND

Lieutenant Frank H. Crowe, ar officer of the 124th Infantry since 1939 and more recently intelligence officer, and assistant adjutant of the Student Training Brigade here, has been assigned to command the 1st Student Training Regiment's new 25th Company. Colonel Robert H. Lord, commanding officer, announced. The 25th houses colored students attending Enlisted Motor Courses at the Infantry School.

Air conditioned railroad cars were in service in the last century.

25th Field Artillery Joins TIS; In From Puerto Rico

The latest field artillery unit to join The Infantry School Troops Brigade is the 25th Field Artillery Battalion, which is back in the states after a tour of duty in Puerto Rico.

As a unit, the 25th Field has done a lot of traveling but of course the personnel has undergone a complete change from the time it was activated in Fort McClellan in 1918.

Twenty-two months after the end of World War I, it was recognized as the 25th Field Artillery, Philippine Scouts, and was activated as such Sept. 26, 1921, at Fort William McKinley, P. I. The 25th stayed in the Philippines for nine years until early 1930 when it became a part of the 9th division in the 7th Corps area. Three years later, it was assigned to the First Corps Area.

In 1939, three batteries of the 7th Field Artillery of the First Division were assigned to Puerto Rico and designated as the 25th batalion. And there they remained until this year.

Commander of the 25th is Lt. Col. Francis G. Hall. He joined the battalion in 1941 as a captain and commander of the Headquarters Battery. After three months as a battery commander, he became the Plans and Training Officer of the battalion in which capacity he served until 1942 when as a major, he went to Fort Sill as a student in the Field Officers' Course. Upon his return to Puerto Rico, he became battalion executive, and in June of 1942, as a lieutenant colonel, he became the battalion's commanding officer.

Puerto Rican Seeks Bars Here

From Ciales, Puerto Rico, which, he contends, "is the prettiest place in the world", comes Jose Luis Feijoo to strive for those infantry second lieutenant's bars as a candidate in the Fourth Company, Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School.

He was graduated from the University of Puerto Rico in 1939 with a B. S. in Agronomy, and then started to work for the U. S. Department of Agriculture in a job similar to our county farm agent's position, except that he supervised two counties.

He was inducted in December, 1942, and received his basic training at Camp Tortugero, which, except for the trees being palms instead of pine, is just like Fort Benning—all sand!!! After his eight weeks' basic, he was attached to an entirely Pureto Rican regiment, which in January, was sent to Panama for guard duty and jungle training. The latter, in Jose's words, "was very hard work." His promotion to corporal came in May, and soon thereafter he made application for OCS. After passing numerous boards and tests he was sent to the Infantry School in August.

Former Spirit Duo Decorated In Sicily

Two former members of the 176th Infantry of the Infantry School Troops Brigade have been decorated for heroism.

Lt. John P. Fairey, a former technical sergeant with the headquarters co., recently received his third Oak Leaf Cluster to add to his Distinguished Service Cross. The citation indicated he had taken part in 50 operational flights in the South Pacific. He previously had been decorated seven times. Besides the Distinguished Service Cross with three Oak Leaf clusters, he holds the Distinguished Flying Cross with two clusters and the Air Medal with two clusters.

S-Sgt. Charles B. Swan, formerly with Co. H, received the Soldier's Medal for heroism in assisting to remove several freight cars loaded with ammunition from the area of a blazing warehouse in Sicily.

Whoever made the statement "It's a small world," has been correct on many occasions, and an incident that occurred last Saturday proves the point.

Over in the Prisoner of War Camp at Fort Benning, the 176th Infantry soccer team was preparing to warm up for their game with the Italians. As the Spirit team ran onto the playing field, one of the prisoners of war shouted something in Italian to one of the 176th players.

After a few seconds of fond embrace and salutations, it was revealed that one of the prisoners had recognized his cousin, Orlando Cesca, the goalkeeper of the Spirit team. The pair had not seen one another for several years when Cesca came to this country from Italy.

The war makes it an even smaller world . . .

CAPTAIN SLAUGHTER

Charles T. Slaughter, Jr., has been promoted to captain. He is attending The Infantry School's Officers Advanced Course as a member of the 18th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment. A soldier in the old 29th Infantry and later tactical officer in the 3rd Student Training Regiment, Slaughter has been at Fort Benning for nearly seven of his eight years in the Army.

Irish Civil War Vet Ammunition Expert

Pfc. Matthew G. "Sammy" Sammons, a veteran of the Irish Army—and as Irish as the broth and brogue he and his clan froth in—is a cannoneer and ammunitions expert in "C" Battery of the 434th Armored Field Artillery Battalion, of the Seventh Armored Division.

Between sputters and spurts and handling the ammunition and guns in his battery armory, Pvt. Sammons will hold and keep any man's attention, whether he's telling of the Irish Civil War or the party they threw for him the night he left to come to the United States Army.

"Sammy," pride of the battery with whom he is attached, a friend of all, enemy of none, swells with pride and joyously tells that he and the number 7 are, as related to his family, synonymous. Reasons: There are seven sisters in Ireland—seven in the United States—and a brother, and he is assigend to the "Lucky Seventh" Armored Division of the United States Army.

The full-blooded Irishman was trained by the non-commissioned officers of the Battery to which he was immediately assigned upon coming to the 7th Armored Division at Camp Polk, La., in 1942. Although 45 years of age he carries on his work in the shop or the field in the manner of the soldier he had already learned to be in Ireland.

He participated in the Irish Rebellion in 1916 to 1918 and the Irish Civil War between 1918 and 1920. Besides his effort to sidetrack the experiences in the Irish Army one gathered that the food was good and the way was hard. He was a rifleman and knows what the guerilla warfare means.

"Sammy," who wouldn't stay still long enough to incite much interest or cause comment on the Irish struggles, kept cleaning the "tommy" gun, the Artillery's prize gun. He sorta' scoffed at the idea of having it tough but he did say, "we were always ready at a moment's notice, to go wherever they wanted us to. And we fought, by gosh!"

Pvt. Sammons was discharged from the Irish Army in 1920. He came to the United States and began an apprenticeship in plastering. He served a four year apprenticeship and was following that trade when he came into the United States Army. The date of his arrival in America was March 4, 1925. He settled down in Bronx, New York where he plied his trade until his induction.

"Sammy" said he had a yearning to get in the United States Army. He was inducted in March, 1942. Upon completion of his basic training at Camp Polk, Louisiana, he stayed with the battery in which he was trained. You'll find anyday now chattering away with his friends, down "Artillery Lane," in "C" Battery, of the 434th Armored Field Artillery Battalion.

"GOOD LUCK" was the only word Lt. Paul D. Eibert could give his brother, Pvt. John M. Eibert of the paratroops, as they prepared to take off from Lawson Field at Fort Benning, Georgia, last week, when the younger Eibert made his first parachute jump as his brother piloted the plane.

For the first time in the history of the paratroops did a man make a parachute jump while his own brother flew the transport plane. The brothers are sons of Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Eibert, 1905 Bayard avenue, St. Paul Minnesota.

Luckies Learn To Handle Land Mines, Booby Traps

Mines and booby-traps may be the most fiendish weapons of destruction to make an appearance in this war, but 7th Armored division personnel are receiving training against them enabling personnel to cope with anything the enemy has to offer at the present time.

In the words of Sgt. Carl Harper of Harrisburg, Ill., C Co. 31st Armored Battalion explosives expert, "If man makes it, it can be mastered." And that is the essence of what Maj. Gen. Lindsay McDonald Silvester's soldiers are learning about traps and mines.

In addition to all the training films, posters, and pamphlets, 7th Armored soldiers are given carefully conducted and controlled explosives experiments and demonstrations. These reproduce exact battlefield conditions . . . except for the casualties.

An example is the 31st Armored Battalion, where every man learns the proper precautionary steps taken when dealing with explosives. First of all, the men are taught to avoid such dangers if there is any possible way of circumventing minefields, marking them for the troops behind them.

But if there is no way to advance without removing mines, personnel have the required training to clear a way through without a large number of casualties.

ALL THE TRICKS

Sgt. Harper, who was in the demolition business 22 years before entering the army, teaches the men to lay mines; to determine whether a field is laid with "hasty" or "delayed" mines; whether the mines have personnel-destroying booby-traps attached or not; and other tricks of the trade.

Through practice with firecracker loaded mines GIs learn both to lay and remove this hidden death. In a "hasty" minefield they learn to watch for small arms fire while removing mines laid atop the ground.

In dealing with "delayed" fields, they learn to proceed cautiously and somewhat fearlessly when removing hidden mines which often have booby-traps attached for the destruction of "sappers."

It was through the ingenuity of Brig. Gen. John B. Thompson, C C B, that 7th Armored "sappers" learned one method of quickly clearing enemy minefields. The general suggested attaching a huge hook or rake to vehicles, with a long rope and literally "raking" the area ahead, after sappers had planted the rakes a safe distance in front. Thus mines could be set off from a distance in safety.

Although the men are cautioned that one minefield can destroy more than five or ten men with weapons, they take an interest in their work and have proved themselves good at removal and excellent in laying explosives, according to Sgt. Harper. Nevertheless, they are convinced that "what man makes he can also master."

They Got By Only By Skin Of Their Thumb

Two officers at Fort Benning picked up two soldiers thumbing their way into nearby Columbus the other night. One of the officers, Col. William H. Hobson, commanding officer of the post, asked the boys if they didn't know it was against the regulations to thumb rides.

"Sure," said the soldiers, "but it's okay if the MP's don't catch you."

The Colonel then introduced the other officer who happened to be Maj. Willie D. Veal, provost marshal. The enlisted men gulped and remained quiet. The commanding officer and the provost marshal, intending anyway to inspect the downtown police station, drove up in front of the building, and the boys became rigid.

As the officers got out, Colonel Hobson turned to the soldiers and smiled, "Have a good time tonight."

More Wac's Join First Regiment

Colonel Robert H. Lord, Commanding Officer, has announced the addition of 13 Wac's, including such administrative specialists as stenographers, book-keepers, typists and file clerks, to 1st Student Training Regiment Headquarters.

Parachute Paragraphs

SGT. FOUNTAIN MEADOWS

The parachute jump, truthfully, is a small part of the over-all work of the Trooper. That fact, however does not lessen the fact that jumping out of an airplane in full flight is just about as spectacular an action as can be found. It is also as complex a psychological process as can be imagined. The reactions of the individual are a purely personal thing which have been lazily lumped under the label "sweating." That's not really what it is at all. Most of the time you probably won't sweat. You won't sweat but, man, you do an awful lot of thinking. You never knew you had so many things to think about. Nobody could ever accuse you of being a thinker—and yet here you are thinking about everything under the sun. You think about rumors and about facts. You think pretty much about yourself. You wonder what you'll do. You wonder how you'll act—whether you'll remember all the things so much care has been spent putting over to you in the school. You worry, talk to yourself, ridicule yourself, snap at yourself and then the comfortable, warm thought comes to you that you have the best equipment in the world and it works. Then you look at yourself in the mirror and you say, aloud perhaps, "You can do it—other men have—lots of them—and if they can do it, you can." And, by heaven, you do it!

T-5 Russell Schaefer and Pfc. Cecil Adams are two men in the First Academic Co. of the Parachute School. There are several hundred men, jumpers and non-jumpers, in the company so perhaps your wondering why I single these two men out for this column. Well, because it seems to me that men who do what they have just done, and there are many others, deserve commendation (if that is what this is) and congratulation. Pretty well over a year ago both these men volunteered for the Paratroops and came down here to Benning to get their training. They started in "A Stage," went through "B" and part of "C Stage"—then something happened. It is hard to explain but it happens and when it does there just isn't anything that can be done about it. Sometimes it is physical—other times mental—but at any rate they withdrew from jump training and did not qualify. A year ago they were assigned as non-jumpers to the company where they worked until about a month ago. Then they requested and were granted permission to go back in training. They did and without a hitch or slip went through the jump course, making their four day and one night jumps and qualifying. Think it over—put yourself in their place—would you do it? Undeniably it takes plenty to jump out of a plane. But after you have had to quit once and then you go back and do it, call it what you will, Me? I say it's about as sure of case of guts as you will find in these parts.

Small but dynamic Sgt. Roy Allard comes through again. It was the day of the students second jump, Tuesday, and he wasn't due to make it until later in the day. So, as is customary and necessary, he was given a red flag along with instructions to stop all automobile traffic past the hangars when jumpers were crossing to emplane. He was shown the spot at which he would work. Later, as the activity of jumping began, it was found that traffic had not been cut off as prescribed. The soldier with the red flag was sought out—that is he was looked for. But hide nor hair could not be found. The car-stopping job was taken over by instructors. Some time later a red flag was seen trembling back and forth out on the landing strip where chutist-filled planes were taking off. It was our man who had somehow gotten slightly mixed-up. He was hurriedly retrieved from the field and questioned about what had happened and why he had not followed his orders. Standing at attention the student gazed wide-eyed ahead of himself and answered "Honestly, sir, I don't know why I was out there or what happened." Yes, there is something to think about in a jump. P. S. He made his jump and 3 more to qualify.

Before he came to The Infantry School's 1st Student Training Regiment in August, 1st Lieutenant John G. Taylor, of Mount Carmel, Ill., sure got around: between 1929 and 1943 he served in the Navy, Field Artillery, Air Forces, Paratroops, and Infantry. He also covered ground, or water, more specifically, since it was on Navy duty—Central America, the Pacific, and China.

Son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam L. Taylor of Morganfield, Kentucky, he first caught the wanderlust while a senior at Morganfield High school. Hearing the call of the deep, he stayed home long enough to receive his diploma in 1929, then lost little time joining the bluejackets.

Taylor was assigned to the Special Service Squadron, then stationed off Central America to promote better relations with those Latin republics. Having become an electrician's mate, he was sent ashore in 1931 to help keep order in Panama City during riots there. The following year, when a tidal wave devastated San Salvador, he was a member of a relief party providing food and medical attention to the stricken populace.

Having overrun Manchuria, Japanese armies were threatening Shanghai early in 1932. By way of Panama, Pearl Harbor, Midway, Wake, Guam and Manila, Taylor's ship, loaded with ammunition and stripped for action, steamed into the mouth of the Yangtze. Throughout that earlier China crisis, its powerful Navy radio provided American headquarters in embattled Shanghai with direct communication to Washington.

FOUR YEARS AFLOAT

Globe-trotting Taylor returned to his blue-grass home after four year afloat. In 1933 he enlisted in the 138th Field Artillery, Kentucky National Guard, and rose to instrument sergeant in a battery commander's detachment. He made ground surveys and plotted firing data during summer maneuvers at Fort Knox.

Came Selective Service, and April 1941 Taylor was inducted, sent to Camp Forrest, Tenn., and assigned to the 131st Infantry, which has recently moved to Fort Benning. Four months later his superior officers discharged him, discovering that because of seven years previous service, he had been erroneously inducted.

Back to his civilian travels on behalf of Louisville's Belknap went Taylor. But Pearl Harbor brought him running again to the recruiting sergeant.

He volunteered for the Army Air Forces and, after training for six months at Jefferson Barracks, Saint Louis, Missouri, was chosen to attend Infantry OCS at Fort Benning. He was graduated as a 2nd Lieutenant, Infantry, in September 1942.

At Camp Croft, S. C., until March 1943, he commanded a rifle platoon and taught combat intelligence. Promoted to 1st lieutenant that month Taylor was assigned to command Headquarters Company of the air base security battalion at Camp Buttner, N. C. Via the Parachute School, he came to the 1st Student Training Regiment three months ago.

Lieutenant Taylor rarely bothers to unpack his luggage, these days. During his brief stay in the 1st S.T.R., he's already served as tactical officer with the 17th, 18th, and now the 13th Company. Whither next, Lieutenant?

People want the right kind of world for their children to grow up in. Well, that starts with the right kind of home.

Bosom Companions Finally Reunited In 7th Armored

Two inductees who have been with one another since induction and two who only met once since sworn in to the U. S. Army, have been happily reunited in the 7th Armored Division, since the division pulled into garrison at Fort Benning.

Many are the times that T-5 Art Higgins, of the 340th Armored Field Artillery, and T-5 Earl Hoover, of Service Company, 48th Armored Infantry Battalion, yearned to see one another. Soldier Higgins is from Evans Mills, New York, Hoover from Evans Mills, New York, only one-half a mile away. The pair left Fort Niagara, N. Y., together March 13, 1942, and were separated after 10 years of knowing one another.

It happened at the PX, a night or so ago, T-5 Higgins and T-5 Hoover readily recognized each other. After almost two years, the meeting and meaning of it all was understandable.

Sgt. Frank Walker, of Service Company, 17th Tank Battalion, and T-5 Floyd Tiley, of the same company are the fortunate ones. They were inducted together from Newark, N. J., on February 10, 1942, have gone all the way together. They're still in the same company, these Newark, New Jersey, "luckies."

BRILL PROMOTED

The promotion of Donald R. Brill from 2nd lieutenant to 1st lieutenant was announced here recently by Col. Henry J. Hunt, Jr., commanding officer of the 300th Infantry Regiment, in which Lt. Brill is serving as 4th Platoon leader, Co. I. Upon entering active duty he was first sent to Camp Wolters, Texas where he served from September 1941 to September 1942. At that time, he was selected to attend the Infantry Officer's Candidate School at Fort Benning.

Tyranny, Like Hell, Not Easily Conquered

Too many soldiers in our Army complain of the hardships they must endure and of the privations they must suffer because of this war.

Too many civilians of our country begrudge the rationing of gas or other luxuries because they are inconvenienced and cannot live in the same manner to which they were accustomed.

That is because Americans have been inclined for many years to take everything for granted. The precious heritage of freedom to most of them has merely become a grant of a convenient God who has seen fit to bless them for no clearly understandable reason.

But all that America is, and has, was won through the trial of blood. Our freedom had its foundations in the dead of Bunker Hill; was given life at Yorktown; and renewed at Bettysburg, at Manila, at the Marne—and now at a score of battle-fronts scattered about the world.

All that we have was not presented gratis on a silver platter. It was fought for. Only our predecessors were fighting for the land alone. Our armies are battling now for more than just land—they are fighting for their homes, their families, their possessions, their businesses, their many freedoms, their mode of government—in short, they are fighting now for everything.

Those who rant about ill-fitting clothes, poor food, or uncomfortable living quarters might read their history books about an episode that took place at a little place called Valley Forge. It involved a small Federal force under the leadership of George Washington.

The men had practically no food, and their clothes were in tatters. The weather was bitterly cold, and the bandaged unshod feet of many left tracks of blood in the snow. They advanced until they could go no farther—and then they gritted their teeth, and continued to fight back.

Yet these men had not a fraction of the many things we have to fight for. We have inherited the product of their sacrifice—Freedom—plus many other things; and still have the audacity to shy at making small sacrifices because they add to our inconvenience.

Having something is only a fight half won. Keeping it is a permanent battle when it is something that the forces of tyranny would destroy.

This war may be tough for some of us. But if we can always keep in mind what we are fighting for—and what we are fighting against—the greatest sacrifice will seem too small.

At Valley Forge, when the future perhaps seemed blackest, the words of Thomas Paine brought before the men a vivid picture of why they were suffering such hardship—and was one of the most important factors in keeping the Federal forces together and prodding them on to their ultimate victory.

Those words should be similarly inspiring to us now. For, as Paine pointed out...

"These are the times that try men's souls. The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country; but he that stands it now deserves the love and thanks of man and woman. Tyranny, like hell, is not easily conquered, yet we have this consolation, the harder the conflict the more glorious the triumph! It is dearness only that gives everything its value. It would be strange indeed if so celestial an article as Freedom should not be highly rated."

Sgt. James Tuite,
300th Infantry.

Be A Self-Censor And Aid Victory

In October of 1914—during the early days of World War I—the British warship, "Audacious", was sunk by German submarine action off the coast of northern Ireland.

As the survivors straggled ashore, in plain view of onlookers, it might have been thought that the enemy knew of the sinking or would soon learn of it.

Such proved not to be the case. Actually, the Germans admitted later that they did not learn of the sinking of the "Audacious" by one of their submarines until four years after the action occurred—in 1918.

Those who were entrusted with military information concerning the sinking of the British naval unit had safeguarded this information well. They had not told.

Speaking on May 14 against the background of the unparalleled fury of World War II, President Franklin D. Roosevelt said to the American people:

"We have not yet won this war and we must not withhold any human effort in fighting it!"

Continuing, the President said:

"Every man, woman and child must continue to realize that this is an individual, as well as a national battle!"

With Hitler's "Fortress Europe" on one side, and Japan's "Greater Asia" on the other, grim days lie ahead for this country and her Allies, days which must be put to the best possible use.

Maximum effort will be required. Likewise, maximum care will be needed in the safeguarding of all military information—so that enemy sources may be prevented from learning of our strength, weapons, dispositions, plans and intentions.

Silence means security. Security means the stoppage of all leaks."

Violations of security measures either in conversation or in written communication are disastrous in consequence.

We must protect the lives of our fighting men; the success of our military operations; and the future freedom of our country by observing absolute secrecy concerning every item of military information which the enemy might use.

Make it a firm habit to become security-minded. SELF-CENSORSHIP AIDS VICTORY!

With Strength Mobilized We Face Our Destiny

In the early days of our country, when New England first blossomed out as a great industrial center, there were two conflicting elements in our population: The aggressive and the non-aggressive. The aggressive group was composed of men who were restless, adventuresome, and, as a rule, highly imaginative. They were discontented with the routine of a static life, which, they believed, offered them little possibility of raising above their circumstances and challenging the mysteries of the unknown. The non-aggressive group consisted of men who had the qualities of dependability, consistency, and sound, conservative judgment. On the whole, they were much more able to adjust themselves to a stabilized way of living.

It was fairly obvious that the temperament of the aggressive group and the situation in which they found themselves were incompatible. However, when the West was opened up for exploitation, the wild, surging emotions of the group burst forth. In the open fields, the vast forests, the boom towns, they found their peace. And back East, in the manufacturing district, the strong, stable, conservative people, no more annoyed with the disturbances of the aggressive group, went at their work with renewed vigor and happiness. In this way the best qualities of all the elements of our population were totally harnessed for the good of the individual and the country.

The situation in which many units in Fort Benning find themselves today is analagous, in many respects, to that in which the New England section faced in the 1800s. We have our aggressive group, that is, those men who are very eager for combat duty; and we have our non-aggressive group of those steady men who are better adapted for work of an academic nature. And as the opening of the West offered an outlet for the first group in the 19th century, so will the influx of members of the Women's Army Corps allow the vigorous elements of our present aggressive group to serve best their country—on the field of battle.

Today we face the limitations necessarily imposed upon us by a country which has not yet had time to fully mobilize the power of its boundless resources.

Tomorrow we face our destiny.

Sgt. Leonard Summers,
Hq. Co., Academic Regiment

Yep, They Call Me Long-Haired; I Like It

I guess you can call me long-haired...'cause these are the things I like: The softness of music, and the people quiet, and me, silent...and then the surge of the violins and the auditorium all-filled with a pulsing beauty . . . Call me long-haired...

The warm darkness of a movie house, and the soft voices of the actors who are not actors... The soft sound of rain soaking into the leaves of the trees...and it's the last days of Autumn ...The easy walk of girls in Summertime; the easy laughter...the beautiful laughter...Call me long-haired...

The quiet faces of the subway riders at four in night...over. The mad, rushing voices of the the morning...quiet and sad...the gay, seeking crowds on Times Square; bubbling mad...New Year's Eve. The silent greyness...silent New Year's day...Call me long-haired...

The tensed hush of the mob at the football game...and then the roar. Like a caged animal loosed...The soft snoring of your dog, flat against the radiator...and outside it's snow...The soak of the sun into you; and Coney Island packed with voices and bodies...and sparkling-quiet ocean...The chlorine of the pool at Brighton snogging up your nose; and Judy dripping and laughing...big and outlined against the red sun ...Guess you can call me long-haired...

The swell of music and Toscanini singing mad against it...and deep in the jungle of you, you're singing mad with him...The beer going stale in your head, and your eyes feeling loaded and glassy; and your legs turning into rubber...The strong feel of movement when the wind rushes you down the street; and you start to run with it, clean-limbed like a god. The gods the Greeks spieled about. And the beer hits into you again; suddenly, like a fist...and your stomach starts headedness again; and you smile the next time you see your girl, 'Yeah, I guess I was kind of stinko the other night.' And Judy starts to smile. 'You were.'

...Guess you can call me long-haired 'cause these are the things I like.

Pfc. Aleon Shapiro,
176th Infantry.

Four great military powers—the United States, Great Britain, Russia and China—have pledged unity in action. Four great moral powers—honesty, discipline, loyalty and unselfishness—are all that are now needed to make the pact a fact.

War, in many quarters, has brought the "return to religion." Peace, as history shows, is more likely to bring a return to selfishness. We only pray God history will not repeat itself.

Rumors Is Smelly Things:--

THEY CAUSE MORE TROUBLE THAN A WASHING MACHINE

Rumors is stinky things!!!... They cause more trouble than rotten eggs in a washing machine!! What's a rumor?...Ya just ups to a Yale man one time an tell him that after he graduates...and wit three more points...he is eligible fer Hahvahd...Ho! Ho! Do they cause trubble?...Wall . . . I was just a rumor once't...And now, me little Frying Fortress sez 'I turned out worse'n midnight cockroaches in tha sugarbowl!!!

Y'know?...they's more monkey bizins in rumors than a boatload of pineapples coming from Greenland!!...Hitler knows that...and iffen youse are gonna listen to him ...I betcha he could sell ya a prefabricated out house in New York City!!! . . . Hitler's agints would convince ya that wimmen wit 4 kids and wit no husband will be drafted in 1945!!!...They is oily guys...

Next time somebody tells ya a rumor...ask him or her to prove it! Tha only way ya can believe a rumor is to see it happen yerself!!!...S'posin yer first sgt. walked into a filling station where ya was spoutin off because ya heard there was a jeep accident and tha sarge got kilted????!??... Ya didn't see it yerself!!!...Ya should of seed it yerself first, Bub!!!...I'm tellin ya...Ya'd lose yer face faster than a pumpkin day after Halloween!!!..

Rumors make things all phooey like a coupla race horses wit their tails tied together...They help yer nervous system like finding a marble in Junior's soup!!!...The enemy sez we is a soft race'n that we believe everything we hear... They sends us rumors that tha Checks and tha Greeks were varry varry happy to become a part of tha great Reach, or Reich...Yeah, sure...They sez tha Checks is saying Hitler is tha "Pappy of Future Checkslovoakia...

Yep, oh, sure...illegitimate!!!... That jerk is History's worst travelling salesman!! Hell, he couldn't sell two bobby pins to Weellesly Girl's College!!...

Here's an example of what happens with a rumor...this is the true story..."Sgt. Slips and breaks leg while helping blind lady cross street"...Hitler's agent No. 1 sez he heard that some sgt. broke his arm helping some gal cross a street...Agent No. 2...some chick made a sgt. slip and break his leg downtown . . . Agent No. 3...sez some lady put a sgt. in tha hospital cause he made a crack about her slip!!!...Agent No. 4...sez Heavens to gracious!..A body can't even walk downtown anymore 'cause some soldier will molest you. Did you hear about that sgt...etc., etc....Agent No. 5... I heard that tha post is passing a restriction law to keep soldiers offen tha streets after dark!!!????!! Seewhutimean?

There's a reason why I personilly feel that sensitive about rumors..'cause last week I gets a cold and somebody sez he heard that radio pills would cure me cold...He wasn't kiddin...Those pills are 20 horsepower, 500,000 watt output, with a frequency wave of 3 million kilocycles!!! . . They was quite a bit of voltage that hits me tha next morning... So I just takes tha steps five at a time going downstairs to our midnight "day room"...Unfortunately their was a kernel what was coming up tha stairs at tha same time I was going down 'em and wit no parachute on!!!...So tha kernel nacherally calls me back and practises a after-dinner speech on me...Later, I just told the boys that it would be much better to take those radio pills on weekends only...or else put tha stirways "off limits" fer kernels... Now, this little incident started a rumor amongst me friends and buddies!! And they ain't nice rumors...Let's stop takin up that collection to buy me a Christmas present of Dooley's disposable diedees...huh?!!

Chaplain's Corner...

THE PATHOS OF DISTANCE
Chaplain F. M. Thompson

In a book, "The Pathos of Distance," the writer is quite disturbed over the thought that men and women who wrought worthily in their day and generation, if remembered, were remembered by some trifling act or a piece of folly, as though all we knew of Washington was the incident connected with his father's cherry tree.

But the pathos of distance is not the distance in time. We are not very much concerned as to the opinion of posterity. Nor is it found in the distance in space. It is a commonplace to observe that one may be more lonely in the midst of a great city, surrounded by multitudes than away on a desert, apart from all human habitation. No, the real pathos of distance is the distance of one life from another life, the isolation of soul.

Atoms, science tells us, never touch one another, they only seem to touch. They come so close then another force sets in which repels. So in life we only seem to touch. We clasp hands, but not hearts, we live alone. We bear our own pain, school our own hearts, fight our own battles, shape our own destiny and go out into the unknown alone.

Now this is a dour picture. It's the picture that Longfellow must have had in mind when he wrote:

"How often Oh how often
I had wished that the ebbing tide
Would bear me away on its bosom
O'er the ocean wild and wide."

But that's not the whole picture. There is another side and the poet enters into it. He becomes conscious as he stands on the bridge that he is not alone, that the bridge is thronged with people hurrying to and fro. Now he sings:

"But now it is fallen from me,
It is buried in the sea,
And only the sorrow of others,
Throws its shadow over me.
For I think of the many thousands,
Of care encumbered men,
Each bearing his burden of sorrow
Has crossed the bridge since then."

In identifying himself with others he had found the good way, the recompense for isolation, the cure for loneliness.

People who don't like their work often think they have the wrong job. It may be just the wrong purpose in their job.

There are no non-producers. Those who make nothing else at least make plenty of trouble.

Why do so many people object to "losing face"? Most of us should be glad to get a new one.

Care for people, not what they care about you.

When ordinary folk live the lives they expect their representatives to live, they will get the statesmen they need.

Kay Says—

THIS IS THE (GIFT) SEASON THAT TRIES HER VERY SOUL

This is the time of year when reason and a sense of humor fail me, when friends comment on my more than usual surliness and my family lives in daily fear of arousing a fickle temper. For this is the time of year when I do my Christmas shopping. From now until December 10, when Uncle Sam advises us all Christmas gifts should be mailed, life will be insupportable for all those around me.

I shudder to think of the assortment of gifts I have inflicted on friends and relatives in the past, and the even weirder assortment I will no doubt bestow on them in the future. Get me in a shopping mood, and reason forsakes me. Aunt Kate, who abhors sewing, is presented with a delightful little box of vari-colored thread. Uncle Harry, that quaint old snuff-chewing character, finds himself the owner of a set of matched pipes. My rowdy, ten-year-old nephew more than likely opens a box containing a cuddle doll, while sweet little Jane is overwhelmed with her gift of a pair of boxing gloves.

Male relatives must have a number of unwearable clothes by this time, hidden in some bureau drawer until sheer desperation forces them to wear them. My taste in men's pajamas, socks, and ties is atdrocious, and my knowledge of sizes is even worse. All these things I realize until the Christmas season comes around. Then there is something irrestiable about a gaudy tie, a pair of ornately decorated pajamas, or socks with clocks.

We had a system for that uncontrollable impulse in my immediate family. Ten days before Christmas dad would stock up with wearing apparel, thus making reasonably certain that he'd get a few cherished books in his Christmas stocking. Mother was easy to shop for. We all knew that she would receive any present gratefully, and would promptly exchange it for something she really wanted. The kid brother made out his personal Christmas list, presented a copy to each member of the family, and hoped for the best.

Prospective recipients could avoid all this travail if they'd only make their wants known before hand. If grandma would only confess that she's tired of getting long-sleeved flannelette night-gowns, and always had a secret yen for a set of sheer black unmentionables. If second-cousin Maizie would only confide that caramels and false teeth are incompatable. If brother Tom would only divulge that he can't abide light fiction, and would like something he could really sink his teeth into. If friend Charlie would only tell me that he stopped drinking when his first baby was born, and is getting a bit tired of cocktail sets and miniature bars.

I think I'll write a letter to each of my prospective victims, stating my position frankly. Why not, I'll say, save wear and tear on all of us by just forgetting the whole thing. You buy war bonds or stamps equal in value to the present I generally send you. Wrap it up in tissue and ribbon and consider it your gift from me. I'll do the same, and everyone will be happy. And a Merry Christmas to you.

Sgt. McDonald's Basket

BY S-SGT. TOM McDONALD

This afternoon while Colonel Swampwater was working in his office and at the same time keeping one eye posted to watch through his half open door to see that Sawgrass and myself didn't get into his fresh order of "Evergreen Mint" super gum, Private Sawgrass lifted his feet off of my desk, yawned and said:

"Sergeant, you ain't heard no rumors goin' around about no ratings being open, has yuh?"

"What's that, Sergeant."

"Well it seems they started to replace him with a W.A.C. the other day and so he just packs his barracks bag and starts home."

"Did the M. P.'s get him, Sargent?"

"Not hardly, Sawgrass. Capt. Whitecigar intercepted him down at the bus station and explained to him that he wasn't free to go home just 'cause he'd been replaced by a W.A.C."

"I wouldn't be too sure, Sawgrass. Strange things happen in this army."

"You ain't just talkin', Sargent. I remember an incident what happened back in my old company fourteen year ago."

"What was that, Sawgrass."

"You mean that he lost his mind?"

"Yuh, that's it, Sargeant. He went PLUMB LOCO and didn't nobody discover the change for nigh on six months."

"How did they finally tell that he was crazy, Sawgrass?"

"It were very simple, Sargint. One day he caught a recruit who wasn't on line for inspection and he smiled at him and said, 'Soldier, I don't want to seem rude but a few of your belongings were a little out of order this morning and I think you should straighten them out properly before the next inspection.'"

"Indeed," I replied.

"Yes, Sargent, that recruit were so surprised at the kind words he fainted out cold right on the spot. When the C. O. got to the situation explained to him, he sent for one of them brain doctors at the Aid Station and the first thing we knowed they had the first sargint in a straight jacket. Yes, sir, it's plain uncanny the things that happen in this man's army."

"Yes, Sawgrass, it certainly is," I agreed, as I looked through Colonel Swampwater's door and saw him counting chewing gum wrappers on the office adding machine.

K. P. Horrors

The rosy fingers of dawn reached across the sky and Pfc. Joe Nelson fidgeted nervously. This was not just any morning to him. The first hint of sunrise was ominous, and he had been warding off impatient sleep just watching for that glow in the east—wondering when it would come—and fearing that each minute, that each second, would be THE minute and THE second.

Now it had come. A cold sweat broke out on Joe's forehead. It wasn't that he was afraid. No, not afraid. He had faced death many times in his life. There was that train wreck. And the time he was thrown off the horse and nearly trampled to death.

But this wasn't like that. This was different. He could face death bravely under other circumstances—even cheerfully. Only, there comes a time in a man's life, he told himself, when he fears something greater than just the Here-after; than leaving this life.

Joe was fully dressed. He had not even taken his clothes off before going to sleep, for he knew what it would be like in the morning. Sometimes it happens quickly. Sometimes you don't even have time to dress. Oh God, thought Joe, if I could only get my mind on something else.

By this time the sun was pushing the blackness ahead of it. Joe pulled out a cigarette; nervously lit it and almost dropped the match from his shaking fingers. It's getting late, he told himself. What will my buddies think if I back out now? It's for them I'm doing this. I can't back out. I've got to do it. I've got to.

In the half light of dawn Joe advanced—quietly, stealthily. He could see his objective loom up in shillouette only twenty-five yards away. This is the payoff, Joe told himself. Then doubt began to assail his mind. Will I come through it? he wondered; will I last it out?

But like a good soldier he gritted his teeth, threw caution to the winds and charged.

Up the steps into the enemy territory he advanced, bursting into the glaring white light. Then, bravely and calmly he faced the leering enemy.

"Okay, sergeant", said Joe proudly, calmly, "I'm reporting for K. P."

Staff Sgt. Horace O. Jackson, demon trumpeter of the Reception Center Orchestra, was hurting the other night as the boys kept a crowd happy, despite the cold, at the Patio Grill. From what we could gather, he went to a dance and blamed if every one of his girl friends, all unbeknownst to each other of course, didn't go and sit close together. So he couldn't be seen talking to any one of them without the others getting nasty.

Sgt. John Holland says he likes pecans, but he doesn't like guys that put them in his bed. Why, Sergeant, we're perfectly innocent.

Main Chapel Plans Thanksgiving Note On Sunday Program

At the main chapel Sunday the morning choir will sing a Thanksgiving anthem "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem" by Maunder.

The offertory solo will be rendered by Mrs. Margaret Wildfoster, wife of Lt. Otto Wildfoster. She will sing "How Lovely Are Thy Dwellings" by Liddle. Mrs. Wildfoster is a pupil of John C. Wilcox and Miss Hinkler of Chicago. She has been a member of the Chicago Grand Opera chorus and the Chicago Bach choir.

The evening choir will sing "Father We Thank Thee" by Bach. Recent additions to the choir are Dione Henderson, Bobby Jane Freund, and Donald Ruff.

The senior choir needs more tenors and basses and the children's choir more boys. Rehearsals Friday 6:30 and 8 p. m.

The cause of the sinking of the Maine never has been discovered.

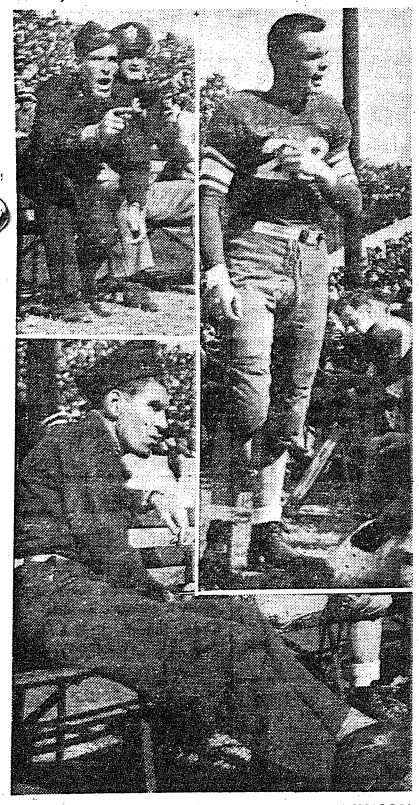
Tigers Win Service Conference Laurels



Rival Tutors Rant, Rave As Spirits Sober Sabers

Radiomen Win Hoop Battle, 32-31; Forced To Use Entire Squad Of Six

Basketball made its "debeaut" the other day in a game between radio operators of the 24th Company and motor wreckers of the 19th, of the Infantry School's 1st Student Training Regiment. The radiomen won 32-31!!! And they had only six guys on the squad . . . That's a record for stamina or something. And only one was a paratrooper!!!

It was a swell, fast game all the time . . . The victors were trailing all through the first half . . . and a little excitement during the lull between halves convinces us that our basketball league is gonna be a honey this year!

At the whistle, ending the first half, Pfc. Volkowitz, 24th Company manager, ran out on the court with a ladder under his arms . . . He placed it under the 19th Company basket, climbed up with a determined look on his puss and put his big arm straight up through the old hoop . . . He was looking for a piece of plate glass that maybe the 19th Company put on top of the basket to keep his boys' shots from going through!!!

Yessir! . . . With just a few seconds left in the game, Rachette let one fly from the center of the floor and that was worse than the last tetanus shot for the 19th Co. boys. That one Lobbo put things on ice like a fish marekt for the little gang of diddydumdumdiddies!

The 19th Co. played fine ball all the way . . . and next time these two teams face each other, or anybody else . . . you better be on hand because there'll be more commotion than guys banging their wall-lockers on that night of pay-day!!!

TIS Cagers Start Play December 16

56 Games Slated In First Half Of Circuit

Fifty-six games are scheduled for the first half of The Infantry School Basketball League race which will get underway December 16th and continue through January 16th, Maj. Hank Gowdy, Special Service officer of The Infantry School announced this week. The schedule calls for a double round-robin among the eight teams in the circuit.

Following a 10-day lay-off at the conclusion of the first half, a similar schedule will be followed for the second half.

Games will be played three times each week—on Tuesday and Thursday nights and on Sunday afternoons. They will be played in the Main Post gymnasium and at the Harmony Church Sports Arena. The schedule calls for double-headers throughout, the first games of the night contests to start at 7:30 and the second games at 9. On Sundays, the first games will be played at 2 o'clock and the second games at 3:30.

Five of the eight teams will represent units in the Harmony Church Area including the 4th, 5th and 6th Training Regiments, the 131st Infantry and Third Student Training Regiment.

Main Post units represented will be the 176th and 300th Infantry and the Academic Regiment. The 1942-43 championship 2nd STR Leaders have been disbanded because of the inactivation of the Second Regiment which they represented. However, many of the players from that team will be seeing action with other units. Troy Ricks, for example, who was the floor leader of the Leaders, is now a lieutenant and will coach the Academic Regiment's Profs, runners-up to the Leaders.

Capt. Frank Croin, who coached the Leaders last year, will coach the 4th Training Regiment team this year.

The various teams in the circuit will be dotted with college stars including no few All-Americans of the last few years.

Leading the 6th Regiment Eagles will be Capt. Frank Shannon, of Wittenberg College, skipper of last year's Profs. Shannon is reported to have a 'hot club' in the making out in Harmony Club.

The Third Student Training Regiment Rifles will be piloted by Lt. Carl Ott of Ohio University assisted by Lt. Ed Moeller of Ohio State.

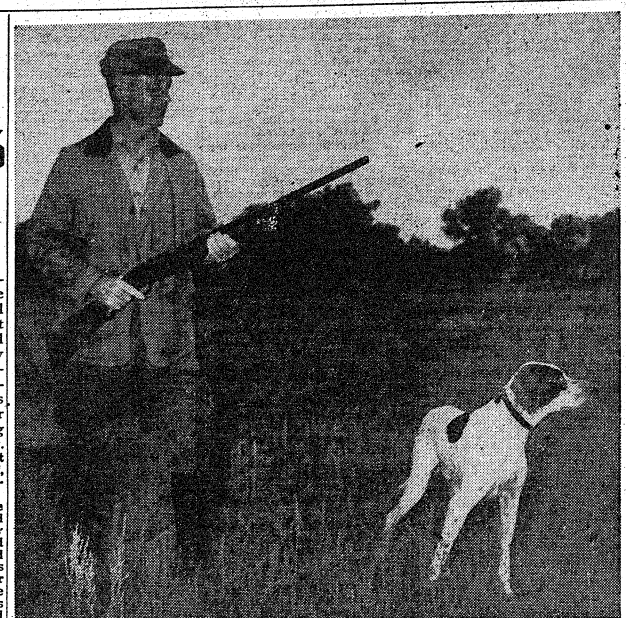
Lt. A. B. S. Palline, special service officer of the 131st, will be the temporary leader of the 131st Infantry.

Lt. Ricks, leader of the Profs. is an All-America from Delta Teachers. He will have a veteran team plus some clever newcomers around which to build this year.

The Infantry units on the Main Post will have tow fast clubs. The 300th is coached by Lt. Frank A. Hebenstreit who played last year at Creighton University in Nebraska. In addition to playing, he coached the Freshman team at Creighton. He played with the varsity in Madison Square Garden and gained All-America rating.

Another All-America in action will be Lt. Kirk Gebert of the 176th who captained Washington State in 1942. He also played in the All-Star game in Chicago.

Under War Department regulations governing Service Schools, two officers will be permitted to play at the same time on each team. The 'Open field' system will also be in force by which the number of players carried on a squad is not limited.



In the opening games, the Profs will tangle with the 6th Regiment Eagles and the 176th Spirits will meet the 300th Sabers in the Main Post Gym, Thursday, December 16th starting at 7:30. Out in Harmony Church, the opening contests will bring together the 3rd STR Rifles and the 4th Training Regiment, and the 131st Infantry and the 5th Training Regiment.

633d T. D.'s Win 66-30 Victory

Pvt. Cleo W. Foster, diminutive, red-headed, freckle-faced forward for the 653rd Tank Destroyer quintet was the big gun as his team throttled the 48th Infantrymen recently 66-20 in its first start in the 7th Armored Division basketball tournament.

Foster rippled the nets seven times for fourteen points and high scoring honors of the evening. In fact this kid was so hot he donated his first goal of the game to the Doughboys. Snaring the tap at the opening whistle Foster pulled a "Wrong Way Corrigan". He found a clear lane and laid one in without any trouble—the only hitch being the fact it was the opponents' basket.

His teammates called time, pointed out the general direction for Foster to aim in the future and Foster got hepped—and made everyone know it.

NOVEMBER DAY—MAN—GUN—AND DOG
Sergeant Tweed, Benning's best-known hunter

Sgt. Tweed Prepared For 25th Year Of Hunting At Benning

Mention of hunting is synonymous with mention of the name of Master Sergeant Thomas Tweed, chief range guard of the Infantry School Service Command at Fort Benning, who has been banging away at game during all of his 24 years at this station.

And mention of hunting also brings to mind that the game season for birds opens Saturday, November 20 and continues until March 1.

Sgt. Tweed is perhaps the best known hunter on the post, not necessarily for his prowess (which is tops because he usually bags the limit) but because of his noted hunting companions.

NOTED COMPANIONS

Down through the years since he has been here, Sgt. Tweed has hunted with General George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff of the U. S. Army (and Gen. Marshall seldom fails to talk with Sgt. Tweed during his infrequent visits here); Maj. Gen. Simon Bolivar Buckner, head of Alaskan defense; and Major Gen. Omar N. Bradley and Lt. Gen. George Patton, both now fighting in the European theater, to mention a few.

He has, in fact, hunted with virtually all high ranking officers who have been stationed at this post and been interested in hunting.

The hunting is good, hereabouts, according to Sgt. Tweed but some of the best hunting territory is now in the impact areas of the ranges where it isn't exactly healthy to go gunning for birds and small game.

GOOD ALONG CREEKS

Territory west of First Division Road and southwest of Cusseta Highway is now 'off limits' for hunting. It has been restricted as a game sanctuary although on occasions, it is opened for a few days. There is good hunting along the Ochille and Upatoi in the unrestricted areas.

The generals with whom he hunted were all good hunters, according to Sgt. Tweed. They seldom came in without getting the legal limit of kill.

ONCE WITH 29TH

Sgt. Tweed has been in the Army for 28 years and seven months. He signed up with the 29th Infantry in Panama in 1914 and stayed with that outfit for eight and a half years. The outfit was shipped back to the states and alerted for overseas duty in World War I when the Armistice was signed.

After the war, he transferred to the Infantry School Detachment and with it, continued service in the Infantry School Service Command.

Punt Return By Lamar Davis Remains Grid Feat Of Year

Great Punt Runback By Ex-Bulldog Is Considered "Tops"

BY SGT. JAMES TUITE

Every football season produces at least one outstanding feat that lingers in the memory like an unpaid debt, and this year's semester of gridiron gems, although not yet fully expended, has already given the Fort Benning fans at least one tale to pass on to their grandchildren.

The greatest single performance of the season enacted at Doughboy Stadium this year was the remarkable 150-yard, 2-minute touchdown jaunt of the 124th Gators' mighty ground gainer, Lamar Davis.

EX-GEORGIAN

Davis, who sparkplugged Georgia right into the Rose Bowl last season, was magnificent in his never-to-be-forgotten run that had 18,000 spectators weak and hoarse when the Gators lost to the 300th Sabers several weeks ago.

The Sabers already had proven to be the superior team in the game, and Ermal Allen seared his name in the minds of the thousands who jammed the stadium by ripping off consistent gains through the Gator line.

TAKES PUNT

But, backed to his own 25-yard line, Davis took the ball on a punt and started what was apparently supposed to be a wide sweep around the right side. The mighty Saber line (at least, mighty at that time) smashed through and it looked like a quick finish to the Davis travels.

Davis, confidently sidestepped the charging linemen and moved still wider toward the sidelines. The Saber backs, providing secondary defense, moved up and Davis retreated to his own 15-yard line, still moving toward the end.

"WITHDRAWAL"

Military men would say that he "withdrew to a better position", but to the grid fans who by now had written the epithet for his run, he had committed a grievous error of the gridiron and had jeopardized his team's thin chance to narrow the gap between them and victory.

Suddenly Davis wheeled and reversed his tracks. His long legs pumping like pistons, he began covering the same ground he had just left. Before him were scattered a dangerous assortment of Sabers and he was like a helpless parachutist landing on the enemy's firing range.

PLENTY CALM

Instead of losing his head, the rangy Gator was calm as a Colonel's Orderly during Guard Mount. With one hand he pointed at the man he wanted blocked out and other Gators picked them off until Davis ran clear over to the opposite side of the field.

Spaced down the field, right to the goal line, forming a shield for the speeding back were other Gators. Davis then took off the last brakes and with perfect blocking sprinted over eighty fast yards for the only score his team chalked up for the afternoon.

It was a brilliant run that required every element of good football in the book. The Gators lost the game, but Davis won a place in the memory of every exhausted, thrill-wracked football fan in the stadium who watched that run.

BY SGT. CARL NEU

Last week it was 13 out of 15 again. We seem to be in a rut on that score, but have no complaints because such a record always helps the seasonal average which has now zoomed to .824, some 13 percentage points better than Orlo Robertson of the Associated Press, reputedly one of the nation's ranking experts. The two tilts that floored us last week-end were both in the nature of upsets — Penn's loss to North Carolina, and Oklahoma's win over Missouri. Anyway, here's another crack at them with the first named team our choice.

Notre Dame vs. Iowa Seahawks—Top game of the day, but we don't see how even the Navy lads can halt that great Irish team.

L. S. U. vs. Tulane—It's up to Van Buren.

Purdue vs. Indiana—A real scrap is in store here, but the Boiler makers rate the nod in what may be an upset.

Michigan vs. Ohio State—The Buckeyes won't be so lucky this time.

Minnesota vs. Wisconsin—Poor old Badgers.

Duke vs. North Carolina—They did it before and can do it again.

Randolph Field vs. North Texas Aggies — Glenn Dobbs and Co. have too much for a good Aggie ensemble.

TPS Will Have Pair of Court League Entries

One Team Entered In Post Circuit; One In USO Loop

By PVT. JIM MacCORMACK

Fort Benning's famed Parachute School once again will be represented on the hardwoods this winter by a crack basketball team, according to pre-season indications.

When Lieut. David A. Wearley, athletic officer, issued the initial call for TPS candidates some three weeks ago, so many promising hoopsters turned up that present plans call for the school sponsoring two teams during the season.

TWO TEAMS

The "A" quintet will, of course, compete in the Fort Benning League as it did a year ago where it provided many an upset. A "B" team will operate in the Columbus USO league. Lieut. Wearley also plans to schedule several outside tilts with camps and colleges for both squads.

Sgt. S. S. Murphy, an "A" stage instructor, will tutor the big quintet, while no mentor for the USO leaguers has yet been named. Murphy has coached both semi-pro and collegiate quintets before entering the service and already has a squad well fortified with former semi-pro and collegiate stars.

EX-COLLEGIANS

Among some of the more outstanding performers jousting for positions on the Parachute School five are Van Nieda, former star forward on several crack Penn State quintets, and Youngerman, a former New York University star. Van Nieda towers six-two and possesses exceptional speed and ball-handling skill, especially on the double-pivot system. The ex-Violet is a chunky guard, superb on defense and an adept marksman from any point on the court.

Others from whom Murphy expects big things are Sidroski (Notre Dame), Picunia (Miami), Ciesla (Creighton), Hatfield (Troy State), Ardis and Charles Warren (Oregon State), and Lawrence, a star on last year's TPS court edition.

DIAMOND CHAMP

Members of the 176th Infantry's Post Championship baseball team were honored at a battalion review last week when Brig. Gen. Henry P. Perrine, commanding general of the Infantry School Troops Brigade presented them with jackets. The jackets were the awards given them by the Infantry School baseball league. They bore TIS insignia which will later be augmented by regimental insignia and championship designation.

Williams and Cheatham Pace Attack In 30-0 Victory Over Trucker Foe

The power-laden Reception Center eleven swept to the 1943 Service Conference crown last Thursday night when Macon Williams and Mike Cheatham paced the unbeaten Tigers to a crushing 30-0 triumph over the Infantry School Truck Regiment at Doughboy Stadium.

It was the third conference victory for the Tigers, while each of their other two loop rivals have already dropped two decisions. Therefore, since the R. C. machine has only one conference clash remaining, they have already sewed up the laurels for this fall.

The Rocket victory was also the fifth straight for the Tigers as they head for a possible bowl game on New Year's Day.

WILLIAMS STARS

Williams, the former Florida A. and M. All-American, smashed over for three touchdowns while Cheatham added the final two against the Infantry School gridmen.

During the first half, however, the Rockets put up the most stubborn defense that the Tigers have faced all year and the result was a stalemate at intermission.

In the final two cantos, however, the pent-up power of the Tigers broke loose, and they romped to an easy victory. Williams was the whole show in the second-half attack.

RUNS BACK KICK

The big, high-stepping fullback brought the opening kickoff of the final semester bac 58 yards to place the ball deep in Rocket territory. He then ripped off two long dashes to the 14-yard stripe from where he slashed off tackle for the score.

A few minutes later, starting from their own eight-yard line, the mighty Tigers moved 92-yards in a sustained drive with Williams bounding off tackle from the 6-yard stripe for the counter. The Body-Builder's third tally came on the second play of the final quarter on a blast over center from the two-yard line.

A poor rocket punt a few minutes later gave the Tigers possession on the Truck Regiment 28 an the Receptionists quickly pushed over another score with Cheatham carrying the oval over from the two-yard stripe.

SMITH INTERCEPTS

Then in the waning moments of the ball game, Honey Smith, the masked marvel of the Tigers, intercepted a desperate Rocket pass deep in Truck Regiment territory and carried it to teh four-yard line from where Cheatham quickly crashed for the final score of the ball game.

Besides their conference victories, the powerful Tigers have also bowled over Clark College and Florida A. and M., two of the best colored elevens in the southeast sector of the country.

This week-end, the Reception Center gridders will trek to St. Augustine, Fla., where they oppose the Lions of Florida Normal Institute in their 1943 clash with collegiate opposition.

SABERS—

but when Allen punted back, arris twisted his way down to the Saber one-yard line, thanks to a key block by Clemson's Johnny Cagle. Rogers dove over the goal and Harris converted.

The Spirits remained reasonably quiet until along in the second period when Poschner broke through and tossed Allen on fourth down on the Spirit 40-yard line. This was the signal for Waterfield to start pitching again. He tossed a strike to Ronzone who ran to the Saber 18 before being stopped by Allen. Waterfield passed again, this time to Rogers, and it was good to the two-yard line.

HIDDEN BALL PLAY

At this point Waterfield dusted off the same play on which he ran for a touchdown against the Sabers in the first game. Faking a reverse, Waterfield kept the ball and proceded without interference around his left end for a touchdown. Harris again booted the extra point.

It was a Spirit fumble which Allen recovered which put the Sabers on the touchdown trail in the third period. Allen ate up 16 yards when he reversed his field and ran after failing to find a pass receiver. This put the ball on the Spirit 36 and three plays later it was on their 29.

Again Allen dropped back to pass but couldn't spot a receiver, so he ran. With the help of nice downfield blocking, he zig-zagged down the sidelines and over the goal for a touchdown. Routt kicked the extra point.

Allen was rested up early in the fourth period but went back to work after the Spirits' Johnny Hurst of Kentucky had punted to the Saber 39. A 15-yard penalty against the Spirits, and another dazzling run by Allen when he couldn't pass, advanced the ball to the Spirits' 22.

The Sabers lost nine yards on a wide-end run around but Allen threw a long pass to Noah Mullins, who grabbed the ball on the six-yard line and raced into the end zone. Routt again converted.

Once again it was a fumble which set up a touchdown. This time Harris fumbled as he returned the kickoff and John Kulikowski recovered for the Sabers on the Spirit 35.

Allen missed connections on a pass, then ran inside left end to the Spirit 21. Bill Nowling plunged for only a yard, so Allen took to the air again and big Bute Simmons of Texas A. & M. made a great catch in the end zone for the third Saber touchdown. Routt missed the conversion.

Immediately after the kickoff Waterfield unlimbered his passing arm again and whipped an aerial to Harry Hales, who ran down the sidelines to the Saber 15-yard line. The attack bogged down, however, and the Sabers took over. Allen was forced to punt and as the game ended the Spirits were on the Saber 19-yard line after a 26-yard march.

The Spirits had a fat advantage in first downs, 15-5, and gained 174 yards from running, as compared with 121 by the Sabers. The Spirits completed 12 out of 23 passes for 197 yards while the Sabers clicked on five of 10 passes for 59 yards.

Work Is Begun On Ball Field For Rifle Nine

3rd STR Area Will Get Extensive New Athletic Layout

The long-considered plans of the Third Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School for an athletic field were a step closer to materialization this week as machinery of the Hugh McMath construction firm began the job of leveling and grading the Second Battalion drilling grounds.

While many factors such as weather and the manpower shortage make exact estimates on the length of the job virtually impossible, is is conservatively predicted that the field will be completed by the time the spring sports program of the regiment gets underway next March.

EXTENSIVE PLANS

When completed, the field probably will be the most extensive of its type in Fort Benning, capable of accommodating every type of outdoor competitive game. There will be a baseball diamond, a softball field, football gridiron, tennis courts, and a volleyball court. Even with all these activities, the field still has enough area left over for such sports as badminton which require little playing space.

Plans for the field were initiated by Lieut. Milton F. Bach, special service officer of the regiment for the past year, who currently is on leave, and have been carried forward by his successor Lieut. Edward W. Moeller, Jr. Interest and cooperation in the project have been manifested both by Col. John D. Hill, commanding officer of the regiment, and his predecessor, Col. Robert H. Lord

RIFLE FANS

Baseball fans expect the field to play a big role in building up a following for the Rifles baseball team which will take to the diamond for its second season next spring. It was difficult to acquire much supporting spirit for the team last season inasmuch as the Rifles were compelled to play all their games on The Infantry School schedule away from home.

Presently called for in the plans, however, in the erection of stands of sufficient size to hold a substantial crowd of Rifles rooters and followers of the Panther football team.

THREE CORPORALS

Immediately supervising the work are Cpls. Nicholas Rosack, Ewell Blackwell and Sidney Silverman, all of whom are attached to duty in the Special Service Office of the regiment. The three soldiers, outstanding athletes themselves, moreover have had considerable experience in the planning of recreational programs. The Service Battalion of the regiment also is doing its bit in accomplishing the project by providing details to assist the three corporals and the civilian employes.

Sportscasting

BY SGT. CARL NEU

HOW TO STICK ONE'S NECK OUT

Sportswriters have a peculiar habit along about this time of year of sticking out their necks so far that they could easily be mistaken for a Thanksgiving turkey. At any rate, it's considered the thing to do, so not wanting to be an exception, here we go.

Last week, we received a ballot from our dear friend, Romney Wheeler, southeastern sports editor of the Associated Press, requesting our help in sending in selections for an all-southeastern service eleven. Seems that this year, the AP is not only going to select mythical all-sectional and all-American elevens, but will also select mythical all-service teams incuding an All-American devoted exclusively to players on Army, Navy and Marine elevens.

We were asked to send aong our selections for the all-southeastern and mark specifically any players we thought qualified for the All-American. Capt. Bud Pollock (176th), Capt. Bob Friedlund (300th), and an Infantry School public relations representative were also asked to send along their choices.

We're sure that all four entries were probably considerably different, but just for the record, we'll print below the information sent along on our ballot. You'll probably disagree in some spots. Concur in others. At any rate, this is the way it looks from our corner, and since we saw practically only two service teams in action, our selections read like an All-Infantry School Conference team.

Poschner (176th)	E	Gilmore (300th)
Smithwick (300th)	T	Heidel (176th
Ruark (176th)	G	Routt (300th)
Witt (176th)	C	Corey (124th)
McBride (176th)	G	Arms (300th)
Cagle (176th)	T	Robinson (300th)
Simmons (300th)	E	Hales (176th)
Waterfield (176th)	QB	Peel (300th)
Allen (300th)	LH	Harris (176th)
Davis (124th)	RH	DiBlasi (300th)
Rogers (176th)	FB	Nowling (300th)

You'll notice that first team has quite a predominance of 176th gridmen. But that's probably as it should be inasmuch as the Spirits have now definitely proven their mettle on the field of battle where it counts the most. Some of the selections ma ysurprise you, but we had an honest conviction on each one. The selection of Lamar Davis might seem strange inasmuch as he played only two games here, but there's little doubt in our mind that he was the classiest wingback we've seen all year, and surely rates the nod.

The other spot that might be a shock to you is at guard. We sure hate to leave Joe Routt, the former All-American from Texas A. and M. off that first team—but even Joe himself will admit that the years creep up on a man and youth must have its fling. Ruark and McBride are fresh from college campuses and are both great stars on their own right. Furthermore, they gave absolutely peerless performances both times they opposed Routt on the stadium turf. If you really feel that Joe should be on that first-team on the basis of this year's play, then tell us which of the Spirit pair you'd leave off. Now, see how difficult this business is?

As for possible choices for an All-American Service team, we checked off Ruark and McBride along with Waterfield, Poschner and Allen. Waterfield, we think, should make it—possibly because he's more of a specialist than any of the others. In this day of the T-formation's glory, and with Notre Dame's Bertelli a sure choice for collegiate All-American, we doubt if there's a service player anywhere that can match Bob's mastery as the pilot of the tricky T-model offense. As far as we are concerned, Waterfield is equally as good as Bertelli or Luckman, and his passing record this season has been just as effective. He should make it with yards to spare.

Also, there's no doubt that Ermal Allen deserves an All-American spot, too, for his brilliant work. Only trouble is, though, that Erm i a tailback and there are a lot of great tailbacks playing service bal this year, such as Glenn Dobbs of Randolph Field's unbeaten crew and Dick Todd, the ex-Washington Redskin now with the Iowa Seahawks. Those birds will get a lot of votes because their teams have played a lot of outside competition, whereas most of Allen's votes will come strictly in the southeast.

George Poschner, who made several All-Americans as a Georgia collegian a year ago, may repeat as a soldier this time. His play has certainly been on a par if not superior to his 1942 performance. Ruark was an all-SEC choice a year ago, and certainly rates plenty of mention, while McBride, one of Notre Dame's galaxy of brilliants a year ago, is still heading towards his peak—and is one lad the selectors should do well to recognize. Bob's got another year left at Notre Dame after the war, and may become a bona fide All-American before he hangs up the moleskins. Cullen Rogers, too, has been outstanding, but what chance does he have even for all-southwestern against Norm Standlee (Stanford and Chicago Bears) who performed this year for the Camp LeJeune Marines.

Anyway, it's lots of fun picking mythical teams, and if you don't take them too seriously there's no harm in it. Remember that, after all, it's only one man's opinion!

BASEBALL'S FINAL GESTURE

To most folks, the late great 1943 baseball season has been long dead—but to this corner it didn't really come to a close until last Friday afternoon along about 5:30 when the 176th Spirits, the post champs, received the ultimate tribute. It came in the form of a military tribute in which the entire regiment passed in review before Brig. Gen. Henry L. Perrine, commanding general of the Infantry School Troops Brigade. And alongside of General Perrine stood the entire Spirit squad, under full arms and standing rigidly at attention. Previously, they had individually been awarded a warm jacket, suitably inscribed with "Follow Me," which was emblematic of their Infantry School title.

It seemed quite fitting that the Spirit baseballers should be privileged to stand the review along with General Perrine, who in many ways, was the "father" of the fast Infantry School League. Not only that, but the school troops brigade C. O. was surely the loop's most ardent rooter. He never missed a game and he was strictly impartial. Justifiably, he was proud of every team in the league. The review idea also struck us as being an admirable one because of its morale-building value within the Spirit regiment. Baseball all year was a tremendous morale-builder all over the post, but this final gesture to that great Spirit team impressed us as being most praiseworthy and a striking example of baseball's rightful place in the war effort.

International Soccer

SOCCER OFTEN has acted as an international interpreter and last Saturday afternoon was no exception when the crack 176th Infantry eleven of the Infantry School visited the Prisoner of War Camp for a tilt with the Italians quartered there. Shown above are Al Leckie and Bill Robinson of the Spirits in æpre-game huddle with the Italian captain. Below is some fact action near the Italian goal posts with Leckie (in dark shirt) in the thick of the scrimmage. (Signal Lab Photos by Pvt. Anthony Carrington.)

Italian Prisoners Will Meet 176th Soccermen In Stadium on Sunday

One of the most unusual sports events of the present war will be offered to fans on Sunday afternoon when the Infantry School's crack 176th Infantry soccer eleven entertains the Italian War Prisoners in Doughboy Stadium at 2 o'clock with military personnel invited to sit in on the proceedings.

The same teams clashed last Saturday at the local Prisoner of War Camp and the Europeans scored a 4-1 victory over the Spirits in a well-played game.

The Italian players, many of whom have played professional soccer in Europe prior to the war, displayed a sharp passing attack and a durable defense as they turned back the Spirits.

SCORE EARLY

Early in the fray, they tallied on a 20 yard boot by a former Italian soldier from Rome who was captured by American forces in Sicily about the middle of July.

Later in the first half, the 176th booters began to roll, culminating in a cross shot by Al Kinslow for the first Spirit marker. Play for the remainder of the half was fairly even until a foul was called on a Spirit back and a native of Reggiaemelia made the penalty shot on a hard drive past the Spirit goalie, Orlanda Cesca.

Throughout the first half, the play was highlighted by fine defensive action of Steve Gimak and Frankie Schultz, fullbacks for the 176th club.

RALLY IN VAIN

With the count 2 to 1, the soldier eleven tried in vain to break through the prisoners' secondary only to have the fullbacks break up the plays. The Italians, however, continued their offensive play as they scored their third tally of the game and a soccerite from Milan, ended the scoring for the day as he shot the sphere from close range to put the count at 4 to 1.

The game, which was witnessed by some 2,500 American and Italian fans is believed to be the first of its nature played within the continental limits of the United States during the present conflict.

ADDED FEATURE

As an added feature of Sunday's game, there will be a middle distance run between the halves, featuring a former member of the 1932 Italian Olympic team which competed in Los Angeles, California.

Sideline Snapshots

By SGT. JAMES TUITE

The Sabers are campaigning for a revision of the football rules following last Sunday's game against the Spirits at Doughboy Stadium. They want the football games to be only three periods long, starting with the second period. Anyone who saw the game Sunday will understand the reason. . . .

The Spirits looked so good in that first period that Coach Bud Pollock was going to send in the drum majorettes from Jordan High School. The Sabers could have amassed a small fortune in the opening quarter by charging the Spirits admission at their goal line. . . .

Ten minutes after the game started, the Sabers were looking bluer than their uniforms. The yardage rolled up against them in that short time looked like the national debt, but no one accused Roosevelt of having anything to do with it, for a change. . . .

Anyone could have seen what the Sabers needed to take the contest. Just four Allens in the backfield and seven Routts on the line. But anyone who saw the game must at least give the Big Blue team an A for effort. They were magnificent in their comeback. . . .

Mrs. Bob Waterfield, minus her fur coat, did not sit with the G. I.'s of the 300th this game as she did the last fracas. Instead she brightened the reserved box of the Spirit officers' wives. That night in the Saber barracks, 2,650 pin-up pictures of Jane Russell came down, and Linda Darnell went up. . . .

Panthers Battle Rockets In Night Tilt On Friday

Service Title of Infantry School At Stake As Rivals Meet Once More

The Truck Regiment's Rockets and the Panthers of the Third Student Training Regiment of the Fort Benning Service Football Conference will collide in Doughboy Stadium tomorrow night at 8 o'clock for the second time this season.

As far as the Conference title is concerned, the Reception Center Tigers have that tucked safely away. But the Panthers and Rockets can battle for the championship of the Infantry School units which were represented in that Conference.

In their previous meeting, the Rockets scored a 12 to 0 victory over the Panthers. Somewhat battered after two tilts with the powerful Tigers, the Rockets are on a rebound for tomorrow night's game.

COUNT ON LAWSON

The game will see the "Rockets" speedy quarterback, Bob Lawson in there forming an effective combination with the shifty, low-running half-back, Jimmie Wilson who comes from Gainesville, Florida. Lawson, who hails from Louisville, Kentucky, more than fills the kicking assignments too, playing an all around game. They will have an accurate pass-flipper, too, in the person of Cecil Coulter of Newton, North Carolina, who at fullback drives, low, legs working piston-like, through the line.

The diminutive but very rugged right-half, Eugene Kinzer (Bluefield High, W. Va.) who weighs in at 160 lbs. will be very effective for his smooth-running, blocking and tackling accuracy.

The flankmen for the "Rockets" will be Chester Jones (Lane College) whose fine defensive play against the "Tigers" last week made his side of the line almost impregnable and William Kymes, small but scrappy and rugged will see to it that the "Panther" backs have no easy time of it Friday night. Coach Joseph D. A. Dismond, former Hampton College, ace, may call on Howard Hewett who has a bad shoulder that has bothered him all season. Hewett played with the mighty Akron High Ohio team of a few years back. On the other hand Jones is still nursing a knee that was injured in last week's game.

BENNETTS AT GUARD

The two Bennetts, Walter R. and Joseph will start in the guard positions. Joseph Bennett is a sixty-minute man whose reserves of energy just never seem to be exhausted. Walter R. Bennett who is the assistant coach of the "Rockets" was an all-conference Guard at South Carolina State College, as well as assistant line coach there after his graduation, has a keen nose for the pigskin and continually ferrets out the ball carrier, breaking up many a long gain.

The "Rockets" have two fine tackles in Andrew Mayo (Mather Academy, S. C.) and Robert Johnson (Oklahoma High). They will both be read to go.

JONES VERSATILE

Both the "Tigers" and the "Panthers" can testify that Captain Clarence "Po" Jones (Lane College) is the one man that got in their hair most. Jones regular position is center but he plays equally well in the back-field as was seen in his flashy run-back of punts while he was playing safety against the Reception Center last week.

Coach Dismond says that although though his team will be somewhat handicapped in that many of his replacements were injured in the game with the "Tigers" last week they are looking forward to the coming fray with confidence.

PANTHERS IDLE

The Panthers have had no games the last two weeks and therefore have been working diligently, improving their passing and kicking, perfecting old plays and running new ones. Some of the players who were slow in starting the season are showing great improvement under the able tutelage of the head coach, Lt. Courtney Kitchel, and the assistant coaches, Lt. Willard W. Hawke and Lt. Arthur Shively.

Players who have shown plenty of class in recent practices are Henry Derry, 225 pound tackle from Stewart College, Big Tim Still, tackle of the '42 Panthers, Ernest Sims, end of Shaw University, Raymond Rhead, halfback of Tuskegee and fullback John Massenburg of the 1942 Panthers.

19-Year-Old Star Will Strive For Spot On Varsity

BY SGT. WALTER MILLER

Tony Pirrello—high scorer in the Academic Regiment basketball loop—doesn't like to think of sports in terms of individual players.

"I prefer playing on a team that has no stars, especially in basketball," says Co. A's three-letter athlete from Montclair, N. J., who has hooped 89 points in seven games. "I like to see five fast men feeding the ball, with good teamwork instead of individual showmanship. That's the way we work in A Company. I think that's why we've gone through seven games undefeated."

EX-MONTCLAIR ACE

Nineteen-year-old Pirrello is no newcomer on the hardwood court, having starred (sorry) PLAYED forward with the Montclair High School outfit for three years. He earned his second "M" on the gridiron, and on the diamond he batted an average of .386 in three seasons with the New Jersey state high school champions.

Pirrello's scholastic sports career was at its height in June, 1942, when Montclair was tearing through the other nine teams in the Greater Newark baseball tournament. Things happened thick and fast. First, Montclair won. Then, the Newark Evening News picked Pirrello as the "most valuable player" in the competition, awarding him a trip with the Newark Bears. The Dodger scouts offered him a contract. The Yankees suggested a try-out. But the draft was imminent.

DEFENSE WORK

Starting the long climb from 75 a month on a Dodger farm seemed pointless when he expected his "greetings" any day. So Pirrello worked in a Newark defense plant until he was drafted in January of this year.

After his basic at Camp Croft, Pirrello came to Benning to study radio, winding up last August as an assistant instructor in communications with two stripes and a bunk in "the most highly rated regiment in the army."

Pirrello naturally hopes to graduate from company to regimental basketball, and a chance to play with the Prof nine next season.

"At least," he grins, "I'm going to try hard."

HASH MARKS APLENTY

Curiosity seekers and inquisitive passersby get an eye full when Sgt. Johnson goes down street. His sleeve is loaded with stripes. In fact there's no room for anymore hash marks. There are eight large ones for service since the World War I, and three smaller stripes for World War II service. Ribbons denoting participation in the Cuban Pacification, Mexican border patrol and police duty, and World War service also decorate his chest. There are also eight marksmen's medals for pistol and one expert's medal for machine gun firing.

A personal friend of several generals and many officers the "Old Man" carries on with his friends and amuses any soldier who has the privilege of meeting him. He is known everywhere in the 7th Armored Division for his friendliness and good humor. He smiles when he talks and his steel blue eyes bespeak of the keenness of mind and ready wit that's free to those with whom he comes in contact.

"Of course this is a better army than the old army," he'll tell anyone. "In the old army we almost always had hominy grits and black coffee for breakfast. And now we get the best, plenty of everything, good meat, good bread, sugar and coffee." He almost smacked his lips as he made the comparison in food.

He's been around. our "Old to freedom.

Sgt. Tuite Has Difficulty Seeing Sunday Grid Games In Stadium--And How!

By SGT. JAMES TUITE

The Army has published booklets to acquaint soldiers with New Zealand, Australia, India and other points of the globe, but we feel that they have by-passed writing one of the most necessary guides for men in khaki—at least those in Fort Benning. We are referring to a Guide To Doughboy Stadium for A Football Game On Sunday.

Now, merely going to Doughboy Stadium should seem like a simple move, hardly even worth consideration. But any dogface who has tried it, will admit it is quite a feat. Therefore, let us accept the responsibility of orienting the would-be football game spectator through these printed words

First, the soldier must decide which team he is rooting for. Having done this, he will follow the crowd to the stadium. Regardless of what he decides—even if only to go to the cafeteria—he will follow the crowd to the stadium. This is a result of mass hysteria, as anyone who has ever tried to catch a Lexington avenue express and found himself on a Grand Concourse local would know.

Upon entering the stadium he will find himself inevitably seated in the stands of the opposition. He may not mind this. But then some people don't mind sleeping on beds of nails or eating fire. Besides, he really shouldn't mind, because what could possibly happen to him? Well, maybe he didn't want to live anyway.

When the game begins, he will cheer loudly for his team only. Only once. The opposition rooter will stars through him like a first sergeant stares through a gigged candidate for Sunday K. P. He will then put on a weak and somewhat sickly grin, shrug his shoulders and murmur in a cracked voice "Heh, heh, only kiddin', y'know."

When the game starts, he may see one play—if he's lucky. When the team kicks off, there will be three big paratrooper first sergeants who find it easier to stand on the benches to watch the game.

There are several things the soldier can do to overcome this, but none of which he would advise without first checking to see that his insurance premiums are paid up. Of course, he could just push the paratroopers off the benches but that just isn't done, they will tell him when he recovers consciousness.

THOSE HATS, THOSE HATS!

The whole problem becomes more complicated if the G. I should bring a girl along with him. Especially if she wears a sweater and a funny little hat. Any guy who has walked past the stands with a girl in a sweater and a funny little hat will understand what we mean. We just can't understand what attraction those funny little hats have.

While the game is underway, every minute on the minute, some guy will jump up, look either left or right and holler, "Fight! Fight!" He doesn't see a fight, but just feels like having something to say. Then everyone in the stands jumps up and looks in the same direction. They manage to knock our soldier on the ground. A couple of M. P.'s come runnnig up, pick the soldier off the ground and throw him in the Guardhouse for disorderly conduct and inciting a riot. You can't win.

MORE NUISANCE

As the game becomes more and more exciting, some guy in back will beat you into unconsciousness with a pair of field glasses he borrowed from the supply room to watch the game. Another G. I. will be eating peanuts about four rows above and throw the shells down in your hair. The babe you're with will rave about some handsome halfback, and flirt with some second lieutenant down in the reserved section. Some other guy will top it off by whacking you on the back every time either team gains more than a half yard.

Then after it's all over, somebody will come along and say, "Great game, wasn't it?" Instead of saying, "How the hell do I know; I didn't see it," you'll just be polite and say, "It sure was."

A dozen prisoners of war were taken to see the game. They composed the Italian prisoner's soccer team which played the Spirit booters on Saturday.

TIS Teams Are Idle This Week

The principals in last Sunday's battle for the Infantry School football conference championship will be idle this weekend, as far as competition is concerned but both will engage in daily workouts for games away from home next week.

The champion 176th Spirits will leave next Tuesday for Miami, Florida where they will meet the University of Miami in a night game, Friday, November 26. This will be the third game against a college eleven for the Spirits. They previously defeated South Carolina and lost to SLI.

It was announced this week, too, that the Spirits will play in Atlanta December 4th against the Greensboro Basic Training Center eleven, a team with a good record, coached by Charley Trippi, understudy to Frankie Sinkwich on last year's Georgia team.

The 300th Sabers will travel to Birmingham next week to meet the 10th Armored eleven on Thanksgiving Day. Their final game of the season will be against Patterson Field here on December 5th.

176th Quintet Will Meet Paratroopers

Basketball fans of the 176th Infantry will get their first chance to preview the 1943-44 edition of the regimental quintet on Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock when Lieut. Kirk Gebert leads his hoopsters against the Parachute School in a practice game to be played at the 9th Street USO.

At present, the starting line-up is still undecided, but the 176th mentor will draw his five from Jim Weir, six foot-five center from Wyoming, Marv Lee, UCLA, Sparky Suchara, Joe Novocal, Johnny Sweeney, Leo Phillips, George Patriska, John Tillotson and Roy Stout.

In addition to his duties as coach, Gebert is also expected to bolster the scoring punch on the court in one of the forward slots. Saturday's tilt will be one of a group to be played prior to the regular Infantry School league, which gets under way on December 15th.

TWO USO TEAMS

Two other cage teams will represent the regiment in the Ninth Street USO loop, which is divided into two circuits, the American and the National leagues.

Goldbrick Contends He Seeks Man's Estate Ere Sin, Work Invaded World

To the many good men and true who with singleness of aim and clearness of purpose have done their bit to keep this gentle art as it shoud be: polished, refined and dignified, this little article is sincerely dedicated.

It is the purpose of him who writes not merely to justify the so called Goldbrick (how rich and solid is the connotation of the word!), but to show that he is the only one to whom life in its full beauty and worth is truly revealed. As to a definitioin of terms there will be little disagreement. A Goldbrick is said to be one who by fair means or foul avoids work.

When he look to the beginning of this thing called work, taking the Biblical account, we are struck with the fact that it took an act of God to put man to work initially. Before Adam was driven from the Garden of Eden and caused to earn his bread in the sweat of his face, who knows by what means he was afforded his living? This edict setting him to work was devised as the greatest punishment under which can could exist. Working was so foreign to his nature and former habits that it took an angel with a sword of flame to enforce the sentence. So deep-rooted was theh aversion to work in the human race that Adam's sons and his sons' were not entirely free from the tendency.

A THING APART

The thing is that it was a long, long time after Adam that man, seeking something in whiche to excel, finally hit upon work. Why, before that men fought duels, discovered countries, wooed maidens, and did many other things which were very fine and very brave, but men, or the better class of them at least, did not degenerate.

It is only recently that this thing of work has gained any popularity. Only within the last few hundred years have ben in large numbers engaged in it. It has grown, though, through the fad stage; its popularity has increased until now it borders on having become a universal dissipation.

As an indication of its actual ill repute one has only to look at the group who advocate it, and there he finds first sergeants, corporals, and those other unfortunate individuals who have never learned the art of pure and undefiled resting, unholy company.

ASTP Trains Skilled Technicians For Nation

Since the United States Army has adopted the ASTP as a means of producing highly skilled technicians to serve the armed forces, thousands of American youths from all parts of the nation have been streaming into special ASTP unit camps. It is probably the prevalent thought that the services of these trained men in the immediate conflict are most important, but just imagine the unlimited contributions that they shall be demanded to make in the reconstruction of the devastated areas that have fallen under the impact of war.

All trained engineers, electrical, civil and mechanical, whose services shall be invaluable, will be called upon to plan once again, prepare for and supervise the reconstruction of installations using the forces of nature. The electrical and mechanical engineers services in the rebuilding of hydro-electric plants and power transmission and the planning and supervising of the manufacturing of all types of machinery destroyed under all angles of bombardment and devastation shall undoubtedly be called for. Our civil engineers shall be called upon to convert the dust and ashes that were once the proud homes and working places of people all over the world into nice new and larger homes and factories. Once again the arteries of overland transportation must be repaired so that normal function of trade and communication may be resumed. Our trained linguists shall also be called upon to aid in the reconstruction tasks. A nation that wishes to obtain the cooperation of the people who speak a different language in the reconstruction and rehabilitation of that construction cannot possibly do so without knowledge of their language. Interpreters and experts in foreign languages need no fear that their studies and efforts shall be in vain.

The disease and grief to follow in the wake of devastation will be tremendously hard to control. Here again the doctors and dentists that will be graduates of the ASTP shall be able to contribute their urgently needed, highly skilled services. This terrible tide that frequently takes more lives than the bullets and shrapnel of guns can only be held back by the valuable knowledge of our army and civilian physicians.

The ASTP trainees must realize the importance and value of their work, as they probably do, and strive to make the best of all the facilities they have at their disposal. They have been offered great and wonderful opportunities both to better themselves and achieve promotions in the army, so they should take full advantage of them.

7th A. D. Dispatcher Is A Very Busy Man

T-5 Sidney Purvis, of Division Headquarters Company, has troubles witout end. He is the 7th Armored Division dispatcher. Whenever a peep, jeep or truck moves it is his job to get the driver and the vehicle back on time—and in good condition.

As each day's work begins T-5 Purvis sharpens his pencils and wits. Before much of anything is done to get his office in order, the telephone begins to ring. It rings continuously all day—for there are colonels, majors, captains, lieutenans, warrant officers, sergeants, corporals and privates who have business to transact. They want a peep or peeps in a hurry.

So Cpl. Purvis looks down the list where each of the vehicles are tabbed for duty. As the vehicles are dispatched the time out and the time in is kept on the tablet ready at any time for the Headquarters Commandant's scrutiny. Capt. James A. Riley, Headquarters Commandant', is the man to Whom Cpl. Purvis reports.

As Division dispatcher Cpl. Purvis, who learned maintenance of the vehicles first, knows very well what to do when one is in need of repair. He has helped them time and again before he was assigned to his present job. It is also his business to know the area the roads and byways, the buildings and centers of each unit.

Cpl. Purvis, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Purvis, of Lucedale, Mississippi, was inducted in the Army in February, 1942. He was assigned to the 7th Armored Division from Camp Shelby, Mississippi. He received his basic training at Camp Polk, Louisiana, and has been with a Headquarters unit ever since. He was first with the Division Service Company.

Benning Hills Only A Breeze To Mountaineer

Toiling up and down Georgia hills looking for gun positions during terrain exercises reminds William A. (Bill) Eastman, Jr., of the First Company, Third Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School, of his hobby of mountain climbing in the Pacific Northwest.

Before enlisting in the Army in November, 1942, Eastman was a forest examiner for the U. S. Indian Service at Spokane Washington, and found many opportunities to pursue his hobby in connection with his job as a forester in locating sites for forest fire lookouts, and making contour maps. Altogether he has climbed approximately 50 peaks in the Cascade Mountains in Oregon and Washington. He has scaled Washington's famous Mt. Ranier, which is 14,408 feet high, and Mt. Hood in Oregon, whose elevation is 11,225 feet.

Rock Slides Menace

According to Eastman, the greatest danger in mountain climbing is from rock slides. Whenever the snow and ice starts to melt on the peaks, big boulders, some of them as large as grand pianos, break loose and come bounding down the mountainside. When this happens, all a climber can do is lie flat against the snow, or against a rock wall if one is near, and pray that the rocks don't hit him.

It wasn't a rock, however, but a rope, that came the closest to bringing disaster to him, Eastman recalls. Accompanied by several friends he had climbed to the top of a peak known as the North Sister in the Cascades in Oregon. They were descending down a chimney in the face of the peak, with the Collier glacier some 500 feet directly under them. They were using a rope looped around a rock cornice to aid in the descent, and Eastman, who was the last one down, noticed as he climbed around a corner to safety that the rope he had been swinging on had been gnawed nearly in two by the jagged rock, and was holding by a few thin strands.

CAPTAIN SCHULER

It has been announced that William M. Schuler, of New Albany, Ind., has been promoted to the rank of captain. Captain Schuler entered the Army in 1935 and worked his way up through the ranks until in 1942 he was selected to attend Officer Candidate School. He is now assigned to the Headquarters Service Battalion of the Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School.

25th Company, 1st STR, Holds Big Dance

Students and cadre of the 25th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, held their "get acquainted" dance at the 24th Infantry Recreation Hall last week. The 25th Company has recently been activated to house the increasing number of colored students attending Enlisted Motor Courses at the Infantry School.

Over 200 persons attended the dance, 50 of them being WACs from the Colored W.A.C. detachment at Fort Benning. Since some sixty civilian girls also attended the party by way of a chartered bus from Columbus, there was no lack of dancing partners for the men attending.

Toward the gathering's end, guests were served with a buffet supper prepared by the kitchen force of the 25th Company. Music was furnished by the Reception Center Band.

General management of the dance was under Staff Sergeants Ernest King and Richard L. Haynesworth and Pfc. Eugene A. Crews of the 25th Company cadre. Student representatives on the dance committee were Staff Sergeant Frank Roberson, Sergeants Walter Bishop, John T. Billups, and Mark W. Hicks; Corporals Solomon S. Brown and Ferdinand Ward.

Cadre men preparing and serving the supper were Corporal John B. Burrell, Pfc. Freddie L. Berry and Pfc. James L. Jordan. Decorations and lighting arrangements were the work of Pfc. Isaiah Finey and Pvt. Chester Butler.

Every one of those attractive white-on-green signs that dot the area of the Infantry School, Third Student Training Regiment, is the work of T-5 Wendell Simons of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Service Battalion, who plies his craft from the carpentry shop of the Regimental Supply Office.

The artistry of the signs stems from Simons' civilian background and training. Before he was called into the Army, he supported himself as an interior decorator and in his spare time studied art and painted portraits.

Simons took an art course during each of his four years in high school and supplemented this training with summer art courses at Columbuia University, New York City. Bermuda-born, he came to this country when he was four years old and received his citizenship papers about five months ago.

Although he has done pictures in both oils and water colors, Simons prefers to work with charcoal. Several of his water colors currently are being exhibited in the Service Club on the Main Post. Among the signs he likes best is the one he did for the "Chapel-in-the-Grove."

Coming into the Army Jan. 16, 1942, Simons underwent basic training at Fort McClellan, Ala., transferring to Fort Benning the following April. He has been working at RSO since last September.

O. C. Cranshaw Knows His Japs

When Candidate Victor Cranshaw of the 13th Company, Third Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School, meets the Japanese soldier on the battlefield, he will not be coming to grips with a stranger. He knows and has observed the little men for years.

Born in Vladivostok, Siberian seaport, Candidate Cranshaw attended school in Wei-Hai-Wei, China, and in the St. Joseph's Boys School in Yokohama during 1917-18. In the latter year he witnessed the Japanese celebrations following the armistice of World War I.

"My best insight into the Japanese soldier," he decided, "came in 1932-36 during the Japanese seizure of Shanghai. I was a member of the Shanghai Volunteer Corps, composed of internationals, led by former American National Guard officers. Our job was to protect the International Settlement and see that Japanese soldiers, clashing with Chinese on the other side of the city, stayed out.

"Several times they tried to come through. On one occasion a company of them crossed the bridge and attempted to establish themselves, but they were driven off by an American officer and a handful of guards. Luckily, they didn't try a show of force. We had only one infantry company, a machine gun company and a cavalry troop.

"During that period they were extremely arrogant with the Chinese, although among themselves they were honest and clean, a characteristic trait."

In 1923, Cranshaw saw the wreck of Yokohama, jut two months after the earthquake which laid it low. The Japanese went about the business of digging out and rebuilding with noticeable stoicism. This, he maintains, is the most important of Japanese traits, as evident in this war, and explains much of the spirit with which they originally attempted to conquer the world.

It is estimated that there are more than 1,500,000 Polish deportees in Germany.

3rd STR Hypnotist Worries The Top-Kick

Although the atmosphere was that of chill autumn, candidates in the First Company, Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School on bivouac at Shell Creek were warmed with laughter by some of the feats of hypnotism performed by Candidate Thomas L. Rockwell around the evening campfire. There are times when a candidate doesn't want to see a tactical officer, but it was highly amusing when a candidate was hypnotized and told that he couldn't see his own tactical officer, and then almost sat down on the officer without knowing he was there.

The same candidate was shown the back of a playing card and told that on the other side was a photo of his wife. The card was shuffled among others, and surprisingly enough, the candidate was able to select the particular card by looking at the back only. On another occasion, the mess sergeant became a victim of Rockwell's power of suggestion. After placing the fingers of his hands together in front of him, he was told he couldn't separate them. He tried without success to move them apart, and spectators standing nearby were unable to help.

KIDS, MORONS EXEMPT

"Anyone can be hypnotized except very small children and morons", Rockwell states. Under favorable conditions, I have never had a complete failure with a person who was cooperative."

Rockwell became interested in hypnotism while studying psychology at Colgate University where he met a professor who was conducting experiments in hypnosis to counteract the serious shock that follows many major surgical operations. Through the professor he mastered the power of suggestion, and soon was practicing on his classmates. Rockwell has found soldiers better subjects than civilians, and attributes this to the fact that soldiers are accustomed to military discipline.

His first performance before a large audience is still remembered by Rockwell. He had agreed to put on an act at the Classification Center at Nashville, Tenn. About 3,000 soldiers were on hand for the show, and Rockwell started the act by talking to his subject over the public address system. He worked for about five minutes and nothing happened. The audience became increasingly restless. Guessing that the artificial sound device was the cause of his trouble, he shut off the microphone and found that his subject quickly succumbed to the spell.

Radio Gremlin Plays Havoc

If you are an average soldier, you probably live in a hutment which has a radio. This radio is your only contact with the outside world and civilian comforts. You enjoy this radio very much and treasure it highly. If you are one of these, you probably have had trouble with "radio gremlins". This creature is quite a bother and proves to be trouble-some to all. This is how he works:

After a long tiresome day of drilling, double time, digging foxholes, obstacle courses, tough barges, you come in, take off your clothes and settle down to a nice calm session with your radio. Just as you are settled nicely and are listening to the familiar strains of your favorite orchestra, he starts in. First he prompts the nice gentleman in the hut next to yours to shave, with his electric razor, of course. This action causes an erratic burst of static to come through your radio and almost raises you out of bed. After enduring this noise for a few hectic minutes, you kindly swear at the fellow in the adjoining hut and obligingly turn off your radio.

Well, you wait for what seems like a million years, then you cautiously turn your radio on again, hoping against hope that it will work. It works ok for a few minutes and you are once again contented. When out of the night again comes our gremlin; he persuades a good-meaning guard to toy with the master switch, thus causing the lights to go on and off. You again swear and yell your head off. Finally it stops, your radio begins to play and you settle down once again.

MACHINE GUN CLATTER

Then like something comparable to a machine gun starts. Your gremlin starts to jump around on the tubes and wiring of your set causing it to pop and crackle with a steady stream of buzzes and hums coming from it. You once again engage in a conversation with the gremlin, calling him every name in the book. He finally stops running around inside your set, and rests up while thinking of something devilish to do to your radio. You are then allowed a brief period of enjoyment, listening to a favorite melody. When the program to which you are listening reaches its climax and your best tune of all is being played, the little fellow begins to play with your volume control. Your radio intermittently begins to fade and grow louder. You feverishly try to control this, but with no success. Finally you are almost ready to give up, when your radio stops playing altogether. Your little friend has shorted the set. You start to shake the set and beat upon it with your bare hands and finally get it to running smoothly.

By this time it is getting late and your program has ended long ago. You give up and turn off the radio, swearing to get even with the little "gremlin" some day. You might if you are lucky, but I doubt it.

13th Co. 6th Trng. Regt.

Drastic Tire Cut Impends

If you think the passenger car tire situation is going to improve soon, better change your mind, for prospects definitely are for less tires rather than more.

What's more, personnel of Fort Benning will have to take even better care of tires, for every new tire purchased is going to have to last out the duration.

Those were the warnings issued today by Sgt. Louis Lipp, secretary of the Fort Benning branch of the Muscogee County Rationing Board after attending conferences with Benjamin Wall, OPA representative from Atlanta.

Inspections of automobile tires must be more rigid, Mr. Wall stated, and reasons for condemning tires must be set down more fully before ration boards can grant permits to purchase new tires.

There is a definite shortage of rubber, and it will get worse rather than better, Mr. Wall said, and quotas must be cut drastically. An index system of military personnel is now kept in Sgt. Lipp's office under direction of Cpl. Stephen J. Sipos, and a record is kept of every tire condemnation.

"That means that if a tire wears out, the new one has to last for the duration," Sgt. Lipp explained. "Thus a car owner cannot get five new tires now and return later on to get equipped all around again. When we asked Mr. Wall when a change for the better in the tire situation might be expected, he told us that it could only come when more people stopped using cars.

There were only 100 dentists in the U. S. in 1820.

Naval guns were first used in Europe in the 13th century.

TIS Officer Crosses Iceland's Seas of Grass

"Finding the way across trackless Iceland was our toughest problem," Major Ralph C. McCrum explained. In July 1941 he led the first ground party to traverse that chilly island from south to north.

"Up there the sun never sets, all summer long—the 'Land of the Midnight Sun'," he went on. "So we couldn't 'navigate' by the stars.

"Our magnetic compasses weren't of much use, either. Iceland is in about the same latitude as the magnetic North Pole. Compass needles just wavered around the dials aimlessly.

"We were pioneering virgin territory, and no maps covered it in detail. And there were mighty few landmarks to follow, just an endless sea of six-inch tall grass."

SUN, TRAILS, INSTINCT

Yet Major McCrum's truck convoy reached its destination without overmuch meandering. They guided their course on the sun, what few trails there were, and just plain instinct.

The major, who has spent only twelve months of the last four years in continental United States, reported recently to the Infantry School as a student in the Officers Advanced Course. Husband of Mrs. Ruth V. McCrum, of 8 McKeen street, Brunswick, Maine, he has been attached to the 1st Student Training Regiment's 4th Company to complete studies which will prepare him to serve as a battalion commander or staff officer on larger units.

Most of the time since 1939, Major McCrum has served in our Western Hemisphere outposts—Panama, Greenland, Iceland.

HE'S OFF AGAIN

He had scarcely unloaded his luggage at the new American base outside Reykjavik in July 1941, when orders came down for him to take a convoy north to Iceland's opposite tip, both to survey an overland route and to set up new outguards.

For a week their three trucks rolled northward under the Arctic sun that daily dipped toward the horizon but never below it. Occasionally the group followed ill-defined paths, but most of the way the vehicles bumped over the treeless tundra, bounded so much, in fact, that minor breakdowns twice delayed them. But not for long—the party's mechanics know their stuff and soon had the convoy rolling, or bumping, on again to its goal. Despite headaches from lack of roads and maps, Major McCrum's trek was relatively uneventful.

McCrum was graduated in 1939 from the University of New Hampshire, where he had majored in business administration. At the same time he was commissioned a 2nd lieutenant in the reserves, having completed ROTC. He was promoted to 1st lieutenant in October 1940, to Captain in August 1941, and received his majority in June '43.

An Army Wife Shops In Columbus

By Phyllis

One of the most treasured of practical gifts is a makeup case. The J. A. KIRVEN COMPANY has several of these real leather kits with the insides just as beautiful as the outsides. One very compact case is of rich and rosy maroon leather, saddle-stitched in white. The bottles and containers inside have shining gold tops. Navy blue leather trimmed in bright red decorates a very large makeup case containing bottles with jewel-tops, a tiny sewing kit, a comb and hairbrush set and large containers for bath salts or talcum powder. Women in the Army or the Navy will like the specially designed waterproof kits containing Marie Earle's powder, rouge, lipstick, cleansing cream and skin freshener. If you've cherished an attractive make-up kit get one at Kirven's or delight a friend with one, if you believe "it is better to give than to receive."

No matter how many toys tiny tots already have to amuse them, they're always begging for more. The perfect place for toy shoppers, young and old alike, is the newly-opened Toyland in the basement of SEARS ROEBUCK COMPANY. The many counters are just filled with puzzle games, log-cabin building sets, General MacArthur dolls, fairy tale books, paper dolls to cut out and dress, and costume dolls designed to delight any youngster. Bring your youngsters or your neighbor's children to this Toyland and watch how excited and entranced they are with each new toy they suddenly spy. Most of these toys are well within the price range of everyone, so if you really feel like splurging, you'll be able to buy ever so many toys for ever so little money. Almost every type toy made is on display at Sears, so why don't you come in and meander around, you'll no doubt enjoy it almost as much as the children will.

—V—

If you want to look neater and lovelier during your leisure moments you'll visit the quality shop of KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, INC. For here are wonderfully soft and becoming housecoats quilted in many shades pleasing to the feminine eye. Pinks and blues soft orchid tones, royal blue, soft yellows and creams, make up for the most part the printed robes. Those fashioned of plain materials are beautifully made in shades of navy blue, bright red, cream, baby blue and shocking pink. You'll find these robes are not too heavy and not light, in fact, just about ideal for wear right now and many months ahead. The noticeable lack of frou-frou will tend to give you a neat and trim look, even though you may be lounging around. In this display there are also a few slack and quilted coat sets which are attractive as well as practical. So if you want to look a bit lovelier wear one of these pretty housecoats or lounging sets from Kayser-Lilienthal's.

—V—

The MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY is noted not only for its quality footwear, but also for its selection of women's hosiery and handbags. When you're shopping for your latest pair of shoes, selecting shades of hosiery in harmony will assure you a good start for an attractive outfit. Sheer rayons designed to flatter your legs are suggested for dress wear, while lisle or mesh stockings are both practical and appropriate for wear with a sports outfit. The handbags are the offerings of well-known firms and you'll find unusual styles for every occasion. In addition to this accessories section, Miller-Taylor's also caters to growing boys and girls. Perfect fit and the utmost in value is assured if the shoe shopping for the family is done here. Military men will be also pleased with the trim and correct shoes in the approved army tan shades. The finest in hosiery, handbags and footwear is displayed in this most popular shop, so be a wise shopper and do your shopping at 1130 Broadway.

Son Of Haitian Army Chief Completes Course

Another class was graduated Saturday from the Officers' Communication Course of the Infantry School and included among the graduates were a few Marines and one Haitian.

The Haitian was Lt. Robert Andre, Garde d'Haiti and among the first to congratulate him was Brig. Gen. George H. Weems, assistant commandant of the Infantry School. Lt. Andre is the son of Col. P. Jules Andre, Chief of Staff and Commander of the Haitian army. He is an old friend of General Weems. The friendship dates to the time when General Weems was chief of the U. S. Military Mission to Haiti, which also included Col. Leo A. Bessette and Col. D. B. Smith.

Col. Andre fought alongside the U. S. Marines during the Haitian insurrection and his exploits of personal bravery are well known to the older marines who were in that fight.

Lt. Andre is one of many Haitian officers who have taken courses in U. S. Army schools However he is the first to attend a Communication School. He is a graduate of the RCA Institute in New York and his course here is destined to be a big help to his country in co-ordinating communications within the Carribean area. A rapid and efficient communication system in that area is of paramount importance in its defense.

His presence at the Infantry School is another indication of practical co-operation between the United States and Haiti. The island republic, which was second to the United States in declaring its independence in the new world (1804) was also the first country to declare war on Germany and Japan following the United States' declaration. At that time, the Haitian president, His Excellency Elie Lescot, placed all of his country's resources at the disposal of this country. He was recently the guest of President Roosevelt at a White House dinner.

Veteran Soldier Named Captain

Lieutenant James R. Large, commanding Company A, Service Battalion, 1st Student Training Regiment, has been promoted to captain, it was announced by Colonel Robert H. Lord, Commanding Officer of the 1st S.T.R., the Infantry School.

Having held every enlisted grade with the old 29th Infantry from private to first sergeant, Large received his commission in June 1942 from Infantry Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning. After graduation he served as tactical officer at the Chemical Warfare OCS, Edgewood Arsenal, Md. He has had 20 years army service.

Theologian Prefers To Bear Arms In Nation's Crisis

The Tables of Organization don't call for a chaplain to be attached to a company, but Captain John D. Austin's Fifth Company of the Third Student Training Regiment, The Infantry School cant follow the T. O. here because it has Candidate Driftwood Rucker.

"The deacon," as Candidate Rucker is called by his bunkmates is a graduate ministerial student of Wofford College. He could have gone to theological school and then entered the army as a Chaplain, but he chose to serve his country as a fighting infantry soldier. Candidate Rucker thinks the army needs spiritual guidance, but he thinks it needs fighters too, so here he is. After the war, however, Rucker hopes to be a minister.

"The deacon" has been guest preacher at many churches and has served as Worship Chairman of the Methodist Youth Caraven that toured Alabama and Florida.

At Wofford, Rucker was a track letterman running the 100 and broad jumping.

Last week when the Fifth Company was out on bivouac, sojourning in "Beautiful Shell Creek Park,' "the deacon" thought the boys could stand a little spiritual guidance and so he organized a Sunday night prayer meeting. Hyms were sung and a hermon rendered by Rucker.

Being a preacher and a soldier is quite an unusual combination, but Candidate Driftwood Rucker combines the two callings successfully.

Luckies Go To Town Firing New Carbine

Pfc. John J. Przewlockl, of Division Train Headquarter an Headquarter Company made the highest score in his company on the carbine firing, having attained 182 from a possible 200 points.

Lt. Denneston Averill and Pvt. W. J. McGowan of the same company tied during the week when they scored 179 each on the carbine.

Capt. U. Read and S. Sgt. M. Dunn likewise tied with scores of 177 each as did five additional enlisted men with the following scores: T-4 M. A. Barnes and T-4 C. King, 173 each. Cpl. I. I. Epstein, Cpl. A. M. Schultaw and Pfc. L. A. Russell, scores of 170 each.

Food Service Chief Praises 4th SC Messes

Colonel Paul P. Logan, chief of the Army's Food Service program of the Quartermaster General's Office in Washington, D. C., Friday lauded the "splendid progress" being made in camps throughout the Fourth Service Command in the preparation and handling of food in Army messes.

Climaxing a two-day conference of Army Food Service supervisors from Army camps throughout the Service Command held at Fort Benning, Col. Logan, who is also assistant chief of Subsistence, said that "through this program the quality of food served is increasing and the quantity of wastage decreasing."

The meeting, arranged by Col. John M. Rooks, Fourth Service Command Director of Food Service, Atlanta, and Lt. Colonel A. H. Veazey, post Food Service Supervisor was attended by approximately 70 officers from posts, camps and stations in the southeast.

At Friday's lecture-demonstration, J. F. Boles, representing the National Livestock and Meat Board, described the proper handling of meat cuts. With legs of lamb and sundry beef cuts spread before him on a meat board, Boles lectured and indicated to the food service the various ways cooks could get the best cuts by properly handling the meat.

The meetings were held at the Bakers and Cooks School where Army cooks arranged special demonstrations for the visiting food supervisors.

A BUCK SERGEANT IN THE 300TH INFANTRY of The Infantry School Troops gave this command: "Hips on shoulders—PLACE." Then he corrected himself with no better result: "Shoulders on hips—PLACE." While neither command appears in the regulations governing physical training, Lt. Harry Smith, Supply Officer of the 1st Battalion saved the badly battered buck sergeant's self-respect to some extent by proving that the latter command can be obeyed, or a reasonable facsimile thereof. ASTP Boys Get Real Taste Of Soldiering

No place on earth ever looked so good Sunday morning . . . no place, not even Buckingham Palace or the Ritz Carlton, as the barracks of the 1st Battalion, 6th ASTP Regiment, did to the men.

The place looked like a gorgeous blonde, a two-pound steak and a gin sling all in one parcel after two weeks in tents at Camp Crouchie Range. Not only did the clean sheets and soft beds look good . . . but those showers. A lot different, men said, from swimming in that river at the range which is the coldest thing, next to the ice house, at Fort Benning.

The men lead by Major Edward Donaldson, battalion commander, marched in from the range in a drizzling rain; doing the 12-mile stretch in four hours flat. But the men had inspiration to drive them . . . the thought of getting back to "civilization" again and the knowledge that they excelled like no other outfit yet on the range.

GOOD HUNTING

A hundred per cent of the men . . . almost a thousand strong, put enough bull-eyes in the targets and kept Maggie's red drawers to a minimum, that all qualified at least as marksmen with the M-1 rifle.

Two of the men, Privates Clarence E. Middlekaut and William C. Gilbert, Jr., both of the 3rd Company, were tied for first place honors on the rifle range . . . both with a score of 196.

The men did a lot of other things on the range, too. They worked and lived like true soldiers . . . found out what it is to get close to actual live fire . . . got good and dirty . . . shaved out of steel helmets; they're a tough bunch of boys.

And if anyone doubts it . . . let him scratch the men the wrong way by suggesting a 30-calibre pencil on the range. He'll find out.

Enemy tanks which happen to encounter members of this Officers' Basic Class will stand a poor chance of survival, according to members of the Mortar and Anti-Tank group which recently finished leading the 8th Company, First Student Training Regiment, the Infantry School, through the mysteries of gun, grenade and graded test.

This company, which is commanded by Captain Chester E. Hanover, qualified more men with the anti-tank gun on the 1,000-inch range than any of the last 20 classes and produced more high scores than most classes do.

Although few of the 13 student officers who scored more than 170 out of a possible 200 on the 1,000-inch course ever had fired the 37 mm gun before and none had fired it on the 1,000-inch range, two scores of 190 were turned in.

Major Edward R. Wagner, of New Buffalo, Michigan, and 1st Lt. James F. McCubbin, of Nashua, New Hampshire, were the two high scorers. Major Wagner attributed his success to the fact that he has made a hobby of shooting at moving targets and even has a miniature gallery set up in the basement of his home.

Lt. McCubbin, a formeer national rifle champion, already had qualified as expert with the M1 rifle, the light machine gun and the BAR before turning his attention to the anti-tank gun.

In the field firing of the two anti-tank guns the 8th Company was well above the averages of recent classes with both the 57 and 37 mm guns. Other classes managed to collect an average total of 21.4 hits on targets, as compared with the 8th Company's average of 24.1.

When the anti-tank grenades were passed out and the 8th Company opened fire on the moving targets the tank mortality rate went up again as target after target was battered to pieces. Instructors were unanimous in the opinion that the class laid down exceptionally effective grenade fire.

LT. GEN. PAUL ETIENNE BEYNET, new head of the French Military Mission to the United States is shown arriving for the graduation exercises of a large class of French officers from an Officers' Basic Course of The Infantry School at Fort Benning. General Beynet, who arrived from Africa a week ago, told the French officers they had a long and serious task ahead of them when they joined units of the French Army. Also graduated in the class were Chinese, Japanese, Spanish and American officers, causing it to be dubbed the 'Foreign Legion.' It was the second large group of French officers to be graduated from The Infantry School this year. (Official U. S. Army Photo—The Infantry School.)

General Benet Attends French Class' Graduation

The second sizeable group of French officers to be graduated from the Infantry school at Fort Benning were handed their diplomas Saturday at an impressive ceremony which was attended by Lt. Gen. Paul Etienne Beynet, new head of the French Mission to the United States and by high ranking officers of the Infantry school.

The class, which had completed 13 weeks of the Basic Officers' course, was dubbed the 'Foreign Legion' because of the presence in it of Chinese, Filipino, Spanish Japanese and American as well as French officers. The number of French officers graduated was not disclosed but more than half of the members of the class were French, many of them from South America.

General Beynet, who succeeded Maj. Gen. M. E. Bethouart as head of the French Mission, arrived from North Africa a week ago. During the ceremonies, he spoke to the graduates in English and afterwards addressed the French group privately in French.

He thanked the infantry school for the opportunity given his countrymen to study the latest in military methods and technique. To the graduating officers, he gave a warning of a long and serious task ahead of them when they are assigned to units of the French army.

The graduation address was delivered by Col. Robert S. Miller, director of training, who told the class, "This graduation is different than the normal graduation from a school. This one brings you one step nearer to battle . . . The diplomas which you receive here are more than a mere sheet of paper. They testify to our belief that you are ready and qualified to lead your units into battle in the fight for victory and the re-establishment of your broken homes in a world of peace where the rights of free men will never be endangered."

General Beynet was introduced by Maj. Gen. Charles H. Bonesteel, commandant of the Infantry school, who lauded the class for its esprit de corps and exemplary conduct and expressed the hope it could march with American troops again through the Arc de Tromphe in Paris as they did in victory in World War I.

The class was certified as having met the requirements of the Infantry school by Capt. Richard E. Miller, its company commander.

The 300th Infantry band played for the ceremonies which were held in a Communication Section building. Flags of the United Nations were in standards on the platform.

General Beynet, who was accompanied by Col. Albert LeBel, chief of staff of the French Mission, and Maj. Albert d'Amecourt, of the Mission staff, arrived late Friday afternoon and departed by plane Sunday morning. He had an opportunity for a half-day of inspection of a few of the installations at the Infantry school.

Colonel Gaither is the third generation of his family to be in the army. His father was Capt. Ridgley Gaither of the Fifth Maryland Infantry and his uncle was Brig. Gen. Charles D. Gaither, commanding general of the 58th Infantry Brigade of the 28th Division in World War I. His grandfather was Capt. George R. Gaither of the Second Virginia Cavalry, Confederate Army, and his great uncle was Col. Henry Chew Gaither, original commanding officer of the 3rd United States Infantry of American Revolutionary War fame.

A native of Baltimore, Md., Gaither attended the public schools there and graduated in 1924 from St. John's College at Annapolis with honors. Upon graduation he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Army.

During his Army career, Col. Gaither in 1932-1933 spent a year at Fort Benning's Infantry School. In 1939 he graduated from the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kans. He was then ordered to the office of the Chief of Infantry in Washington where he developed plans for the establishment of paratroop organization and training.

Nine Major Generals, 36 Brigadiers Nominated

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13—President Roosevelt has sent to the Senate the nominations of nine officers of the army to be given the temporary rank of major general and 36 to be brigadier generals.

Brigadier generals nominated for promotion to the rank of major generals in the army of the United States, with usual home addresses included:

Frank O'D. Hunter, Savannah, Ga.; Spencer B. Akin, Greenville, Miss.; Robert M. Littlejohn, Glastonbury, Conn., and William E. R. Covell, Miami, Fla.

Colonels nominated to be brigadier generals:

Frederick H. Smith, Jr., Anniston, Ala.; James A. Bethea, Florence, S. C.; John W. Lang, Pass Christian, Miss.; Willard G. C. Hood, Atlanta; Kenneth C. Wyman, Newcastle, Me.; Reuben

Off-Limits:—

GIs who have trouble memorizing the list of places that are "OFF LIMITS" are advised to clip out the composite form printed below and give it a permanent place in their wallets. Space is provided for writing in the names of establishments added in the future; simply cross out those that are subsequently announced as "ON LIMITS," and you will have ready for reference at any time a guide for steering clear of trouble.

Staying ON LIMITS is one of the GI's own responsibilities. MPs are stationed outside of places recently declared OFF, but the absence of an MP does not mean a place is ON. One officer has expressed the problem in terms of the consumer's adage—BUYER BEWARE!

Punishment for going OFF depends upon the unit commander and the soldier's record. Case histories usually indicate restriction or other company punishment as the penalty, but court-martial for disobedience of a direct order is a distinct possibility.

The OFF LIMITS list published here is a composite of Post General Order 17 and three subsequent announcements still in effect. Watch the BAYONET and your company bulletin boards for additions.

Profs To Discuss Workshop Tonight

Members of the Academic Regiment who have answered the call for radio talent will meet in the reigmental newsroom, opposite the barber shop, at 6 p. m. tonight to discuss plans for their part in the coming Radio Workshop productions over WDAK.

A representative of the regimental dance band, and experienced technicians, announcers and writers, all of whom have filed blanks with the Workshop, are expected at the meeting, together with all others who are interested in going on the air and who have not heretofore signed up.

Radio Workshop is now "sweating out" the arrival of its equipment, which will be set up in Harmony Church for morning and evening programs broadcast out over WDAK, Columbus. The ASTP PINE-BUR, 131st NEWS and the MIRROR, sponsors, expect to begin production of eight programs a week early in December.

Mirror Gives Low-Down On Bayonet Prize Winners

Five Academics will each be a bond richer today when they receive their prizes for their talented contributions to last week's Silver Anniversary edition of the Bayonet. The four B Company Visual Aids sergeants and one non-com from Headquarters have brought home five out of the eight awards offered to Benning GIs by the post-wide newspaper.

In the art division, Cpl. Henry Moon copped the $50 bond first prize for his serious cartoon, "The Jury"; S. Sgt. James W. Eaton took second prize ($25 bond) for his drawing, "Best Laid Plans of Mice, Adolf—"; while Sgt. Paul Batovsky earned a special award of a $25 bond for his cartoon "Snake Eyes Again—Keep 'Em Rolling."

In the prose department S. Sgt. Wayne Harbert has been awarded first prize ($50 war bond) for his essay, "War Is Making Better Americans Of Us All."

CORPORAL MOON

Cpl. Henry Moon, an illustrator in The Infantry School Visual Aids section, is well-known to Benningites for his numerous cartoons published in the BAYONET and the MIRROR. One of his MIRROR drawings was considered such a good illustration of the "Don't Talk" campaign that it was reproduced as a poster by the School and widely distributed. "You'll Just Die When I tell you where they're sending Bill," Moon portrayed one lady as confiding to another. And in the lower drawing, graphically illustrated, a portion of the poster Bill's was captioned "And So Did Bill."

Moon's current prize—winning cartoon portrayed the imprisoned Axis Leaders as meeting their jury,—hanged, tortured men and women come to judge their murderers.

A New Yorker and a professional artist in civilian life, Moon is married and lives in Columbus with his wife, a talented musician and teacher.

SGT. EATON

S. Sgt. Jim Eaton, also a Visual Aids illustrator, earned his bond with a drawing showing mouse Adolph staring at Eagle America, Bulldog England, Dragon China and Bear Russia. The work was conceived and rendered in the imaginative style which made Eaton a successful muralist in civilian days. (His works have graced the walls of the Worlds Fair buildings and other edifices in the East.)

A graduate of the University of Florida, Eaton has taught art in New York and Miami private schools. Drafted in February of '41, he served with the 124th Infantry before coming to the Academic Regiment. His eleven General Order cartoons appeared in the MIRROR last summer, while other works have been published in the Bayonet. He also designed the stage sets for the Columbus Civic Theater production of "The Cat and the Canary."

SGT. BATOVSKY

Sgt. Paul Batovsky's success as an artists is perhaps most interesting of all three of the winners' careers, since he has had no institutional training in art and is completely self-taught. Canvasses of MIRROR readers have shown that Batovsky's cartoon, EVOLUTION OF A GI, and another showing a soldier leaving his topkick's office in an unmentionable condition, have among the most popular newspaper features published at Benning. His Bayonet prize-winning cartoon pictured a crap-game between Stalin and Hitler, with Hitler having lost all his clothing and still seeing Snake Eyes. Batovsky, incidentally, submitted 17 cartoons to the contest.

In civilian life he was a sign-painter and commercial stencil designer, publishing in GAGS magazine and studying art only from books. His home is in Grindstone, Pa., but he got around the country even before doing it in GI shoes. As a steamboat man he made 17 trips on the Monogahela, Mississippi, Ohio and Allegheny Rivers, rising from deck-hand to mate before turning to commercial art.

Batovsky lives in Columbus with his wife and 15-months' old son, who, he hopes, will get a chance to study art in the speedier fashion—with teachers and advisers. Batovsky works as a photo-retoucher in Visual Aids.

SGT. HARBERT

S. Sgt. Wayne Harbert, who writes film strips in the Visual Aids section, was news editor for the Eugene, Ore., REGISTER-GUARD, before he was drafted in March of '41. The erstwhile B Company columnist took his BS in Journalism from Oregon U. in 1939, but had already learned his subject the hard way, working as an editor a year before he got his degree. His prize-winning essay maintained that GIs, region-conscious before their military service began, will be better Americans after the war because they have learned about other sections of the nation.

SGT. SUMMERS

Lennie Summers, who submitted his first serious poem to the contest, has been locally known as a writer of "light verse" and champion of Dorothy Parker as the best proponent of the form. Washington's (D. C.) ping-pong champion describes himself, in military circles, as "secretary to the colonel," and has made headlines at Benning for his table-tennis prowess. At present swaggering, a la Cyrano de Bergerac (he of the nose), as the "uncrowned table tennis champs of the post," Summers was a professional ping-pong teacher and civil service worker in the nation's capital before the draft gave him a uniform and made him send his zoot-suit home.

Before coming to Benning, Summers shot a perfect score at Camp Croft on the 37 anti-tank gun—one hit out of one. His one hit out of one shot in the field of serious verse—winning him a $25 bond—repays him tenfold for his recent investment in a rhyming dictionary.

General, Private Thompson Cause No Confusion

Brig. Gen. John B. Thompson, Combat Command B, and Pfc. John B. Thompson, of 7th Armored Division Band, haven't had any trouble about their mail or pay checks getting crossed although the General and the Private have the same names and much in common.

First of all, the General married Miss Nina Cameron, of Watertown, New York. Private Thompson is from Antwerp, which is in the suburbs of Watertown.

Then, too, although their daily chores are much different, General Thompson and Private Thompson are assigned to the "Lucky Seventh" Armored Division. The Private plays a trumpet in the Division Band, what time he isn't fumbling the slide on a trombone. The band couldn't displease the General — and that means that harmony reigns between the upper and lower ranks in this man's Army.

Night-Tactics Are Modern Warfare Must

American soldiers destined for service in the Pacific Theater just can't have too much training in night tactics, according to Candidate Earl C. Buck of the 3rd STR of The Infantry School, who served 17 months "down under."

Extensive training in patrolling, both combat and reconnaissance, is also a must on Buck's list, as he recalled some of his experiences during four months of combat with the tricky Japs on Guadalcanal.

Buck's outfit was the first Army unit to be sent to Guadalcanal when the ground forces took over from the Marines and finally booted the Japanese from the island. They had been training for several months on another island before being ordered into action at Guadalcanal.

The ability of the Japs to camouflage themselves and to infiltrate through American lines was at times downright amazing to the ringfaces, Buck said. "On the first night his outfit was sent forward to reinforce the Marine lines more than 100 Japs managed to sneak past American outposts and seized several machine gun positions. "And it was quite a job to get them out of there," Buck said. "But we got them, every one."

Nearly all of their fighting on the islands was done at night, Buck declared. "You've just got to know how to fight at night if you're going to stay alive in those jungles."

During the four months he was on Guadalcanal Buck saw several of his pals killed and wounded.

After the Japs were finally routed and Guadalcanal had become a household term in every home in the nation, Buck and most of the fellows in his regiment were sent back to another Pacific point for a rest. It was while he was there that he received notice that his application for OCS had been accepted.

En route to Fort Benning he managed to get in a three-day visit at his home-town of Duluth, Minn., where he had worked for a candy company prior to joining the armed forces.

Of all the spots he visited during his year and a half abroad, Buck enjoyed Australia the most. "It was more like home," he explained. The weather on the islands is just "too darned hot," he said.

"This business about the paradise of the South Sea Islands is just a lot of bunk for my money," he added. "As a matter of fact, there's nothing anywhere out that way that can compare with the good old United States."

6 New Captains In 1st Regiment

Shoulders in the 6th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, are throwing around a lot of added weight these days. During the past week alone, seven members of the company, attending the Infantry School's Officers Advanced Course, doubled the silver they carry.

The former 1st lieutenants now are: Captain William B. Breeden, on detached service from the 70th Division at Camp Adair, Ore. He was graduated from John Hopkins University in 1939; Captain Edison Christian, also from the 70th Division. He is a Mississippi State graduate. Captain Vernon L. Davis, of the 1st Filipino Infantry at Camp Beale, California; Captain Davis put in over seven years service prior to receiving his commission from Infantry OCS at Fort Benning in August 1942.

Captain Nelson F. Erickson, graduate of Boston College, from the 98th Division; Captain Travis V. Hopkins, University of Missouri graduate, and now on detached service from the 100th Division at Fort Jackson, S. C.; Captain Harold C. Miller, from the 26th Infantry Division, Camp Campbell, Ky. He was graduated from Northwestern University; Captain Joseph D. Stonecipher, of the 98th Division. Captain Stonecipher attended Kansas State Teachers College and received his commission from Infantry OCS in August 1942.

Luckies Feasted On Armistice Day

Seventh Armored division soldiers were dished up a veritable entertainment cocktail Armistice Day at Shepard hall and the Service club.

In Shepard hall some 50 men played "Date Bingo" for dates with seven Columbus girls as final prizes. To determine whether they would win packages of cigarettes or dates after they had gone "bingo," winners had to contest one another in a dart game. Those who lost here were given cigarettes as consolation prizes.

Appearing on the program were Cpl. Michael Zacchagino, 31st Armored Bn., and Pfc. Louis Roselli, 48th Armored Inf. Bn., with their accordions; Cpl. Dale Griffith, 48th Armd. Inf., who warbled several popular tunes with the band; and Pvt. William High, 129th Ordnance-Maintenance Bn., who panicked GIs with his Ray Bolgar dancing and impersonation.

Harry Barany, 27, has found a home for his two small daughters while he is in the army. Barany received three proposals of marriage and 44 offers from would-be foster mothers, after he reported to an induction station with the children because he had no one with whom to leave them. The Red Cross helped him select a suitable home.

Ninth Street USO To Name Hot Piano King

Swing fans, particularly addicts of the boogie woogie style of piano playing, should get their fill of it in this coming Sunday at the Ninth Street USO when a contest will be held to determine Fort Benning's King of Hot Piano.

Eugene J. Bergman, director of the Ninth Street USO, has announced that the piano playing contest, open to all boogie woogie stylists, will begin at 7:45 p.m. E.W.T., with registrations accepted table either by telephone or when the contestant visits the club in person. Because of the expected flood of entries, Mr. Bergman has stated that the contest will of necessity be limited to the first 12 players to register with him.

Special prizes to the winner of the contest of a long distance call home or of a dozen roses to be sent to wives, sweethearts, or mothers, will be awarded to the first place victor. There will also be two consolation prizes for the second and third place Boogie Woogiests.

Inquiries to official agencies concerning either an officer or enlisted man should be accompanied by his serial number. Many members of the armed forces have identical names, and the serial number is the only means of exact identification.

528th Engineers (LP) Build Spans for TIS Demonstrations

The 528th Engineer Company (Light Ponton) was activated on January 24, 1943, at Camp Swift, Tex. 1st Lt. William B. Craig was assigned to lead this new unit with Lt. Harry M. Byers as his assistant. The cadre consisted of 13 non-commissioned officers who were sent from the 191st Engineer Company (Light Ponton), Camp Shelby, Miss.

The transition from raw recruits into a well trained group of soldiers was a slow but gratifying process. Along with the usual close order drill and the manual of arms, they were required to learn and to use the many tools which are issued to an Engineer unit.

At the offset of their basic training period the officers who were designated to be platoon leaders arrived Lt. Sam J. Ferlitta was the first to arrive on February 25. A few days later, on March 1, Lt. Johnson D. Ricketts, Lt. Payne Thebaut, Lt. Alvin G. Temple, Lt. Francis D. Shepard, arrived for duty at Camp Swift.

To fill a vacancy created by the loss of Lt. Shepard, Lt. Edward London arrived May 17. 1st Lt. John J. Kerley from the 554th Engineer Battalion, Camp Swift, replaced Lt. Temple. They brought with them invaluable information and the latest techniques in Engineering. After three months under such capable leadership from their officers and non-commissioned officers, the men came through their basic training tests with excellent grades.

On May 1, 1943 at an outing given for the company, the first ratings were given to those who had proven their ability to lead or excell in the technical jobs they were given. With this incentive to spur others on, the men entered the unit training period with a stimulated interest and a fervent desire to know their jobs better.

The next few months were spent in learning to construct, transport, and maintain the 10-ton ponton bridge. The men were now working as a unit, and learning to do practically every job entailed in the construction of the ponton bridge. Many days and nights were spent on the Colorado river constructing and dismantling the bridge. The men soon discovered that the Engineer usually came back from his duty hours with very wet feet, and a very tired back, but also with the satisfaction of a job well done.

Interspersed throughout the unit training period the men were being taught the art of camouflage, rifle marksmanship, road construction, and various other highly important jobs which the engineer must know. On May 19 the company was alerted for flood duty in Arkansas. This set the unit training schedule back two weeks as it was not until June 4 that the 528th was returned to a normal status.

UNIT LAUDED

Going into high gear the men were put through the infiltration and close combat course, completed a 25-mile hike at night with full combat equipment to make up for the time lost. A test conducted by Brig. Gen. John C. P. Barthoff, 5th Headquarters, and Col. Luther S. Cobb, in the construction of a 10-ton ponton bridge, infantry support bridge, infantry raft and foot bridge on the 23rd and 24th of August, received the following comment from Col. Cobb: "This is one of the finest exhibitions of ponton bridge construction I have witnessed for quite some time."

It was with a great satisfaction on August 26 the men of the unit were informed of their assignment to The Infantry School at Fort Benning.

Leaving Camp Swift, Tex., on August 31 and arriving in Fort Benning, September 2, the 528th immediately assumed the role of demonstration troops. To date all problems staged by the unit have received the grade of "superior."

With such an excellent start, needless to say the entire company feels that it is fulfilling the job instructed to it, and will continue to uphold the high standards that The Infantry School has always maintained.

WOMAN'S CLUB

Colonel William H. Hobson, commanding officer of Fort Benning, will give a lecture on his experiences overseas to the Current Events group of the Fort Benning Woman's Club Monday, November 22. The meeting will be held at 2 p. m. EWT in the ladies' lounge of the Officers' Club. All members of the Woman's Club are cordially invited to attend.

Colonel Hobson is making a return appearance before the group, who heard him talk at their October meeting. So enthusiastic was the response that group members have requested more details on his experiences in the Mediterranean and on landings in Italy.

Tate Changes From Sea Waves To Air Waves

Seafaring comes naturally to Pvt. John Tate, of Co. "G," First Parachute Training Regiment, son of Mr. and Mrs. Night Tate, of 106 Niagara St., Providence, R. I. His father has followed the sea all his life and is now a first mate on a ship somewhere between New York and Archangel, Russia. John was following right in his footsteps and at the age of 16 years got his first seaman's papers. He sailored for two years, until April of this year, up and down the submarine-infested waters of the Atlantic coast.

But John craved action. He wanted to become a paratrooper. So he talked it over with his father, went to see his local draft board and had his duration-deferred classification changed to 1-A. He really wanted to become a trooper.

At his reception center in the rush and bustle Private Tate found himself in the medical department. With determination he requested transfer to the Parachute Infantry and finally found himself at Fort Benning, starting the jump course.

Recently 5 Pvt. Tate realized his fought-for ambition and made his fifth and qualifying jump down on Lawson Field. He was jubilant as he shook out his 'chute and carried him perfectly through his "qualifying five." "Now for the real work, he said, of getting into action and really putting all this training to work." Seafaring to skyfaring for freedom and victory.

TIS CO Presented Order Of Bath

Major General Charles H. Bonesteel commandant of the Infantry School, was decorated by the British government with the honorary Order of the Bath (C. B.) at a ceremony in the British Embassy in Washington Tuesday afternoon. The decoration was presented to General Bonesteel by Lord Halifax, British ambassador to the United States. He was one of several officers similarly decorated.

The order bestowed on General Bonesteel was that of Companion of the Bath, one of the three classes of the order. The others are Knight of the Grand Cross (G. C. B.), and Knight Commander (K. C. B.)

This senior military order of Great Britain was first instituted in 1398. In the days of chivalry, admission to the order was a serious and important business which was carried out with much ceremony and preceded by vigil, fast, and ablution. It is generally believed that the name of this order was derived from some ceremony of bathing pertaining to it.

The order is now held by about 75 Americans, including General John J. Pershing who was made a Knight of the Grand Cross during World War I.

General Bonesteel received the decoration for his services as commander of the United Nations Iceland command which he held prior coming to the Infantry School. In this capacity he coordinated the relief of many British units stationed at that base by his American troops who took over their bases, equipment, and supplies.

While there he also commanded a British brigade, which, with the American troops, garrisoned the Island. In addition he had daily contacts with the British Royal Navy and the Royal Air Force, coordinating their work for the defense of Iceland. General Bonesteel was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal of the United States on the completion of his duties in Iceland.

TIS Urges Equipment Care

Along with the campaign to conserve food, to take precaution against fires and accidents and to keep silent information that might be of help to the enemy, The Infantry School at Fort Benning is now engaged in a campaign to "Take Care of Your Stuff."

By "stuff" is meant clothing and equipment. The idea was fostered by The Infantry Journal and heartily endorsed by Maj. Gen. Charles H. Bonesteel, Commandant of The Infantry School. All of the regimental and camp newspapers are carrying stories and cartons or photographs on the subject. These will be shortly augmented by a poster campaign.

It was pointed out that the sacrifices which have been made and will be made to provide the Army with implements of war will go for naught if those implements are not in workable shape when they are needed. They can be replaced, to be sure but the promise of new guns, new trucks, new winter clothing won't help fight off an enemy. The enemy has to be fought with the equipment on hand. Reasonable care should be kept that equipment in condition for use.

In Basic Training, a soldier is taught the care of equipment. As he goes along, he gets new equipment and is taught the care and maintenance to fit. It should be a second nature for a soldier to take care of his stuff. He should be more careful of it in the Army than he was of his own stuff in civilian life.

The difference is that in the Army, equipment that won't function is apt to cost a soldier his life. As a civilian, he usually could wait for a replacement or a repairman.

BOND FOR BABY

A $50 War Bond purchased by candidates of the First Company, 3d STR, has been presented to Miss Sandra Lee Mehen of 64 Indiana Avenue, Wheeling, W. Va. Miss Sandra Lee is the new daughter of Candidate Bernard J. Mehen and Mrs. Mehen of Wheeling, W. Va. The 10-pound girl was born Friday, Nov. 4, 1943.

Colonel Veazey Heads Benning School Board

Lt. Col. Alexander H. Veazey, post food service supervisor and assistant chief of the Special Service Branch, was named president of the Fort Benning Children's School Board this week by Col. William H. Hobson, Commanding Officer of Fort Benning.

Board members named by Col. Hobson were Major Fred L. Sparks, of the Academic Department of The Infantry School; Major Alfred L. Pollock, assistant chief, Chaplains branch; Col. Frank M. Thompson, chief, chaplains branch. President of the Fort Benning Parent-Teachers Association: Major William B. Hunter, Medical Corps, and 2nd Lieut. Jack H. Campbell, school officer, recorder.

Blair Couple Has Been With Laundry Since 1922

"A salute to Soldiers in Mufti," is the theme of the Bayonet's new feature which will herald the achievements of long-time civilian employes at Fort Benning. More than three-score of these "old timers" have served at Benning for ten years or more. Their stories are interesting and will provide each week a fitting salute from the military to the civilians who contribute their time and energies to making Fort Benning America's "most complete Army Post."—Editor).

Red dust—rising in clouds from Fort Benning's unpaved streets and settling on nurses' uniforms and officers' white—was one of the most vexing problems that Mr. and Mrs. William J. Blair had to face in the early days of the post's Quartermaster Laundry, now designated as Laundry No. 1.

MRS. BLAIR

Mr. Blair, superintendent and Mrs. Blair, senior forelady, have been in the laundry since it was opened March 15, 1922. Mr. Blair's civil service record with the War Department dates back to March 13, 1919, when he became laundry superintendent at Camp Grant, Ill. In Oct., 1919, he went to Camp Jackson, S. C., and came to Benning Dec. 16, 1921, to supervise installation of equipment at the laundry here.

MR. BLAIR

There was nothing very impressive about Fort Benning when the Blairs first saw it. There were no permanent buildings, and the 2,800 troops on the post were housed in wooden barracks and tents.

There was only one dirt road, in bad condition . . . between the post and Columbus, and many of the civilian employes and officer candidates commuted to and from town by train.

UNPAVED STREETS

The post's main thoroughfare—Vibbert avenue—was starred, but the other streets were unpaved. Mud made travel difficult in rainy weather, but dust from the streets in dry weather was a worse problem for the laundry. Gusts of wind blew the red dirt into the building, and the employes spent a lot of their time scurrying around trying to cover up clean white uniforms before they were ruined.

The growth and fluctuations in troop strength at the post have been reflected in the quantity and type of work brought to the laundry. It was the only laundry on the post until Laundry No. 2 began operations in 1941, and at the peak of the expansion between 1939 and 1941, the laundry handled work for as many as 20,000 troops.

Since the start of the national defense program, with the resulting vast increase in personnel at the post, the laundry's chief problem has been to turn out large quantities of work. But in peacetime, when Benning was a show post, the troops attached here were almost constantly on review, and their uniforms had to be washed and ironed so carefully that they could pass inspection for such formal occasions.

LASTING FRIENDS

The Blairs built up many a friendship among the men of the 29th Infantry during the 21 years the laundry handled their work. When the regiment moved out last spring, a lot of the men came around to say an almost tearful goodbye.

General Connor, after expressing general appreciation for the post's hospitality, added specific praise for the work of the laundry, pointing out that it was an important service that "might be overlooked in such a fiercely military atmosphere as prevails at Fort Benning."

Before he began working for the War Department, Mr. Blair ran a laundry in Chicago. Mrs. Blair, a native of Columbia, S. C., married him while he was working at Camp Jackson, and came with him to Benning. They live now at 2225 Bell street, Columbus.

Alien Paratrooper Fought, Ran Away; Lives to Fight Another Day

He who fights and runs away lives to fight another day, may be a poor adage. In the case of Corporal Michael Romek, however, such a philosophy seems well on its way to fulfillment.

Michael's country is at present in the hands of a Nazi-dominated government, and before entering our Army, Corporal Romek was a commissioned officer in the Army of his homeland. Now a qualified parachutist, Cpl. Romek has taken a long step on the road back to combat and the country of his birth to join in the fight of the United Nations against the powers of evil that have swept across the face of Europe.

Cpl. Romek was soldiering in his homeland when most of us were more worried over the outcome of a World Series, or the proper dress for a dance, than about the gathering clouds of blood and hate creeping over the horizons of the globe. A commissioned officer in a "Chasseur" unit of his country's armed forces, described by the corporal as a "combination ski and bicycle unit, which was engaged in border-hunting at the time of my duty." Border hunting was the technique of scouting along the countries bounding his own, and when the chance presented itself of taking a pot-shot at some soldiers across the border Cpl. Romek would have to create little "incidents".

In civilian life Cpl. Romek was a general-secretary for a large banking firm, acting as contact man between his firm and his government. In 1938, prior to the Munich conference, Cpl. Romek, was dispatched with his troops to the Czechoslovak border. At this point obeying the orders of his superior in command, who was, to quote Romek, "completely pro-Nazi." Romek carried out an attack on Czech pill-boxes. The action described by Cpl. Romek was one of surprise.

IF WE FAILED

"We knew exactly which boxes we were to attack; if we failed it meant we would be on exposed ground and vulnerable to an enfilade fire from other boxes. Attacking in the twilight hours gave us the advantage of poor visibility from the opposing force, and sliding noiselessly up to our objectives on skis, we accomplished our part of the mission.

"In the morning we were ordered to attack other areas, which

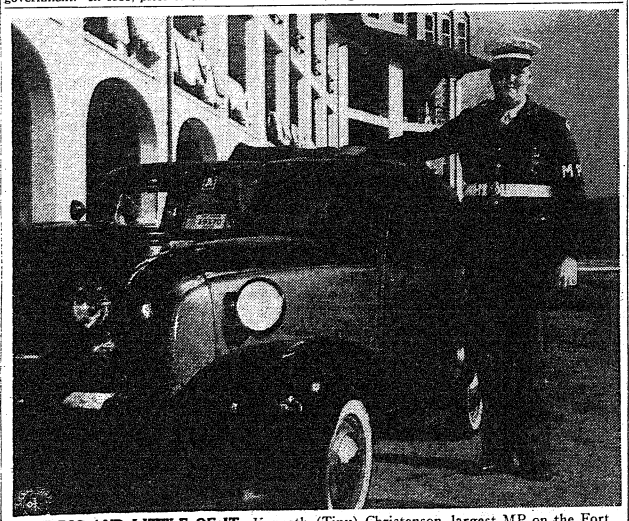
Brian Aherne Visits Post Today, Friday



Brian Aherne, distinguished Hollywood film star, will arrive at Fort Benning Thursday afternoon, for a series of informal appearances at service clubs, recreational halls, hospitals, and mess halls, Lt. Colonel Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer, announced.

Aherne, who has just completed a new picture with Rosalind Russell entitled "What a Woman," will arrive from Atlanta at 2 p. m. EWT and will spend the remainder of the day and all day Friday on the reservation. He is scheduled to depart early Saturday morning.

The actor is visiting service establishments of the country as a member of the Hollywood Victory Committee. He appeared at Camp Wheeler, Ga., and Lawson General Hospital in Atlanta earlier this week.

THE BIG AND LITTLE OF IT—Kenneth (Tiny) Christenson, largest MP on the Fort Benning Post, supports his Peewee "Crosley" car, said to be the smallest auto on the Post. Tiny is six feet two inches tall and about the same the other way. He weighs 13 pounds less than 300, but isn't worried over that unlucky number 13. This "little" boy is good-natured, but a soldier has to be awfully far "under the weather" to start an argument with him while on duty. Off duty Tiny spends his time near the mess hall where this picture was taken. The car came down this week from the MP's home town, Walworth, Wis., on the back of a truck. He says it will run 50 miles on a gallon of gas, and if it runs out then he merely drops it in a mail box, stamped and addressed to his barracks, and takes a bus back—if he can get a double reservation on the bus. Thanksgiving Day Slate Features Many Dances At Post Service Clubs

After a wartime Thanksgiving, too busy to take time out for a holiday, Fort Benning soldiers are looking forward to the evening of special events arranged for their amusement.

The army's only official recognition of the occasion was the traditional Thanksgiving turkey feast served at noon. Apart from that, the regular schedule of training was followed for troops at the post.

But tonight the service clubs and the service men's centers in Columbus and Phenix City will present special entertainment to mark the day.

At Service Club No. 1 on the Main Post, the regular Thursday night broadcast of the Reception Center Chorus, beginning at 8:30, will be devoted to Thanksgiving music. At Service Club No. 2 in the Sand Hill area, the 48th Armored Infantry Orchestra is playing for a tea dance from 4 to 8 o'clock.

SPECIAL MUSIC

A special musical program has been arranged at Service Club No. 3, beginning at 8:30 o'clock. George Brown, blues singer, and the Third Student Training Regiment Panthers orchestra will provide music for a dance at Service Club No. 5 from 5 to 8 o'clock.

In the Alabama area gym, the Lawson Field Orchestra will play for a dance arranged by Service Club No. 7. The festivities will begin at 9 o'clock.

In Columbus, there will be a formal dance at the 9th Street USO, with the 131st Infantry Band furnishing the music, and the Junior Dance Hostesses as partners for GI's. The Army-Navy YMCA-USO will serve refreshments to soldiers who come in, and the Negro Army-Navy YMCA has scheduled a tea.

The Salvation Army USO in Phenix City is holding open house. Attractions include refreshments and plenty of girls as hostesses.

Strange Names, Yes, But That's America for You

If it were not for nicknames or short cuts to pronunciation of names company commanders, first sergeants, and their men might sneeze more often.

Sgt. James Economokas, of Chicago, Illinois, and Sgt. Walter Domhoski, of Oglesby, Illinois, man their tanks in the 40th Tank Battalion, of the 7th Armored Division, much as they did their "kiddie-kars" in the yesteryear, but when the men of Company D, of the 40th try to man their names they revert to calling them "Sergeants", with an accent.

Signal Officer Is Full Colonel

Promotion to the rank of full colonel has been announced at Fort Benning for Lt. Col. A. W. Young, Post Signal Officer of the reservation since March of 1942.

Under his command, many changes to the communications system of the Fort have taken place. One of the most outstanding of these was the conversion of all phones at Fort Benning from manually operated to dial. Previously the Sand Hill, Harmony Church, and Alabama areas had manual phones.

A native of Brooklyn, N. Y., Colonel Young has had 40 years of work in communications, the last 37 of them in Denver, Colo. He began his work in 1902 with the Brooklyn Telephone company. Three years later he went to Denver to join the Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph company. When he was called to active duty for the present war he had progressed through the company's positions to that of vice-president of the organization.

Colonel Young, a veteran of the last war, went to France as a captain commanding Company D of the 405th Telephone Battalion. Following the Armistice he remained in Germany with the 52nd Telephone Battalion, stationed at Niewed. He was promoted to major while he was there, and in 1925 was advanced to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Thanksgiving Chow Includes Turkey Aplenty

It's going to be turkey with trimmin's today, Thanksgiving Day, for soldiers at Fort Benning as well as other posts and camps in the southeastern states — and there won't be any skimpy helpings.

Prepared menus, released by Col. Jack L. Meyer, director of supply at the post, show that there is to be 100 pounds of turkey for every 100 men—and a pound of turkey is not a luncheon sandwich slice of meat in any language.

Neither were the Benning soldiers exactly starved at breakfast this morning. For the morning meal—just to whet their appetite for the "big feed" to come, they had oranges, dry cereal, fresh milk, French toast and syrup, bacon, butter and coffee.

NO HASH TODAY

And the mess sergeant will feed them this evening just as if they hadn't had a belt-bustin' meal at noon—and it won't be turkey hash. That'll come later in the week. For supper tonight the G. I.'s will have cold cuts, sliced cheese, potato cakes, left-over vegetables, bread, butter and cocoa.

Fruit Cocktail
Cream of Celery Soup
Olives—Mixed Pickles—Celery Hearts
Roast Turkey with Sage Dressing
Mashed Potatoes—Creamed Corn
Green Peas
Tomato and Lettuce Salad with Mayonnaise
Pumpkin Pie—Ice Cream—Cookies
Hot Rolls—Butter—Crackers
Apples—Oranges—Grapes
Coffee—Lemonade.

Mr. Conway Named Chief Warrant Officer

Warrant Officer Joseph H. Conway has been promoted to the rank of chief warrant officer according to an announcement by Colonel Wilson M. Spann, commanding officer of the ASTP Basic Training Center.

Mr. Conway received his basic training at Camp Croft, S. C., and came to Fort Benning to the 2nd Student Training Regiment in January, 1942. He was appointed warrant officer, junior grade on December 24th, 1942.

Spirit Non-Coms To Feast Friday

Members of the 176th Infantry's NCO Club will feast this coming Friday night in gala celebration of Thanksgiving. In true holiday spirit, the eats will be "on the house." A likely stage show is being assembled and, along with the Spirit band, will provide the entertainment for the evening.

What Would One Expect Homing Pigeon To Do?

When Pvt. James Courtessi, who keeps the pigeon loft at the 131st Infantry Regiment's communication section, went out to count the birds the other morning, he rubbed his eyes in disbelief and then counted again.

He had found half a dozen extra pigeons contentedly cooing around in the loft, investigation showed that they bore a band listed to a private owner, and weren't even Army pigeons.

A little investigation, however, solved the mystery. It seems that when the 124th Infantry was in the same area out in Harmony Church, acting as school troops for the Infantry School, a soldier who was a fancier in private life had brought his pigeons along with him. They were utilized in the communications section of the 124th, and had proved very valuable birds.

But when the 124th moved to Fort Jackson, S. C., somebody had let the birds out of their loft before they had become acclimated and accustomed to their new home. With true pigeon homing instinct, the birds took off and returned to Fort Benning. Pvt. Courtessi now is holding the birds until he hears from Sgt. J. R. Indovino, of the 124th, who has been caring for the birds, at Fort Jackson.

Ex-Book Binder Used Human Skin On One Set

"As a hand book-binder," said Sgt. Otto Zahn of Anti-Tank Company the 176th Infantry of the Infantry School. "I met up with some very interesting people. I once was asked to bind a book in human skin." But that is getting ahead of the story.

Otto Zahn was born on March 6, 1906 in Arnstadt, Germany, the son of a master book-binder. Zahn was taught the fine art by his father, and from 1922-25 attended a specialized school in Weimar, Germany. Some of Zahn's work has appeared in several art exhibits throughout Europe.

BEAUTIFUL (???)

"A doctor who lived across the street from me once brought me a piece of human skin with which he wanted two books bound," related Zahn. "It seems he had gotten the piece of skin from the laboratory. He took that skin to a tannery and had it tanned. Of course he didn't tell them what it was because they wouldn't have touched it, let alone tan it for him. He brought the finished product to our place and I bound two books for him with it. It was a beautiful piece of leather, very heavy but soft."

In January 1927, Zahn came to America and settled in Buffalo, N. Y. where he lived with his uncle. "I had a pretty tough time of it, at first," he said. "I didn't know the language, the people or the customs. I did odd jobs in order to get along. I was fortunate enough to land a job with the Buffalo Public Library, where I was able to put my talents to good use. I did quite a bit of gold-tooling, that is putting designs and names on books in gold."

3,000 BOOKS

In 1932, Zahn went back to Germany to take care of his father's business, coming back to the United States in January 1934. He worked for a commercial binder in Buffalo until 1938 when he was called to Washington, D. C. to organize the Dumbarton-Oaks bindery for the former Ambassador Robert Woods Bliss. Starting from scratch, Zahn built up the collection, binding over 3,000 books.

"In 1940 the institution was given to Harvard University," continued Zahn, "and I went along, working for Harvard University until I was drafted in the Army. I became a member of the 176th in May of 1941. From that time until today, I married and became the father of a baby boy. When this mess is all over with, I hope to settle down somewhere and continue my work of beautifying choice volumes with special bindings."

Col. Hobson On Thanksgiving

Col. William H. Hobson, commanding officer of Fort Benning, Georgia, today issued the following Thanksgiving Day message:

"This is truly a day which we of Fort Benning can be thankful. We have not weakened through the trying days of the war. We have not lost the zeal and determination to keep those priceless heritages which God has seen fit to bestow upon us. Rather we have been strengthened in our resolution to go forward to victory and to those aims which will continue Thanksgiving Days as glorious ones in the history of our beloved country.

"As commanding officer of Fort Benning, I desire to take this opportunity to extend to the officers and enlisted personnel, as well as to the civilian employes of the Post and our civilian neighbors about Fort Benning, my sincere best wishes for an enjoyable Thanksgiving Day."

The 269th Station Hospital, now is in training at the Post Station Hospital, it was announced today by Major George W. Shelton, commanding officer. It received unit training at Camp Ellis, Illinois, an Army Service Force Unit Training Center, where the unit was activated on May 25, 1943.

The organization was started with a cadre composed of enlisted men from the 48th General Hospital, Memphis, Tenn. The cadre, headed by 1st Lt. Tom O. Burke, MAC, arrived at Camp Ellis, Ill., to find the camp still in the process of construction. Many problems confronted those who joined the unit at that time. By dint of hard, energetic work and cooperation of the officers and men, these difficulties were surmounted. The spirit then manifested is still present and is growing as time goes on.

Major Shelton, upon assumption of command, immediately instituted and has adhered to, a vigorous and carefully planned training program to fulfill the purpose of this unit, namely, that of operation as a fixed hospital in an army base overseas.

As the men arrived and joined the organization, they were carefully classified an dassigned, for technical training, to surgical, medical, dental, laboratory, X-ray, pharmacy, cooks and bakers, clerical, and other service schools. After this phase of training, the unit changed stations, arriving at Fort Benning, on September 10, 1943, to participate in active hospital work. Today, those men who were graduated from the various technical schools are diligently applying themselves to their particular specialties in the wards and clinics of the Station Hospital, under the supervision of the medical officers in attendance.

OFFICERS LEARN

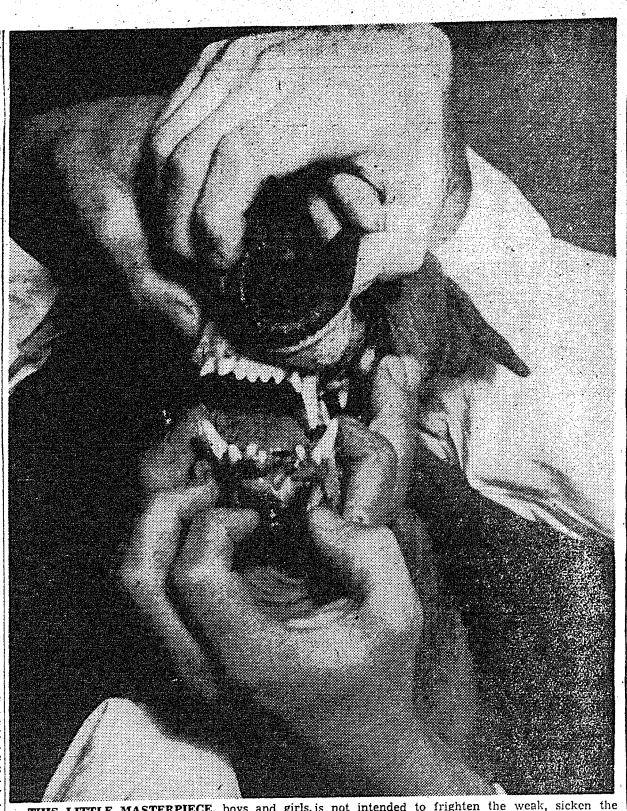
Officers of the organization have also been assigned to the station hospital to receive first-hand knowledge of the professional and administrative operation of an army hospital. This invaluable training is being made possible through the coordination of the work of the Station Hospital with the training program of the 269th Station Hospital under the direction of Col. William Denton, post surgeon.

The physical conditioning program begun immediately after activation has been continued at Fort Benning with scheduled marches, hikes and bivouacs. This field training, distinct and separate from the technical training of the unit, is being given under the direction and supervision of Lt. Col. Clarence A. Will, post plans and training officer. Recently the officers and men successfully completed the live ammunition mental conditioning courst, as a part of this phase of their training.

The 269th Station Hospital boasts a record of 98 per cent in subscriptions among its personnel to National Service Life Insurance and has also answered the call in the recent War Bond program. The organization is fortunate in having many enlisted men who are gifted and talented showmen. They have produced their own shows, plays and entertainment in a professional manner. A Halloween party and show was produced and enthusiastically received by the officers and men, on the evening of October 29 in the unit day room. A Christmas show of carols and plays is being planned. The players are coached by 2nd Lt. Roland A. Johnson, MAC. The special service officer of the unit since activation has been 2nd Lt. William T. Connors.

OFFICER PERSONNEL

The hospital's executive officer is Captain Ben V. Myers, MC. 2nd Lt. Edgar A. Davis, MAC, is the adjutant, and 2nd Lt. Melvin Rosenthal, MAC, is detachment commander. Major Harry W. Hennis, DC, has been designated chief of dental service.



The other officers are Captain Lloyd W. Anderson, MC; Captain Francis D. Brown, MC; Captain William L. Claiborne, MC; Captain Joseph L. Maxwell, DC; Captain James L. Pipes, MC; Captain James K. Ross, MC; Captain Louis Schlan, MC; Captain Robert W. Watson, MC; Captain Glenn G. Stoddard, DC; Captain Charles W. Hurst, MAC; 1st Lt. Harold Bialock, SC; 1st Lt. George N. Seifert, DC; 1st Lt. Tom O. Burke, MAC, plans and training; 1st Lt. Prince E. Turner, chaplain; 2nd Lt. Timothy V. Sullivan, MAC, and 2nd Lt. Robert L. Christensen, MAC, supply officers; 2nd Lt. Kenneth D. Tomter, MAC, utilities and transportation officer. Chief Warrant Officer Wilbur R. Key, personnel officer.

THIS LITTLE MASTERPIECE, boys and girls, is not intended to frighten the weak, sicken the sensitive, nor replace the pin-up girls. In the public relations office we frequently get lulus like this and it just occurred to us that you'd like to see some of the stuff we have to put up with. Every newspaper office gets gems which hit the wastebasket automatically but when the stuff gets as bad as this little number it's just too bad to throw it away. So we've saved some of the classics like this and we'll share them with you. Here's the story back of this monstrosity. Max was a parachuting dog with the 505th Parachute Infantry. News reel and still cameramen came down to get pictures of him but on the morning of the big day Max got himself hit by a truck, much to the disgust of the picture boys. Well, we got out hourly bulletins on his condition and news of Max's condition was awaited with bated breath by a palpitating nation at war. He finally recovered. But one day we got a call that an operation was going to be performed on his broken jaw and could we please send a photographer. We did and whether he had a hang-over or was just getting over the line into delirium tremens, we don't know, but this is what he came up with. It's been in our basket entitled what not to get in pictures. Maybe you'd like to see more of our headaches. We've got lots of them but this will sort of give you the idea. (U. S. Army Signal Corps Photo.)

Reception Center Chorus In Hundredth Broadcast

When the Reception Center Chorus of Fort Benning presents a Thanksgiving Day program at 8:37 p. m. tonight over WRBL, it will be the 100th presentation of this now famed singing organization.

It was just two years ago on Thanksgiving Day that the group of colored soldiers gave its first broadcast, and since then, beside their broadcasts, the singers have made many appearances at churches, USO clubs and other places in Columbus. Last Christmas they gave a series of Christmas carol concerts on the post at Fort Benning and in Columbus.

The chorus was organized in April 1941 under the leadership of Pvt. Van J. Malone, who now is First Lieutenant Chaplain Malone. He picked men from the ranks on the basis of their knowledge and love of music, with the idea of singing "Songs of the Soul." The singers soon established a reputation, and then when they began singing over the ether waves, this reputation spread rapidly.

Sgt. Abner Jackson served as director of the Chorus until December 1941, when Pvt. Jack Montgomery assumed the directorship, serving until September, 1942 when Sgt. Willis Brown took over the baton. He still is the leader.

BROWN SOLE SURVIVOR

Because of transfer of personnel at the Reception Center, Sgt. Brown now is the only member of the original group of singers remaining. When the broadcasting began, Pvt. Ray McIver, now serving overseas, and Lieut. Malone served as narrators. When Lieut. Malone was commissioned in August of this year, Sgt. William Washburn, Jr., (then a corporal) took over the task as narrator, in addition to serving as one of the second tenor soloists with the chorus.

The chorus is sponsored by the Special Service office of the Reception Center, under the direction of First Lieut. Robert M. Reynolds. When the chorus started, Maj. R. P. Langley, then a captain, was in command of the office, and assisted the budding group to secure a start.

Practices and rehearsals all are conducted after regular working hours since all of the members have their regular army duties. The members are all college men from many leading colleges and universities, and many of them have responsible duties in the training of the Special Training Regiment now attached to the Reception Center.

An outstanding singer with the chorus was Pvt. Rawn Spearman, just lately appointed a staff sergeant. His beautiful voice helped establish the popularity of the chorus and he now manages to make appearance with them whenever his duties permit. Sgt. Varnall Ford, accompanist, has also contributed in building up the chorus.

The group has rendered programs at Tuskegee Institute, and in Atlanta in addition to appearances in Columbus.

CAPTAIN SANDERS

Announcement has been made of the promotion of Earl E. Sanders, Shreveport, La., to the rank of captain.

Captain Sanders entered the service in February, 1941 and for more than a year served with the 156th Infantry. In May, 1942, he was selected to attend Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning and received his commission August 19, 1942. Since that time he has been a tactical officer in the 3rd Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School.

We are what we are. But what we do about it is something else.

Columbus, Soldier Orchestra Plans Concert Dec. 19

The Columbus Concert Orchestra, sponsored by the 9th Street USO in Columbus is hard at work preparing for their first concert of the winter season to be given on about December 19.

The orchestra, under the direction of Sgt. Murray Austrian of Basic Training Center, is made up of soldiers and civilians, with the soldiers tippin the scales by about 80 per cent. According to Sgt Austrian, any soldier—an enlisted man or an officer—may play with the orchestra if he possesses the necessary qualification. Rehearsals are held Monday nights at the USO and begin at 8:45 p. m.

The purpose of the orchestra is to present a series of concert on the Post as well as in Columbus.

Now playing in the Columbus Concert Orchestra are many members of established Fort Benning bands and additional talented soldier musicians.

77th AGF Band, Camp Livingston, Joins AST Center

The 77th Army Ground Forces Band has been assigned to the ASTP Basic Training Center according to an announcement by Colonel Wilson M. Spann, commanding officer.

Transfer of the band from Camp Livingston, La., has been completed and it is now quartered in the Headquarters Company Area of the ASTP Basic Training Center.

Prior to his entry into active service was connected with the Trenton Board of Education. He is a graduate of the Institute of Musical Art of the Juilliard School of Music, The Curtis Institute, and the University of Pennsylvania.

SMOLENSK' CELEBRATES

First Sergeant Peter A. Smolenski, assigned to the Fifth Company, Third Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School, celebrated 15 years of Army service last Sunday. He enlisted in Chicago in 1929.

Chapel Choir Now Rehearsing For Yuletide

The Senior Choir will render the following anthem at the 10:30 service Sunday morning in Main Chapel. "Sanctus", by Monson and "Beautiful Saviour" by Carlyl.

The evening choir will sing the following anthems for the 6:30 vesper service on Dec. 19, and a midnight service Dec. 24. The choirs are rehearsing a short cantata by Bach. "For Us a Child Is Born" with many anthems and Carols. Singers with choir experience are cordially invited to join the choir. Tenors and bases are especially needed.

Rehearsals for junior choir 6, Friday and Senior choir 8, Friday, in the chapel.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM D. NABORS has returned from the U. S. task force in Liberia to attend The Infantry School's Advanced Course as a member of the 1st Student Training Regiment. In our Army since 1912, he soldiered in France and Germany with the AEF, then served as American military adviser to Liberia from 1919 to 1925, and 1936 to '41. When December 7 caught Nabors at The Infantry School for refresher studies, he flew back to the African republic last year as psychological expert and liaison officer for Uncle Sam's troops there.

ASTP Soloist To Be Heard In Post Chapel

One of the busiest artists on the Post is Staff Sergeant Tommy Carmitchell of the ASTP Basic Training Center. His singing engagements for the next several months include appearances at the Parachute Chapel, the Main Post Chapel, the Girard Baptist Church of Girard, Ala., and a program of popular songs over Station WRBL on the "Fort Benning on the Air" series sponsored by the Post Public Relations Office.

Sergeant Carmitchell, son of Mrs. Jennie Carmitchell of 821 East Orange Avenue, Lancaster, Pa., was prior to his enlistment in the Army in March, 1941, connected with the Wilbur-Suchard Chocolate Co., of Lititz, Pa. However, singing was his forte and he filled numerous engagements as soloist with Louis Katzman's Band and over the airwaves on Radio Stations WINS of New York, WGA and WKJC of Lancaster, and WGBI of Harrisburg, Pa.

He is a graduate of J. W. Cooper Memorial High School of Shenandoah, Pa., and attended Catawaba College of Salisbury, N. C., and the University of Baltime, Baltimore, Md.

Since entering the Army he has derived a great amount of pleasure in singing for the soldiers and plans his programs for their special benefit

Save Those Waste Fats and Old Papers

Last week the BAYONET published a photo of Captain Herman Klein, post salvage officer, inspecting the disappointing results of the week's "take" from the quarters about the post, especially the only half-filled can of waste fats, fats so desperately needed by the United Nations for the manufacture of high explosives.

Every effort has been made by the Government in press and radio to impress upon housewives the very important contribution they can make to the successful prosecution of the war by saving these waste fats. They are almost as badly needed as the dollars which we put into War Bonds. Every kitchen in the nation should and could be converted into an unending source of supply for the munitions plants of the country, and all that is needed is a little thought and cooperation on the part of our womenfolk.

Paper also has become a critical item, and all post housewives are urged to scour their attics and cellars for old newspapers and magazines. It is also suggested that the daily newspaper, when finished by the family, be put away in a definite nook and then be placed outside the house where the salvage trucks can pick them up each Thursday. Of course it is realized that a small supply must be kept for building fires these chilly days, but by removing papers from attics and cellars housewives will be performing double-duty. First they will be removing a definite fire hazard; secondly they will be helping to win the war.

This business of saving fats, scrap metal, and paper for the salvage officer should not be a sporadic one. Housekeepers should keep in mind the fact that this war is by no means sporadic: it is being fought day and night, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. And we on the home front should see to it that our boys on the firing line get everything they need. They are giving so much; surely we can make this effort which will mean so much to them.

By Their Deeds Shall Ye Know Them

On November 8, many soldiers of the 3rd Battalion, 131st Infantry, due to a reorganization and consolidation, sallied forth sporting chevrons. Some of these men had never had the satisfaction of wearing chevrons before while others merely had a stripe or two added.

The writer, being an addict of the somewhat gruesome yet enlightening art of physchology, made it a point to observe the reactions of these men under the stress and strain of added arm weight, not to mention the added acquisition of POWER as some are won't to take it. My findings have prompted me give chevron wearers the following classifications, and I firmly believe these classifications are universal insofar as all armies are concerned:

First, there is the man of innate culture and learning who is secure in the thought that he is doing his job well to help win the war and would continue to do so, chevrons or no chevrons. Chevrons came his way because he had shown adeptness in his chosen field—adeptness founded on constant study and hard work. NOTHING TURNS THIS MAN'S HEAD.

Secondly, there is the man who had little chance of obtaining an education in civil life—the man who eked out a mediocre existence there but who found himself in the army. He is somewhat surprised and bewildered that he is doing so well and freely admits it. Naturally, he is proud of his chevrons but he does not flaunt them in front of his fellow soldiers. THIS MAN IS DOING A GOOD JOB FOR UNCLE SAM.

Thirdly, there is the man who never amounted to anything in civil life and never would have. By the coincidence of a world upheaval, he finds himself in the army. He is vainglorious, greedy and fighting for only one man, himself. While walking, his arms swing in an arc of 30 inches so that he can be assured that the populace misses not a single inch of a single chevron. He knows nothing but keeps it hidden somehow through loud talk and bravado. HE IS OF NO USE TO THE ARMY AND IT DOES NOT TAKE HIS OFFICERS LONG TO FIND IT OUT.

Fourthly, there is the man who was the personification of docility previous to the advent of chevrons but who has become Napoleon, Hitler, Mussolini and Hirohito all wrapped up in one. He puffs out his chest and begins to give his former buddies hell. This type of non-com soon loses his stripes as well as his buddies. From then on the army is no good,—it has mistreated him. THIS AN NEEDS A GOOD DOSE OF INTROSPECTION.

Fifthly, there is the regular army non-com. He comes in two types. The first type pouts and grieves because he has competition from smart young draftees; who belittles these draftees by saying they know nothing about the army and is in continual distrust of these men when they outstrip him in rank. THIS MAN HAS A CHANCE IF HE WILL STOP BELLY-ACHING AND BEING JEALOUS.

The second type is easy going but gets things done. He is tolerant but strict withal. He even goes out of his way to help other men get ahead. He helps them, and, in so doing, helps himself and our army. THIS MAN IS A FINE NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

I have appraised the situation entirely impartially and my findings lead me to one conclusion: it is an honor to be a PRIVATE, it is an honor to be a NON-COM, but— it is more of an honor to be of mutual assistance and play the field with a good team. Be a disciplinarian where discipline is needed; use the milk of human kindness where it is needed; be a big brother to the newcomer and, above all— stick strictly to your MISSION, the winning of this war. Think in terms of STARS and STRIPES instead of in STRIPES alone.—MEN, TAKE YOUR CHOICE.

'Chow Hound'—Army Term For Glutton

Yes, you have one too. In fact every branch of the service has them I will insure you that your particular company has more than one. Probably a dozen or so. What am I talking about. Well, it is the "Chow hound".

I am sure that no further explanation is necessary. This animal is the creature who consumes all the food which is within his greedy reach. This person is the individual who sits down and takes 3 of the 12 pancakes, one cup of milk, (oh, don't forget that mi'k that he so "very sparingly" poured on his cereal and in his coffee) 3 pieces of toast and then proceeds to gourge himself while his comrades sit by and partake of nothing or an amount that only activates his digestive organs. This is the "soldier" with whom you have to spend 13 weeks and if you are unlucky enough, you might be affiliated with "him" for the next year and a half.

But what can you do with this person? There have, over a period of time, come into practice a few measures that have proved 100% efficient. These I am not going to mention because we must attempt to keep peace and tranquility among our fellows-in-arms. I will, however, give this one suggestion. See your Mess Sergeant. The Sergeant has been in the army for some time and knows a few things that will "nip the bud" right where it is. He has been allotted a certain amount of food for so many men. When a person eats all his share and 50 per cent of the next man's, you can see what will happen. Multiply that by 12 and you really have a problem.

To the chow hound I have this to say. "Soldier", you had better mend your ways and get on the ball. The man across from you, your companion in the field, might not be able to "lick" you physically but there are means of getting around this temporarily, and I do mean temporary, obstacle. I hope you will see that you are cheating your friends out of the food that he needs. So let's pull together on this mess hall food grabbing and try to see if we can't allow the other fellow to have his share of food without having to bring his M-1 and bayonet into the dining room in order to insure himself of the food that he needs.

The Thirteenth Company, Sixth Training Regiment went into the field with packs, pieces and all the other "light" equipment which goes into one of those marches. Where and why did we go- We went to a site opposite Lawson Field to have our first meal in the field. And was that some meal. As soon as we arrived we pitched our shelters and then chow call was sounded. When we were told to bring our canteen cups we expected to have a stew of some sort but instead of the stew we had Roast Beef, potatoes, peas, and fruit. This meal was served on paper plates which necessitated no elbow grease and Brillo. After taking a short snooze of 20 minutes, we went through our extended order drill. Striking our shelters, which had been covered with brush so "enemy" observations planes wouldn't be able to observe us, we packed and headed back to the Area. Lieutenant Greenlief, leading the formation, must have forgotten his Geometry because we were marched a full quarter of a mile beyond the turn and had to double back to reach the road which led to home. "The shortest distance between two points is a broken line.", That doesn't sound right, but any way we arrived with a few muscles that we never knew we had possessed. It was the consensus of opinion that with meals like that to be had in the field, boys, let's do that more often. Mess Sergeant, you and your crew did and Ace high job. More power to you.

Pvt. Howard Fitzgerald,
ASTP Tr. Reg't.

Attention To Small Details Important

Addressing the enlisted personnel of The Infantry School's 1st Student Training Regiment for the first time since he assumed command of the organization in June, Colonel John S. Roosma stressed that the cadre must set an example in military courtesy to the thousands of students in the regiment.

"Salute with snap," advised the Colonel, declaring that well-disciplined outfits win battles abroad and do their tasks efficiently on the home front. "Not only does a disciplined soldier create a better impression, but such training improves the accuracy and speed of his work, however specialized it may be.

"Pay attention to details: your shave, haircut, the fit of your uniform," he continued. "Watch your conduct in town and public conveyances. A few offenders can give the entire regiment a bad name."

Col. Roosma's words are pithy with wisdom. The entire personnel of the post would do well to practice what the Colonel is preaching.

To be free means to be the best you can be—free, not just politically or economically but free from slavery to things and attitudes.

WE GOT A FIRST SERGEANT THAT'S VERY STRICT ON RIFLE INSPECTION

GOOD WORK, SERGEANT—Perhaps your cure is a bit harsh—But you certainly realize the importance of properly caring for equipment. When the time comes for one of your men to shoot or be shot, we'll put our money on your boy—his rifle will work.

USO Presents—

THANKSGIVING EN TERTAINMENT GALORE FOR TURK EY DAY

BY LT. M. S. DANK

GI's and their guests on this Thanksgiving Day should be able to find entertainment and eats galore both in Columbus and Phenix City. . .A review of the special events taking place at the various USO buildings in the area brings out the following: At the Ninth St. USO—A Thanksgiving Day formal dance—the first formal of the season. . .Music bythe 131st Infantry band . . . Junior Dance Hostesses will be present to add a touch of color to the event and of course to help keep the GI jitterbugs happy. . .Incidentally, keeping up the policy adopted last year, the Ninth Street USO will once again serve Turkey dinners at its Snack Bar for those in town . . .Cost will be nominal, and the dinners will be served from 4 o'clock on. . .

At the Army-Navy YMCA USO there will be doughnuts and cider served throughout the day for those dropping in. . .

Across the Chattahoochee river in Phenix City, the Salvation Army USO Club will also hold an open house with appropriate entertainment for the Thanksgiving. . .It's promised that the usual bountiful eats will be even more abundant for the months of service personnel tonight . . . There'll be girls too . . .

The Negro Army-Navy YMCA has scheduled what is called a Thanksgiving "tea," except that the party which starts at the customary time for afternoon tea will go on until closing time. . .Location is 841 5th Ave.

It will be the turn of Officer Candidates to shine tomorrow night, with two of the clubs in the city scheduling dances for them . . . The YMCA, at 1425 3rd Ave., will hold one of the events for OC's tomorrow evening . . . Invitations may be obtained through unit Special Service Officers . . . The second dance, sponsored by the Shorter College and Cotillion Clubs, will be given for the 8th Company of Officer Candidates at the Army-Navy YMCA at 14 W. 11th St. beginning at 8:45, Benning Time . . .

The Presbyterian Service Center, at 1st Avenue and 11th St., has extended an invitation for all members of the armed forces to take advantages of its facilities . . . Food—there are refreshments each Saturday night, and sandwiches every Sunday afternoon during the Social Hour which starts around 6 o'clock (Benning Time) . . .

The Army-Navy YMCA-USO, 14 W. 11th St., announces that until the close of the year, it will send out its popular "talking" pictures mounted as Christmas cards . . . The pictures, which are snapped while the service man or woman is making a recording to be sent home or to friends, are made every evening from 8 to 10 o'clock, and all day on Sunday . . .

GI's on the Post are reminded of the party to be given on Saturday night, 8 o'clock Benning Time, at the Service Men's Club of the Episcopal church at 1130 1st avenue . . . Refreshments, of course . . . And on Sunday night, starting at 6:30, Benning Time, the Club will hold its regular Vespers program followed by a supper for members of the armed forces . . . There is no question as to church affiliation . . . All are welcome.

The weekly Town Hall discussion group of the Ninth St. USO will maintain the spirit of the present holiday weekend in its meeting Sunday when it presents its program under the title, "Things we have to be thankful for—The Four Freedoms." The discussion, which gets under way at 3 o'clock, Benning Time, will feature speakers versed in each of the four points for which the United Nations are now fighting this war.

There's an air of mystery pervading the offices of the Salvation Army clubs both in Columbus and Phenix City. . .Program directors from both places, with knowing smiles, amounting almost to leers of satisfaction, will say nothing about these secretive doings other than to indicate that they are preparing a Circus for the entertainment of their visitors. . .Said circus is scheduled to make its appearance sometime in the early part of December.

This Khaki'd World—

When Mrs. Baker, hostess of Service Club No. 2, came to work one day this week she found her key wouldn't open the door. So along came Lt. William Karrenbauer, asistant Special Service Officer of the Lucky Seventh, and picked the lock neatly. Mrs. Baker is wondering slightly about his past.

And they also tell how WAC Helen Gillies tossed sore unauthorized objects into hood of her utility coat, to stand the inspection. Forgot all about them until she started to toss the hood next morning in Church.

They tell how the Academic Wacs (Called Wacademics for short) spent so much time week ago getting barracks cleaned up for Saturday a. m. inspection that they were caught short when the lois of them had to rush like dickens to wriggle into blouses. And one was minus even more than that.

What, no turkey ration this year for the guys on separate rations? Boy, they're hurting!

Sgt. McMahon, in Morning Report section, is really burning these days. Somebody from 7th Armored called him on phone the other morning and innocently asked "Are you a WAC?" Mac, who weighs well over 200 and has a grip like a python putting the squeeze on a rabbit, could only supter.

Boys in the Academic Regiment claim Sgt. McDermott gets out and howls at the moon.

..And the boys in Company C., are claiming that Corps. Rockwood and Larson get up far, far ahead (or are they just coming in?) of reveille to make up their beds and mop floors.

Sgt. Solid, the solid sending Lothario from Lawson Field, back from furlough and anxious to start going up to Newnan again.

Chaplain's Corner..

GIVE THANKS

Chaplain F. M. Thompson

"Our corn did prove well; and God be praised; we had a good increase of Indian corn. Our harvest being gotten in, our governor sent four men on fowling, that so we might, after a special manner rejoice together after we had gathered the fruit of our labor. Many of the Indians came amongst us, and among the rest their greatest king, Massasoit, with some ninety men whom for three days we entertained or feasted."

We have traveled far afield since that first Thanksgiving celebration at Plymouth in December, 1621. We have made mistakes. Nations, like individuals are fallible. We have much to repent of; also much to be thankful for. True we have entered on troublous times but we are still an independent people. We have bread enough and to spare. No one among all the swelling millions of population in this great free republic of ours needs go hungry or be afraid, so:

Heap high the board with plenteous cheer, and gather to the feast.
And toast the sturdy Pilgrim band whose courage never ceased.
Give praise to that All-Gracious One by whom our steps were led,
And thanks unto the harvest's Lord who sends our "daily bread."

Plenty Is Left To Be Cleaned Up

PFC. HUGH C. SANDERSON

Now that "Clean Up Week" is over, there are other matters of importance to be cleaned up, such as improper wearing of the uniform, abusive language, disgusting conversation and general neatness.

All members of the armed forces should take plenty of care in their dress. I have observed soldiers with blouses half unbuttoned, hats on backs of the head, neckties not tied up tight, clothes not pressed, and men either, carrying blouses or field jackets under their arms.

We not only represent the organization that we are assigned to, we also represent our country and government. Every soldier should set a good example for his fellow citizens. If the women of the armed forces can take pride in their uniforms, so can the men.

A great number of soldiers ride on busses, and other means of conveyance, especially in the presence of ladies. Military courtesy and etiquette, should always be put into practise. There is absolutely no necessity for abusive language and disgusting conversations are not to be tolerated. We should at all times keep a healthy and sane mind and a happy and virile outlook on life.

The creed of the armed forces or any organization is based on four corner stones, loyalty, brotherhood, fidelity and manliness.

In carrying out the creed along with good manners, we are respecting, our country, flag, and constituents, both civilian and military. Let's snap into it and clean up!

" TRUTH VS. DREAMS"

Truth is the thing which knowing, frees us,
Frees us from believing the things which please us,
Frees us to wake in a troubled world
With our golden sails of fancy furled,
Frees us to toss on a cold wet sea,
Fully aware of our misery.
I'LL DREAM THAT I'm free to forget the truth,
And lvie in those dreams (as I have from youth)
For why should I work and struggle and fret,
To gain what I've only to dream to get.

Kay Says—

GLAMORIZING A L A MAGAZINES IS HARD TO DO IN ARMY

Of late I have become an addict of women's magazines—a form of escape from reality, I imagine a psychologist might tell me. Anyhow, there's nothing more comforting after a hard day than to relax over something light, and if President Wilson could find surcease from his troubles in a detective magazine, as rumor has it, I rationalize that there's nothing too wrong in spending my spare moments learning what the modern woman does.

The trouble is, the modern woman does entirely too much. At least, according to these magazines I've been perusing, she combines war work, housekeeping, shopping, general handy man, with a modicum of effort, and still finds time to be a pal to her husband and an aunderstanding companion to her children.

If you find that your husband is disinterested, say these magazines, find time to pretty yourself up in the mornings. A gay little bow in the hair and a fresh pinafore does wonders to reawaken that look in a man's eye, according to these authorities. Aha, thinks I, a bit of glamor wouldn't go amiss in this household. But I fail to take into consideration the practical difficulties of such a venture. How is a woman going to find the time or opportunity for those little touches when the one mirror in the house is in the bathroom — the quartermaster having failed to include a mirror in his list of furnishings?

Perhaps the women's editors would have time for that touch of glamor so early in the morning. But I wonder if they have a small boy who gets up at the crack of dawn demanding breakfast, a puppy who arises at the same unearthly hour and has an uncanny knack of knocking over and breaking the milk bottles if allowed to go outdoors unattended, and a husband who possesses the faculty of wanting the one article of clothing which has been carefully laid away for the duration. With a family like that, they're luck to find breakfast on the table, let alone a fresh pinafore and a bit of ribbon in mama's freshly brushed hair.

The same thing goes for these enlightening articles on how to make one's last year's wardrobe do for this year. The women in these articles all seem to possess one very good tweed coat which only needs the buttons set over and a new collar to look like something fresh out of one of the best shops. They have a knack for picking up little collar and cuff sets which brighten up an other-wise drab dress. They also have a skillful hand with the needle, and plenty of time to take up a hem here, let out a seam there, and contrive a new neck-line.

All this, of course, is done when they aren't fixing delectable meals with none-rationed foods, working on the swing shift, doing little repair jobs about the house, seeing that their electrical appliances are kept in good shape, or taking a long hike in the country to teach their children the marvels of nature. I swear I don't know how they do it all. It's the most discouraging thing, trying to keep up with those women.

The only encouraging part about the whole thing is an occasional article on how to keep one's health in these times. It says right there that the best thing to do, in case of illness, is to go to bed and stay there. I'm going to try that sometime, when I can take time off from writing this column, doing volunteer Red Cross work, and waiting for my meat number to come up.

Let's Buy Some 1943 War Bonds, Whatcha Say?

BY CPL. GEORGE G. JOHNSTON

Whut happens to tha dough ya put into War Bonds???...Waall...fer one thing, I got a hunk o meat yestirday what musta been bot wit a 1918 War Bond!!! Or else I yam digesting somebody's overseas doiby!!!!!

Let's buy 1943 War Bonds, huh?

Iffen we all bought 1943 War Bonds, maybe we wuddent get no more meat that's been kilt by bow and arrow!!!...I certinny wisht people would start buyin' bonds fer this war...It would be soooo much easier on us Ifintry guys...jeez!...I'd like ya to see a axe we got in tha supply room...Tha edge of it looks like a relief map of Norway!!!...It's so aged, we dassent give it a bath when cold weather sets in...No kiddin...Every time ya swing it agin a tree, ya just puts another fjord in tha durn blade thassal!!!...Let's buy 1943 war bonds, huh?

Ya oughta see me field pack!....They's a serial number on it whut's so low, it maybe belonged to a sodjer who enlisted at Valley Forge...Sure I'm mighty proud to wear it...But it looks like I'm carryin a papoose what ain't got his diapers pinned up!!!...Let's buy 1943 bonds, huh?...Tents is okay, but they is ain conditioned at tha wrong time...Comes winter, and gettin into bed is worse than sliding down a terboggan run in yer Turkish towel!!! . . . and Heavens to gracious!...When it rains, a tent acts like dem opentoe ladies shoes...and you have seen how messy a lady's big toe looks after a day of shopping in tha rain, heh, heh...No, sir!...I betcha yau wouldent carry a pint of oysters in a paper bag? Wouldya?...Well, let's buy some 1943 war bonds, huh?

Five years ago when I was playing wit a famous-buu-rr-pp band ...I donated a pint of me 83 proof blood to some blood bank...They used a pulmotor on me fer three days after!!!...Since that time yer War Bonds have helped develop a new miracle in blood plazma, but it ain't developin fast enuff, so they have to use that blood what was donated 5 years ago!!!...Good Lord!...I'd ruther face 30 Japs than git me own blood back!!!...Let's hurry likell and buy lotsa 1943 War Bonds, huh???!!!...Yer bonds are already doin a lotta good...But remember tha more ya buy, tha more better tha Army is going to get...I sez to me captain why don't tha Infintry ride?...He sez it costs too much gold...we is gonna ride, ain't we???

'Twas Clean-Up Week

We of Benning—(W. E. meaning women everywhere)—chief active members of the newly activated branch of the Army Ground Forces (emphasis on ground) recently engaged in the violent campaign of C. U. W. B. A. (Clean-Up Week at Benning)—request prominent bulletin space for the enclosed poetic effort—

We had to take theirs
Can they take ours?
(P. S. Ours isn't any worse.)
Alone the Army housewife stands
With rake and broom clutched in each hand;
Forgetful of the telephone—
Unmindful of the baby's moan—
It's celan-up week at Benning.

The lawns are large, the "strikers" few,
The leaves keep falling two by two;
No meat on the table, her husband due—
The butcher called 50 when she drew number 2—
It's clean-up week at Benning—
Dig up, rig up,
Sweep up, keep up,
Clean-up week at Benning.

No time has she now to "get the dope",
No Mah-jong, Bridge or morning "coke";
The elaves keep falling two by two,
And what in ——— can she do
With clean-up week at Benning?
Fed up, bled up,
Squashed up, washed up,
With clean-up week at Benning.

Alone the Army housewife stands
With rake and broom clutched in each hand;
Her back is sore, her temper worse,
And in her heart is just one curse
For clean-up week at Benning—
Pan it, can it,
Rap it, scrap it—
CLEAN-UP WEEK AT BENNING!

TO MARY

'Till time has closed my eyes I'll look on you
As early as the mystic summer rain
That wakes the flowers to morning life again.
I'll hold you closely as the rose the dew.
'Till death has closed my ears I'll listen to
The symphony of your sweet lips refrain.
Far sweeter still then earth's sublimest strain
Might in its most inspired hour pursue.
Though you are gone, I see you in the snow
That rests its mantle on the mountain's brow
And lifts its soft white lips to God above;
And in my sweetest, dearest dream I know
That you could never be more near than now.
I have you yet, through time and death, my Love.

Post Laundries Handled 10,000,000 Garments During Past Three Months

In the past three months, Uncle Sam's quartermaster laundries at Fort Benning washed more than 10,000,000 pieces of clothing for his soldiers serving at America's most complete Army post, according to the report of Major Leslie E. Parker, laundry officer on the staff of Col. Jack L. Meyer, director of supply.

The report covers combined operations of two large, modern laundry plants which are run by civilian employees under the supervision of Major Parker.

The Benning officer pointed out in releasing the report that there is nothing compulsory about soldiers at the post patronizing the post laundries. If the soldier desires, he may wash his own clothes, or send them to a commercial laundry. However, the quartermaster laundry service at Benning tests the soldier only $1.50 per month for washing and ironing . . . or about 37 cents per weekly bundle.

The quarterly report shows that 14,416,314 pieces of clothing—shirts, trousers, underwear, socks, handkerchiefs and the like—were washed during the three month period. The laundries employed 789 civilians, who were paid $176,247.35 for the three months. The work sheet column of the report shows that they worked 59,357 eight-hour days and that each employee produced an average of 170 pieces of laundered clothing a day.

The cost sheet, which includes salaries and operating expenses, states that the average cost of laundring 100 pieces of clothing was $2.08 or a little over two cents each, and that the laundry returned a slight profit to the government of about 49 cents per 100 garments washed.

BRIG. GEN. WILLIAM J. DONOVAN, commanding general of the Airborne Command, paid a visit to the Parachute School recently. He is shown here shaking hands with Colonel Ridgely Gaither, commandant of The Parachute School. General Donovan was appointed to head the Airborne Command on Nov. 16. Prior to that time he was commanding general of the First Airborne Infantry Brigade. General Donovan has also served as G-3 of the Airborne Command, and as Airborne instructor at the command and General Staff School. (U. S. Signal Corps Photo.)

On this Thanksgiving Day let us reflect and thank God for the many blessings He has bestowed upon us. We are Americans living in a free land. We are strong in mind and body. We are ready to do our part to keep Thanksgiving Day an American institution.

That this Thanksgiving Day be a most enjoyable and happy one is the sincere wish of your Division Commander.

Japs Used Sly Trick . . . To Secure Billeting

Captain Vernon L. Davis, advanced student in the 6th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment here, had a close-up view of Japanese aggression while he was stationed at Tientsin during the China "incident" that three years later flared into world-wide conflagration. A resident of Dallas, Texas, he came to the Infantry School from the First Filipino Infantry, Camp Beale, Calif.

During his China service, Davis learned the language—and learned to love and respect the Chinese people. "But Japs and I just don't mix," he snorted. "No other American soldier can get along with them either.

"Take our boys over in Tientsin in '37 and '38, for instance. Everyone of them would have been willing to fight the little imps right then and there. Some of the more reckless doughboys even tried to pick fights with them.

DIRTY'S THE WORD

"Why? Well, among other things the Japs used a very clever trick to get quarters for their troops. They announced that there would be anti-aircraft practice one night and that the shells would be falling in a certain residential district. The people left their homes to wait until it was over. There was no firing. But, upon returning they found that the Japs had moved in."

Many people were homeless in Tientsin that winter. Thousands of them slept on the sidewalks and in vacant lots. Shopkeepers could hardly open their doors in the morning for them crowding in the doorways for shelter from the icy wind.

PEOPLE FREEZE

"Late one night near Christmas I was walking along Woodrow Wilson street—probably called Twin Avenue now—when I came upon a woman lying on the sidewalk. The old quilt rag which was hardly large enough to cover her and the small thing she held in her arms had several holes in it.

"When she held out a bony hand and begged for help, her voice sounded as if she was ninety. But she probably wasn't over twenty-five. I gave her a dollar and then I had to step over her in order to get by. There were others lying there also. It was hopeless. I knew that many would die during that winter."

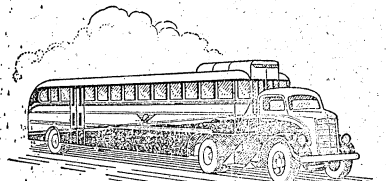
BY KATHERINE HAMMARGREN

Festive in holiday greens, the Polo Hunt Club will be an appropriate setting for the Christmas tea to be given by the Fort Benning Woman's Club Monday, December 6. Mrs. Harold E. Potter, club president, and her committees are unstinting of their time and efforts to make the event one that will remain in the memories of army wives as a high point of the forth-coming holiday season.



The decorations of the club will afford many suggestions that will later be used to brighten up individual homes, to help make this war-time Christmas a happy one. Tables, centerpieces, and mantel decorations should afford many an inspiration for wives perplexed by war-time shortages. It is even rumored that there will be a Christmas tree.

In addition to the tradition, and always lovely, Christmas tea a group of appropriate Christmas carols will be sung. The meeting will be held at 3:30 p. m. EWT. All members of the Woman's Club are cordially invited to attend.

Many complaints are being noted concerning delay in delivery of War Ration Book III to members of the Armed Forces.

Reason, as announced by Sgt. Louis Lipp, secretary of the Fort Benning branch of the Muscogee County Ration Board, is that the Ft. Benning board does not handle these applications—they must go through local boards, after which applications are mailed to Chicago, and then the book is mailed back to the applicant. Delay, therefore, is in the mail, not in the boards. Eligible applicants should apply as soon as practicable, and remember that Ration Book 4 is not obtainable until Book 3 is obtained. All applications now must go through local boards.

CAPT. ERICKSSON

Nelson F. Erickssson, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. N. F. Erickssson, of 96 Larchwood Drive, Cambridge, Mass., has been promoted to captain. A battalion adjutant in the 391st Infantry at Camp Breckinridge, Ky., he is now attached to the 6th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, to attend The Infantry School's Officers Advanced Course here.

Bolivian Mission Reaches Post For Inspection

Red-striped trousers added a striking new color to the rainbow-hued uniforms of United Nations leaders attending The Infantry School when six Bolivian field officers, veterans all of the Chaco War, arrived at the 1st Student Training Regiment recently. By Clipper to Miami and rail to Fort Benning, they came to spend four weeks here learning the latest ways of ground warfare from Infantry School experts.

Consisting of Colonel Carlos S. Galvarro, Major Nestor Valenzuela, Major Ernesto Wende, Major Jose Mercado, Major Jose C. Davila and Major Andres Saucedo, the group is under the wing of Lieutenant Colonel Marion N. Hardesty, Chief of the United States Military Mission to Bolivia. A resident of Springfield, Missouri, he heads the first group of Army Ground Forces instructors sent to Latin America. They replaced an Italian mission at La Paz.

The six Bolivians are graduates of their Collegio Militar, where the course of training is seven years instead of the four as at our West Point. All the officers wear decorations won in combat during the 1932-1935 conflict in Gran Chaco—the Order of Military Merit and the War Medal.

Cavalry officer and member of the Bolivian General Staff, Colonel Galvarro, of La Paz, is now a regional army chief and next year will become Director of the Collegio Militar, Bolivia's military academy.

During the Chaco War, this friendly, twinkling-eyed soldier, who wears the three stars that denote a full colonel in the Bolivian Army, served as chief of staff for an army corps. In 1942 he was general director of police for the public.

Major Valenzuela, from the Department of Cochabamba, fought in all campaigns of that war as a general staff officer. On top of his training at the "West Point" of Bolivia, he is also a graduate of that Ally's General Staff School. Neighboring Venezuela added her Decoration of Liberator—Simon Bolivar—to the Military Merit and War Medals the Major received from his own government.

During the three years of fighting in the Chaco, Major Wende, a native of Beni province, rose from section leader to command an entire cavalry regiment. While a student in Italy before 1939, he was decorated by the Pope for his participation in a Eucharistic Congress held in Bolivia some years before.

Major José Mercado, of Cochabamba, was an officer of the 5th Division Cavalry when fighting started in the Chaco. Shortly after, he was wounded and captured by the Paraguayans. He wears the Condon of Andes decoration in addition to his Military Merit, War, and Wound Medals.

Also wounded in action and captured was Major Davila, of La Paz. A lieutenant in the 6th Infantry, he fell during an assault at Boqueron in an early campaign, was taken, and languished during the remaining three years of the war as a prisoner in Paraguay.

Back in 1932, Major Saucedo, who came from the state of Santa Cruz, was a cadet at the Collegio Militar. The undeclared war with Paraguay had broken out. At morning parade, the Commandant of Bolivia's military academy asked those of the future officers who wanted to get right into combat to march two paces forward.

As a body, every cadet took two steps to the front. His wish granted, Saucedo was sent to the 33rd Infantry. Under fire during the entire struggle, he was twice wounded.

On their first tour of Fort Benning's military installations, the interest of these six veterans reached a peak when Colonel Hardesty, who speaks Spanish fluently, showed them through the 1st Student Training Regiment post office. Like fighting men of all nations in every clime, the colonel and majors from Bolivia "sweat out" that mail from home—in their case, from below the equator.

RUSS POOL OFF-LIMITS

Russ Pool and immediate vicinity are off limits to all personnel at Fort Benning, and children should be warned to stay out of that area, it was announced at Post Headquarters this week. All parents are asked to cooperate in keeping their children away from the pool.

TIS Grid Teams Conclude Seasons On Foreign Soil

Reception Center Tigers Wind Up Campaign With Panthers On Sunday

Foes Clash In Stadium Grid Finale

Tigers Seek 7th Straight Win Of Campaign

Doughboy Stadium's final grid game of the 1943 campaign will take place on Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock when the all-victorious Reception Center Tigers take on their old rivals, the 3rd STR Panthers of the Infantry School, in the final Service Conference clash.

The strong Tiger ensemble has already clinched the service flag for the season, and will have only its unbeaten record at stake Sunday afternoon. A large turnout is expected for the finale of the post's record-breaking pigskin season.

TOPPLE LIONS

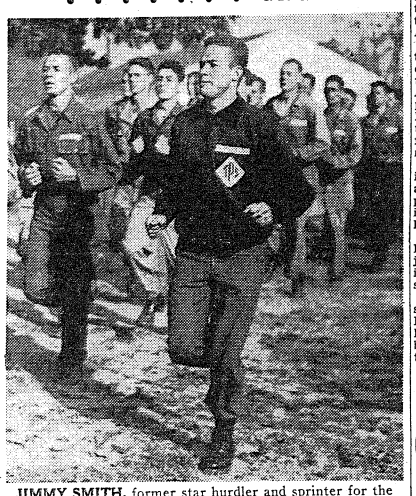
Capt. Charles R. Houghland has his Reception Center charges in good condition for their seventh outing after their trip to Tampa last week-end, when they bumped Florida Normal's Lion gridders, 28-0, in an easy conquest.

In their six wins to date, the Tigers have twice toppled the Truck Regiment Rockets and also defeated the Panthers, Clark College, Florida A. and M. and Florida Normal. They have had a definite "feeler" from the sponsors of the Vulcan Bowl committee in Birmingham, and hope to play there in a bowl game on New Year's Day.

PANTHERS BETTER

Meanwhile, however, the R. C. machine must hurdle the Panthres, who have improved greatly since dropping their early season game to the Tigers. The addition of Ray Head, ex-Tuskegee star, and Upsher Sams, another noted collegian, has bolstered their backfield ranks.

Also, Frankie Phillipson, the New York schoolboy flash, who starred in 1942 for the Panthers, has donned a uniform again, and may regain last year's form in the Reception Center clash on Sunday. The Panthers are capable of a lot better ball than they've shown so far, and may explode against their arch-rivals in the stadium.



TIGER EXPRESS

They'll have to go some, however, to halt the Tiger express. With a big, strong line operating in front of fast backs like Mike Cheatham, Macon Williams, Leo Harrison, Louis Screws, George Holingsworth and others, the R. C. machine is hard to stop.

The game Sunday should pack plenty of thrills, and for an added attraction, the half-time entertainment will be provided by the famed marching band of the Reception Center, which always makes a big hit with grid fans.

THEN . . . . . and NOW

Former Trojan Trackman Runs Plenty As Chutist

The Army has found good use for the natural talents of James W. Smith, former University of Southern California star hurdler and holder of the National A. A. U. 400-meter (51.9 sec.) and 200-meter (23 sec. flat) low hurdle records which he won last year at Randalls Island, N. Y.

The cinder champ is now Sergeant Smith, Parachute School Instructor at the big training center here at Fort Benning. Smith instructs in the first week—"A Stage—of the rigorous four-week Jump Course that starts with plain ordinary soldiers and winds up with qualified Parachutists who have made five jumps.

It is in "A Stage" the student-jumpers are initiated into the trooper's way of doing things and where they develop the necessary alertness, confidence and stamina that is so vital a part of the paratrooper who has to go places fast under his own power once he lands in alien territory.

Naturally this means he must know how to run—long and fast — under the most trying conditions. Perhaps he does not actually have to run a hurdle race—but if an obstacle course is anything but a grown-up hurdle built by the devil, then many thousands of men are wrong.

HOPES FOR MORE

Says Sergeant Smith: "The parachute jump creates for me the same kind of tension and feeling I experienced in track competition and when the day we are all looking for comes, I sure am looking forward to plenty more work on the track to help keep U. S. C. up there where she belongs and stays—on top."

Academic Ramblers Down 77th Medicos

One of the best defensive basketball games was played last week at the Ninth Street USO court, when the Ramblers of Company D, Academic Regiment, defeated the 77th Medical Battalion quintet of the 7th Armored Division by the close and very low score of 18 to 16 in an American league tournament.

Capella and Smith of the Ramblers scored six points each, while T-5 Walter Tose of the 77th was the game's high scorer with eight. The Ramblers led by Staff Sergeant Peterson, captain, who steadied his team to a slow pace, took advantage of a fast break which caught the Medics flat-footed.

176th-Miami Game In Orange Bowl; 300th-10th Armored in Magic City

Football teams of The Infantry School are on foreign soil today for their final games of the season.

The 300th Infantry Sabers departed yesterday morning for today's clash with the 10th Armored Division's All-Star team in Birmingham and the 176th Spirits entrained for Miami Tuesday night where they will play the University of Miami tomorrow night.

Each team had one additional game on its schedule for the season but both games were cancelled. The 176th were to have met Greensboro Air Cadets in an Army Emergency Relief game at Grant Field, Atlanta, Dec. 4 but negotiations fell through and a suitable opponent for the Spirits could not be obtained. The Sabers were to have met Patterson Field from Ohio Dec. 5 at Doughboy Stadium but graduations riddled the Patterson Field eleven, necessitating the cancellation.

ALL-STAR FOE

The 10th Armored Team which the Sabers will meet will consist of the stars of the four regimental teams of that division. A 10th Armored Regimental team will play in Atlanta on Thanksgiving Day against Georgia Tech "B" team. But the bulk of the Tenth's football strength will be in Birmingham.

HARRIS TO START

Tailback Sully Harris, former LSU star, is still nursing an injured arm and did not take part in Monday's scrimmage. He will start, however, against Miami.

The Saber squad will consist of some 45 players. Dean Robinson, Bill Nowling and Johnny Kulikowski are still on the injured list but will be able to play against the Tenth.

176th Courtmen Open With Win

Cebert Introduces New Spirit Quintet

In a practice game which drew several hundred basketball fans and followers of the teams, Lt. Kirk Gebert, player-coach and captain of Washington State in 1942, introduced the 1943-1944 edition of the 176th Infantry regimental squad on Saturday afternoon at the Ninth Street USO in a game against The Parachute School "B" team, coached by Lt. D. A. Wearley.

Although the 176th hoopsters overwhelmingly defeated the Parachute quintet 71-29, the jumpers put up a stiff resistance which kept the "Spirits" on their toes throughout the contest.

Jim Weir, 6 feet 5 inches center from Wyoming University and Marv Lee, 6'3" from U.C.L.A., both towered above the rest of the players by inches and used their height and long arms to good advantage.

3RD STR WINS

The Hq. Co., 3rd S.T.R. defeated the 2nd Bn., 131st Inf. team by the score of 47-32 in an American League Basketball Tournament game at the Ninth Street USO Saturday night. Lt. Linquist and Cpl. Silverman of the 3rd S.T.R. were the game's high scorers with 14 and 12 points respectively, while Burke of the losers was high with 11.

FLIERS ON TOP

176th Infantry "Spirits 3rd," now the Ball-Bearing five, won by a forfeit from the C.C.B., Hq. Co. team when the latter failed to show up for a scheduled American League contest at the Ninth Street USO on Sunday. In another game, the Lawson Field quintet defeated Co. G, 300th Inf. by the score of 36-21 in a National League tournament clash. Cpl. Metcalf of Lawson Field with 12 points was the high scorer of the game.

GRIDIRON GUESSWORK

BY SGT. CARL NEU

Going into the stretch, it's still two misses per week. Last week, the Tulane win over L. S. U., and Temple's fall before the onslaught of Villanova caught us on the debit side of the ledger. But that still won't hurt the average too much. Anyway, here goes on the final big week-end of the year. Most of these are Turkey day games taking place while you're reading these lines, but remember the paper went to press last night, so I couldn't chisel on the pickings. First-named team is our selected winner.

Lafayette vs. Lehigh—Leopards aren't the power of old, but they still have enough to win.

Oklahoma A. and M. vs. Denver—We flipped a coin.

N. C. Pre-Flight vs. N. C. State—We'll sink or swim with Navy.

Tulsa vs. Arkansas—This might be end of a pretty dream for Golden Hurricane, but we doubt it.

F. and M. vs. Bucknell—Diplomats in a tough one and a possible Orange Bowl bid.

Navy vs. Army—We hate to do it. We hate to do it.

Rockets Whip Panthers 6-0

By SGT. HARRY M. SMYLES
Truck Regt. Public Relations

In the last game of the season at Doughboy Stadium, the Infantry School's Truck Regiment "Rockets" again trounced the "Panthers" of the 3rd Student Training Regiment before a small but enthusiastic crowd. The score was 6 to 0.

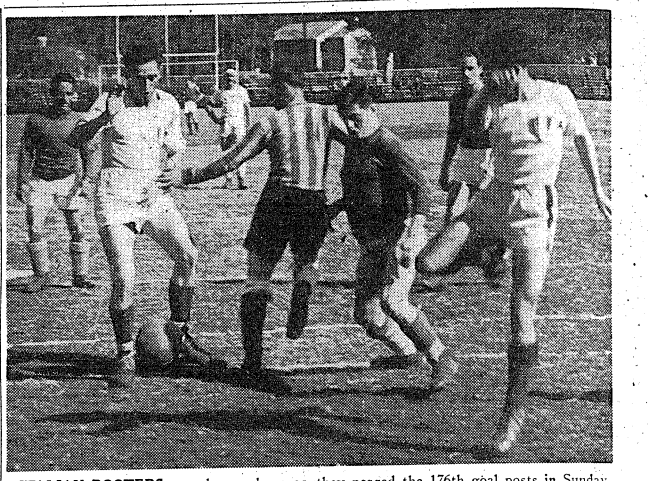
The lone touchdown came on the very last play of the first half and was set up when Clarence "Po" Jones, Rocket center and captain, playing safety on defense picked off Joe Davis' long pass and returned it to the Panther 45. Davis, the Panther left end had gone in the backfield to throw a series of long passes in the fleeting moments of the second period.

The officials ruled interference on Quarter-back Bobby Lawson's pass to Eugene Kinzer, Rocket left-half and the Rockets were given first down on the Panther 15 yard line. Lawson, with time for one more play faked a pass toward the right end zone, then turned and ran wide around left end for the touchdown completely outwitting the entire Panther team. His attempt for conversion failed and at the half time the score stood 6-0, Rockets leading.

FEEL EACH OTHER OUT

The first period saw both teams testing each other on the ground and in the air. Raymond Head, Panther left-half of Tuskegee Institute, intercepted Cecil Coulter's pass intended for Duggins and returned it to the Rocket 29. Then John Massenburg's fumble gave the Rockets possession again when Jimmy Wilson, shifty Rocket right half recovered on his own 36. The Rockets completed two passes in the first period. Lawson flipped one 29 yards to Chester Jones and Coulter's pass to Wilson netted 7 yards.

On a series of pass plays in the second period, the Panthers after Head's interception of a pass from Lawson on their own 44, drove to the Rocket 13 yard stripe. The drive was sparked by a pass good for 13 yards from Frank Phillipson to Joe Davis. On two rushes they then rumbled to the Rocket 10 but failed to go over. The Rockets then took over on downs practically under their own goal post.



55 YARD RUN

Lawson, crafty quarterback that he is, back on his own goal line attempted a spot pass to Wilson who missed it. Then on the very next play Lawson tried the same play and this time Wilson holding it raced 55 yards to the Panther 45. From that moment on both teams fired numerous passes, one of which "Po" Jones intercepted which set in motion the goal drive by the Rockets which ended the first half.

The Panther's threat in the fourth period turned into tragedy for them when Upshaw Sams, Panther quarterback circled backward from the Rocket 15 to the 42, a 27 yard loss.

Lawson's spectacular 35 yard run late in the fourth period which was called back because of a penalty was the most colorful of the evening. As he dashed desperately to the side lines, spinning and twisting he was all but knocked off his feet twice but somehow made his way into the end zone. The game ended with the Panthers in possession of the ball on about the mid field stripe.

The "Rockets" will travel to St. Augustine, Fla. on the Thanksgiving week-end to play the Florida Normal and Industrial College there in their Homecoming game.

Spirit Soccermen Oppose Athens Pre-Flight Squad In Saturday Night Clash

Army-Navy Soccer Encounter Will Be Played In Stadium

Doughboy Stadium will be the scene of the final Infantry School soccer game of the season as the booters of the 176th Infantry entertain the U. S. Navy Pre-Flight eleven from Athens, Ga., in a return contest under the lights on Saturday night at 8 o'clock.

176TH VICTOR

In the first meeting of these two clubs, the Spirits came from behind late in the contest to defeat the Sailors in a closely contested battle, 3 to 2.

Coaching the Navy booters is Lieut. S. J. Rees, a former All-American booter from Springfield (Mass.) College, whose has several years of tutoring under his belt. Due to the nature of the Cadet training at Athens, there is a rapid turnover of personnel and a changed line-up will be presented by the Navy squad.

SAME LINE-UP

Coach Art Leckie expects to use the same line-up that started the game against the Italian Prisoners of War. In goal will be Orlando Cesca, with Steve Gimak and Frankie Schultz in the fullback slots.

The halfback line will be chosen from Johnny Waldman, Dom Diaco, Pat Mazza and Art Knowles, while the forwards will be Limy Hallaway, Harry Fenstamacker, Coach Leckie, Al Kinslow, Les Groarke, Vic Greco, Johnny Geray, and Vladimer Schmakoff.

Saber Regiment Busy On Courts

Several Quintets Represent 300th

Basketball fever reached epidemic proportions throughout the 300th regiment over the past week as company teams battled locally on outdoor courts, and other Saber quintets made their bid for honors in the Ninth Street USO league.

Without any urging or insistence, the companies in the regiment organized teams, and booked their own games until the set-up approached that of a well directed tournament. The Sabers have shown grater enthusiasm for basketball than for any other sport thus far.

Four Clubs

In the USO league, the Sabers have four clubs entered. They are Companies A, F, G, and D, and play on the spacious Ninth Street court each week.

In last week's game, Company A thundered over the 7th Armored Division Hq. quintet, 40 to 29, and Company F took a header before the 709th Tank Battalion, 39-13. Company G. suffered a double downfall, bowing to the 176th Tank Bn. by 23 to 21 and to Lawson field, 36-21.

Tonight Company F will meet Second Bn. Hq. of the 131st Inf. at 7 p. m.

In the regimental competition, 2nd Bn. Hq. Co. suffered two defeats in as many starts when they lost to Companies H and E.

17th Tankers Topple Saber G-Men By 23-21

With only six players able to leave the field at Fort Benning, where the Seventh Armored Division is having maneuvers, Lt. Bucek spirited the 17th Tank Battalion team to a 23 to 21 victory over a highly-touted Company G, 300th Infantry, quintet in a National League tournament game at the USO on Friday.

3 Cage Playoffs At Ninth St. USO

Basketball again took the spotlight Saturday night at the Ninth Street USO, when the team Hq. Co., 3rd S.T. R. defeated the 2nd Bn., 131st Infantry Team by a score of 47 to 32 in an American League Basketball tournament game.

Sunday night, the 176th Infantry "Spirits 3rd," now the Ball Bearing five, won by a forfeit from the C. C. B., Hq. Bn. Co. team.

In a National Tournament clash, the Lawson Field quintet defeated Co. G, 300th Infantry by a score of 36 to 21. Cpl Metcalf of Lawson Field was high scorer of the game, with 12 points.

Black Cats of 300th Seeking Court Games

Among several basketball teams which have been organized in the 300th Infantry Regiment, one of the most successful to date is the Black Cats, consisting principally of officers and men of Company "A." An entry in the current basketball tournament at the Ninth Street USO, this team recently defeated the 7th Armored Division Headquarters by a score of 40-27.

The Black Cats are anxious to meet any and all comers in single or home games. Those interested are requested to call FB-3856 and ask for Lt. Leary of Company "A".

Italians Down Spirit Rivals In Soccer Tilt

Leckie Scores Only Goal As P-W Squad Wins Again By 4-1

Before an enthusiastic crowd of soldiers and their families, the Italian Prisoners of War soccer team last Sunday afternoon by a 4 to 1 count. This marked the second time that the Prisoners defeated the Spirits of The Infantry School.

Presenting a hastily revised line-up, the Spirits held the Italians to two goals in the first half. Play in that half marked superb passing and intricate footwork by certain members of the Italian team.

EXHIBITION RUN

During the half-time intermission, a former member of the 1932 Italian Olympic team which competed in Los Angeles, Calif., ran a mile race against three of his countrymen.

Soon after the second half started, the Spirit offensive began to roll. On a pass from Limy Hallaway to Coach Art Leckie, the 176ers scored their only goal as Leckie sent a vicious boot past the outstretched hands of the Italian goalie. The Italians scored their other two goals soon afterward.

176TH PLAYS WELL

T-4 ROBERT J. SHAVER

Bible Provides Great Source of Strength For 'Jumping' Parson

"Parachute jumping is one of the most profoundly moving and deeply religious experiences of my life" spoke T-4 Robert J. Shaver of Headquarters and Service Company, The Parachute School after making his fifth and qualifying jump—the night tactical one—last Friday.

T-4 Shaver who, incidentally, is the tallest Trooper on record (6 ft. 3 1-2 inches) was a high school teacher for seven years before coming into the army and in addition was an accredited Methodist minister in close-by Goose Creek, Tex., where he taught at the Robert E. Lee High School. He holds a master's degree from the North Texas Teachers College at Denton, Tex. All his life he has been deeply religious and in recent years has been able to express his convictions from the pulpit in addition to teaching high school English.

During the trying weeks of parachute jump training at The Parachute School here at Fort Benning Sgt. Shaver found the Bible a constant source of strength and energy. Especially did he find it helpful in overcoming the natural fear intrinsic in jumping. Certain passages recurred to him during the "famous four" weeks of training: Psalms 139:8: "If I ascend into heaven thou art there . . ." Philippians 4:13: "I can do all things through Christ which strengthened me," and Romans 5:1: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through Our Lord Jesus Christ."

The strengthening and cleansing power of the Bible is vividly illustrated in the case of T-4 Shaver. For it was last year that he came down to Benning to go through the jump course at the school. He started and completed "A Stage" and most of "B Stage" and then . . . anyway, at the time he withdrew from training and was assigned as a non-jumping man to the Parachute School. For many months he thought on the whole circumstance and with the aid of prayer and meditation decided to go back into training. He asked permission (which was granted) and without a moment's pause at any point the determined school teacher and soldier completed the training and won the right to wear the wings and boots of the Paratrooper.

macting in Connecticut, has starred in numerous films, including "My Sister Eileen," "Skylark," "Smiling Through," "The Man Who Lost Himself," "A Night To Remember," "Juarez," "My Son, My Son," and "Forever and a Day."

LT. TAYLOR IN ASTP

Lt. Fred Armstrong Taylor, a recent graduate of the Officer Candidate School of the Infantry School, has been assigned to the ASTP Basic Training Center according to an announcement by Colonel Wilson M. Spann, commanding officer. His present assignment is Executive and Administrative Officer for the Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the ASTP Basic Training Center.

we were beginning to feel were undermanned; but no sooner had we began our morning advance than the enfilading blast from hidden nests cut down a dozen of my men in their tracks.

"Knowing I could not get across the open field with the few men I had at my disposal, I returned across the border, and the following day orders from a higher headquarters put a stop to my commanding officer's attempt to create an incident that would have led us to war with the Czechs."

This was, according to Romek, the first violation of Czech territory. It was at this point that Cpl. Romek began to wonder just whether or not he was following his conscience in permitting himself to become involved in battles against his Czech "brothers" as the corporal calls them, and pledging allegiance to a government that had become a stringed puppet of the Nazis. Watching his country's people become more and more subdued as the pinch of privations that all Nazi satellite nations invariably receive when attached to the German "Socialists", Cpl. Romek decided he had no stomach for any more such "incidents" that were gainful of nothing to his country and were, without a doubt, the creation of Nazi master-minds.

CLOUDS DARKEN

With war-clouds looming blacker all the time, Cpl. Romek, before he had a chance to follow up his decision, was remobilized after the Czech affair. This time he and his crack Chasseur group were sent to the mountainous terrain of the Polish border. Here again Cpl. Romek went into battle for something in which he did not believe.

Fighting against a determined Polish group little headway was made and soon after he was returned to the interior where he was given an assignment at a prison camp for Polish officers and their wives.

These prisoners, as the corporal pointed out, were "allowed" to come into his country as guests, but yet remained as prisoners of the Reich. This situation obviated any necessity of feeding the prisoners by the Germans.

The "wheel within a wheel" complexity of this situation deepened the corporal's feeling of helplessness in his surroundings. Watching the so dearly won freedom of his country, drowned in the tidal flood of German pressure-politics, Cpl. Romek at the Christmas demobilization of his army, made his bid for freedom. Registering with a sailor's hiring agency it was only a short time until he was on his way to France to get his ship.

GERMAN TOURISTS

To avoid the warring areas as much as possible Romek traveled through Italy. He recalls how, even, at that early date he saw many German "tourists" traveling about Italy. Speaking of one incident where discretion was the better part of valor, Cpl Romek said:

"Where I was traveling in Italy it was the thing to "Heil" everyone around especially if they were fair-haired, and I remember going through a station one day everyone was doing it, so rather than invoke the suspicion of these tourists or some Italian official, I went merrily down the way heiling heiling everyone to whom I came close. The smirk on my face they took for good humor, but in reality I was laughing at them, and, of course, at my own situation."

When asked what he thought of the Italian people and their attitude towards the war they were about to plunge into, Cpl. Romek said: "Although my stay in Italy was of short duration, I feel sure in saying, that, although the Italian people might not have been clear on the issues at stake, they were without a doubt 100 per cent behind their leader, Mussolini. From talking with some of the middle-class it appeared evident to me that the Italian people thought they were on the threshold of a new and greater Roman Empire."

REACHES PARIS

Leaving Italy and making his way by boat to France, Cpl. Romek arrived in Paris just a little while before the "latent war" as he called it, came to a finish. In Paris Romek said, the feelings of the people were as different from those of Italy as day is from night. Italy was a gay, confident place, its people strutted like peacocks, while in Paris, they were going about their daily work with an air of utter defeat. Paris was anything but its gay self when I was there."

It was during his journey to LeHavre, that Cpl. Romek heard of the German break-through in the Low Countries. Finally on May 29, 1940, when the beaches of Dunkerque were being immortalized by avaliant British Army and the cause for which Romek was coming to this country to prepare to fight seemed doomed, he got his shin.

Reaching this country ordinary Seaman Michael Romek asked in vain to be allowed to remain in this country and enlist in the Army. Refused on the grounds of non-citizenship, Romek traveled up to Canada, where he was refused on the same grounds. Coming back to the United States, through a technicality this time he was able to stay in the country but was not yet able to get into the Army. In 1942, however, when congress passed the bill allowing aliens to enter our armed forces, Cpl. Romek was inducted. Asking for the Paratroops, he was instead shipped to the Medical Corps at Fort Robinson, Ark. After his basic training he was transferred to the 38th General Hospital at Fort Brigham Young, Utah.

GOES TO SCHOOL

It was at the General hospital that Cpl. Romek made his present rank, and also where he took the ASTP examination. Passing his exam he was sent to Indiana University where he was enrolled in a three month course in Balkan languages, history, and geography. On completion of this intensive training and still desiring the Paratroops, he prevailed on his commandant to allow him to transfer.

PRAISES TPS

Coming to the Parachute School in October, Cpl. Romek qualified as a parachutist in November and when asked for his impression of the school he said:

"Nowhere in my military life, here or abroad, have I seen so much being accomplished so efficiently and with such an absolute minimum of injuries. When you think of the speed with which a man is processed to become a parachutist, you cannot help but marvel at the school for its record."

At 31 Cpl. Romek is still as vigorous and athletic as when he was participating in the sports of his youth. It is not too many years since he and a friend won the European double sculls boating championship. Also a skiier since his youth, Cpl. Romek has been in many competitions all over Europe.

Asked his opinion of the type of soldier the German was Romek had this to say. "I've had ample opportunity to watch this Nazi super-soldier in battle, and there is no doubt that he is a wonderful soldier as long as he is in a group and is ably led. However, I do think there are in Europe soldiers who as individuals are more than a match for the Nazi. Some of these men would be the Poles, the Serbs, and of course, the Russians to whom we all owe so much. You Americans of course have your fine sense of team play (I think that is what you call it), yet each of you with an individual aggressiveness will in all probability be just too much for the regimented mind of the Nazi soldier."

GIVE US TOOLS

"When peace comes to the world and free men walk in my own land again, it is my sincere hope that the United Nations will give to the peoples of the liberated areas the tools of a democratic way of life. I hope that I will be able to help this work in some way. And someday I would like to return to the United States and travel through it, and see it, and appreciate it for its hospitality and aid in preparing me to go back to the land of my birth and fight with the implements of victory and freedom."

JOHN HUNTER

Bayonet Presents Prize-Winning Trio

John Hunter, Officer Candidate, who took the first prize in the verse contest, has contributed quite a number of poems to The Shavetail, OCS paper, in the past. Poetry is a pastime with him, he says, for "he writes for pastime and not forpublication." But he got published this time and got paid for it, too.

He majored in political science in college and was a pre-legal student at the time he entered the Army the first of the year. He ascribed his leaning toward poetry to the fact that he got a translation of the Iliad in his early youth, and never got away from the habit of amusing himself with versification.

Whether he is the poet laureate of Fort Benning or not doesn't worry the candidate at this time as much as the school "problems" that he meets daily in the Georgia woods hereabouts. "Double time," too, is one deterrent to poetic moods, he finds, but it did not stop him from getting that first prize with a lengthy sonnet sequence.

Private Woerner, second prize prose winner, brings to her work here in the headquarters of the Post as assistant to the Work Simplification Officer a variety of experience and an education that places her among the intellectuals employed on the Post.

Following her graduation from high school she attended a business college for a year and then spent a year in a business office as a secretary. However, the call of higher education was stronger than a business career, so she matriculated in the University of Nebraska. During her undergraduate four years she worked in the herbarium and became the manager of it, at the same time took a double major (English and mathetics) and a secondary high school certificate at her graduation.

Then she taught school three years, with summer sessions devoted to getting a master's degree. To complete the latter she re-entered her alma mater a year ago and, besides getting the degree, taught seven classes in the university in psychcology, her major subject.

July last she joined the WAC's and is making her contribution to the war effort. When it's over this very attractive young lady plans to get that doctor of philosophy degree at the university and go to degree and go into college guidance work for undergraduates. She believes that her varied educational and business experience in civilian life and her work here in the Army is good preparation for that type of work.

CAPT. SWEENEY

Captain James B. Sweeney, former Public Relations Officer of the 1st Student Training Regiment, The Infantry School, practices what he preaches.

Winner of a $25-War Bond in the recent Bayonet cartoon contest, he immediately addressed the bond to his nephew in Philadelphia, Pa., with the warning. "Do not open 'til Christmas." Sweeney's prize-winning cartoon, which appeared in the November 11 Bayonet, stressed giving a War Bond as the ideal Christmas gift.

An outstanding contributor of articles and cartoons to the Bayonet, he also starred in the Army cinema, "Lt. Smith, U. S. Army," playing the part of the Tactical Officer.

A graduate of Villanova College, Captain Sweeney is a Philadelphian, born and bred. Entering the business world after graduation from college, he was associated with the Anglo News Company, and later a departmental manager ment.

of the Barron Collier Advertising Organization.

In February 1941 he answered the call of his country and joined the Army. With determination to advance himself, he rapidly rose from buck private to master sergeant during his first year. He was selected by his superior officers to pursue the Officer Candidate Course at The Infantry School. He was graduated in June 1942 and has since been assigned to the 1st Student Training Regi-

Chutist Catches Goat In Canopy on Landing

When a jump instructor at the Parachute Schcool, Ft. Benning, Ga., made a leap the other week into an Alabama farmer's field, he expected no more opposition than the usual rough terrain and did not take into account Nancy. Nor, for that matter, was Nancy contemplating meeting the parachutist.

Nancy, a hollow-horned ruminant mammal, otherwise known as a goat, was unconcernedly munching on whatever it is goats are always munching and paying very little attention to the hue and cry directed her way by the descending trooper. Finally tearing herself away from her "munch" Nancy looked up just in time to find herself being blanketed by the collapsing canopy of the chutist. Getting a pit panicky at this unexpected interruption, Nancy, in very goat-like fashion, proceeded to tear up the parachute.

The trooper getting out of his harness ran up to the canopy which was dancing about like a thing possessed, and proceeded to unravel Nancy from her shroud. Finding that talk was not going to take Nancy from her new diet, the trooper used more persuasive methods. Instead of rousing the ire of La Nancy, the paratrooper's "Cave-Man" methods only succeeded in winning the goat's love. And as the parachutist walked back to his truck, Nancy trailed along.

Nancy's mother—or father—must have been hill "billies" for Nancy in her bright red coat donated by some of the skillful riggers of the Parachute School can be seen at most any hour of the day mincing nimbly along the fence surrounding her barracks down b ythe chute packing sheds.

A typical cartoon goat, Nancy eats labels from cans, cigarettes lit or unlit, cartons or flat-fifties and, when no one is looking, parachute silk. At present she is being primed for the role as "persuader" for reticent novice jumpers. As to this latter job, Nancy, when quizzed about it, replied in her own inimitable way "Baa-a-a-a."

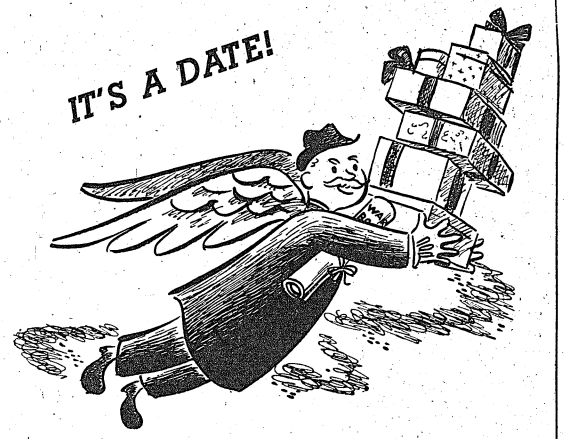
Dependents' Checks To Be Mailed As Usuc During Change-Over

Although most of the 3,000,000 family allowance accounts administered by the War Department's Office of Dependency Benefits are being converted under the amendments to the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act, dependents now receiving family allowances will continue to receive their checks without interruption during the change-over.

This was made clear to Fort Benning personnel through a news letter received today from the offices of Brig. Gen. H. N. Gilbert, director of ODB in Newark, N. J. The Office of Dependency Benefits is an activity of the Army Service Forces.

"Checks will be in the old amounts until the accounts can be set up under the new rates," Gen. Gilbert said. "When the conversion is accomplished on an account, any sums accrued (representing the difference between the monthly payments under the original Act and those due under the Act as amended) will be included in a first-payment check. It will take several months to complete conversion of the accounts on our books."

NO MOVE NECESSARY



He stressed the fact that dependents alre ady receiving a family allowance need make application for the increased b efits. The ODB already has se assembly line procedure for verting every account involvir dependent who is eligible to ceive the increased amounts. necessary letters and inqu will only delay the work, he plained.

The task of conversion is mendous, he pointed out. All f ily allowances now in effect involve both wives and chilc or parents and minor brothers sisters, must be recomputed. accounts are being re-exam to determine compliance with amended requirements of the and payments reauthorized at new scale, or discontinued if pendents are no longer elig Because checks are machine-ten, more than 6,000,000 co cards must be made before change-over is completed.

NEW ACCOUNTS

At the same time, thousanc new accounts will be added as plications are received from in the first, second and grades who will become eli to apply for them under the amendments.

The ODB already has sent a simple certificate to be f out by or on behalf of parents minor brothers and sisters claim dependency upon an er ed man. Their eligibility for efits as Class B or Class B-1 pendents will be determinec this information. Class B-1 pendents are those who loc the serviceman for more half of their support, and are titled to receive higher amc than those in Class B, whc dependent upon the servic for less than one-half of support.

Colored WACs Prove Valuable As Technicians, Skilled Workers

Twenty-three colored members of the Women's Army Corps assigned to the Station Hospital at Fort Benning, are proving their abilities to hold jobs calling for skill and special training.

Ten of them, all graduates of the WAC Cooks and Bakers School at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, are cooks, working under the supervision of Major Wallace M. Johnson, Director of Dietetics for the hospital. Others are working as laboratory technicians, nurses' aides, surgical technicians, mail clerks, x-ray developers, and typists. All are members of WAC Detachment, Station Complement, Section II.

The WACs, who have been working at the hospital for about two months, are praised by their supervisors as hard and able workers. Much of their work is of particular importance, since they are helping to relieve the hospital's personnel difficulties growing out of the shortage of trained workers needed for the hospital's expanded activities.

Pvt. Margaret Andrews and Pvt. Dorothy Parks are technicians in the histology laboratory in the contonment area of the hospital. They are being instructed in the processing, staining and mounting of tissues for microscopic examination, and are now assisting with this work in the laboratory. They are hopeful of being sent to Army Laboratory Technical School for further study in laboratory work.

Pvt. Andrews of North Braddock, Pa., was doing chemical laboratory work for the Chemical Warfare Service, Edgewood Arsenal, Md., at the time of her enlistment in the WAC four months ago.

KNOWS CHEMISTRY

She was educated in Pittsburgh public schools and attended night classes at the University of Pittsburgh, studying chemical engineering. Though she had done no medical lab work before coming into the WAC, she has found that her chemical laboratory training and experience are excellent background for her present work.

Pvt. Parks, of Philadelphia, Pa., was in her junior year at Morris Brown College, Atlanta, when she enlisted in the WAC three months ago. She had been studying general science courses, leading to a B.S. degree, and also took a course in chemistry for laboratory technician, sponsored by the War Department.

Pvt. Dorothy Paul and Pvt. Lafayette Warr are in charge of the darkroom of the X-ray laboratory for the cantonment area, mixing chemicals and developing all X-ray plates. Both were amateur photographers in civilian life, and enjoy their Army assignments.

Pvt. Paul, of Indianapolis, Ind., has been in the WAC four months. Her husband also is in the Army and is now stationed at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.

Pvt. Warr, of Louisville, Ky., has been in the WAC four months. She took her basic training at Fort Devens, Mass., and at Fort Des Moines, Ia.

HOSPITAL AIDES

Pvt. Louise Jackson and Cpl. Lillie Mae Jackson assist during the morning in the operating room at the Station Hospital. They act as circulating nurses, handing sterile supplies to the nurses who are present at operations, and help to prepare women patients for operations. Their other duties include patching rubber gloves and drying instruments after sterilization and placing them in the proper cabinets.

In the afternoon, Pvt. Jackson, of Norfolk, Va., works in the surgical clinic. She had some nurse's training in civilian life and worked as ward nurse in St. Vincent Hospital, Norfolk.

Cpl. Jackson, of New Orleans, La., works as an aide in the women's ward of the hospital during the afternoons. She had no hospital training, but was interested in nursing and asked for this kind of work in the WAC.

Pfc. Aretha Holmes, of Richmond, Va., is a mail clerk in the cantonment area of the hospital. She has been in the WAC since July 7 and took her basic training at Fort Devens, Mass., and at Fort Des Moines, Ia.

Cpl. Josephine Frye, of Charlottesville, Va., in charge of the WACs who assist the nurses in the women's wards at the Station Hospital. These girls make beds, push patients in wheel chairs, assist in lifting patients on and off tables, and do similar jobs in helping care for the patients there.

PRACTICAL NURSE

Cpl. Frye did practical nursing in civilian life, was secretary to a doctor in Washington, D. C., and helped to care for the patients in his office. She has been in the WAC since January.

Pvt. Maybell Harris, of Baltimore, Md., helps to care for babies in the nursery at the hospital. She worked in a hospital in Baltimore before joining the WAC seven months ago.

Pvt. Margaret Brogdon, of Sumter, S. C., is another of the nurses' aides. She did similar work in civilian life, caring for patients in private homes in Sumter.

Pvt. Mary Elizabeth Moody and Pvt. Belle McMillon are cooks in the main diet kitchen of the hospital. Cooks in the officers' ward kitchen include Pvt. Marion Moore, Pvt. Ann Reynolds, and Pvt. Doris Richardson.

Pvt. Moody, of Jamaica, L. I., N. Y., has been in the WAC 8 months, having been stationed at Fort Des Moines, Ia., before coming to Fort Benning. Pvt. McMillon, of New York City, has been in the WAC since March 20.

Pvt. Moore, of Franklin, La., came to Benning from Des Moines. She has been in the WAC 8 months.

Pvt. Reynolds, of New York City, and Pvt. Richardson, of New York City, also were trained at Des Moines. Both have been in the WAC about 8 months.

THE LINDSEYS—FATHER AND SON

General, If Younger, Would Join Chutists

"If I were just a few years younger, I wouldn't be in any outfit but the Parachutists," Major General Julian R. Lindsey, U. S. A., retired, father of Col. J. B. Lindsey, commanding officer of the 515th Parachute Regiment, said as he stood attired in the parachute and harness of the regular paratrooper. General Lindsey personally inspected all the modern equipmentand expressed envy of his son who is a qualified jumper.

General Lindsey was retired in 1934 after a lifetime spent in the Army. At the time of his retirement he was commanding general of the 7th Cavalry Brigade (Mechanized) and he was active in the development of America's powerful Armored Force at Fort Knox, Ky., from 1932 until 1934.

EX-BRIGADE CO

At one time General Lindsey was brigade commander of the 164th Brigade of the 82nd Division. This was during World War I when the Division was under the command of Major General B. Duncan. The 82nd Division is now wholly an airborne outfit, the first airborne division in the Army.

General Lindsey received the Distinguished Service Medal in the first World War. During his service with the armored forces one of the officers under his command was Major General Adna R. Chaffee, then lieuenant colonel, who played such a large part in the rapid development of that branch of our Army.

Both General and Colonel Lindsey are West Point men, the former of the class of 1892, and the latter of the class of 192. General Lindsey is an impressive soldier who retains all of his military bearing and interest. He was a crack shot on the rifle team while in the cavalry and the other day at the 515th, he picked up an M-1 for the first time and scored with the ease of a true veteran. He stays in top physical condition by playing a good deal of golf and riding horseback. He lives at the Army-Navy Club in Washington, D. C.

GENERAL IMPRESSED

Col. Lindsey spent the week showing his father how a parachute outfit trains and works, and the General was very much impressed with the thoroughness of the paratroopers for combat and the spirit and interest the individual enlisted man takes in his training. The fact that the commissioned personnel get right in there and do the same thing as the enlisted men was noted by him as a very healthy sign of cooperation and high morale.

Hobson Lauds Women At War

By KATHERINE HAMMARGREN

An afternoon filled with interesting anecdotes and pertinent facts concerning our allies marked the meeting of the Current Events group of the Fort Benning Woman's Club Monday afternoon, at which Colonel William H. Hobson, post commandant, talked on his experiences overseas.

Colonel Hobson told several stories to illustrate the bravery and the philosophy of women in the war. One night on Picadilly in London, he said, a voice which had behind it all the tradition of England offered to share her torch with him during a blackout. He learned during his conversation with her that she was the daughter of an earl, had lost two brothers in the war, and had a husband in the air force who mshe thought she had seen shot down. She was typical, he said, of British women: objective, matter of fact, and capable in any emergency.

As another example of personal bravery, Colonel Hobson referred to a French heiress in Algiers, a refugee from Paris. Although formerly wealthy, she has to beg food from army officers for her children, who are suffering from rickets. Money means nothing in Algiers, he said, but food points means everything. This woman, he pointed out, devotes all her time to Red Cross volunteer work as her contribution toward defeating the Nazis, and asks nothing for her efforts except a few sweets or food for her children to augment their unbalanced ration.

TOO MUCH WASTE YET

"There is still too much waste here in America," Colonel Hobson criticized in commenting on the difference between the British and the American food ration. "Here in the best mess at Fort Benning there were soldiers who piled their plates high with food, and then couldn't eat it. We've remedied that, but there is still waste in your kitchen and in my kitchen. By eliminating that waste you can help do your part in helping win this war."

Colonel Hobson cautioned his listeners against the American tendency to over-optimism. "It would be a fine thing," he said, "if the war could be over by Christmas. But the Nazis are fighting an aggressive defensive war. In spite of heavy losses they still have many divisions of fighting men. They hope to wear out the Allies, and thus manage to retain their hold on certain portions of Europe."

Colonel Hobson paid a personal tribute to General Walter Scott Fulton, former commander of Fort Benning, for the fine work he had done in building up the post and in cementing relations with Columbus. He asked club members to do their share in keeping up the standards of the post, and urged them to attend P.-T. A. and scout meetings to let the children know that the women are interested in them and in the post.

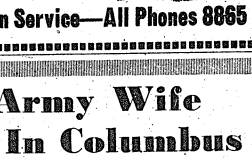
Kirven's Plans G. I. Stag Might For Next Thursday



Twenty-four hostesses will assist GIs with their Christmas shopping, while cigarette girls serve refreshments "on the house" at "Stag Night," which will be held next Thursday at Kirven's Department store in Columbus.

The store's annual event will take place earlier than usual because Christmas mail must be postmarked by December 10, according to F. X. Poster, publicity director of the store which is located on Broad street near Twelfth.

Here's a Good Tip for Speeding that Call!
With war on the wires—and people calling home during evening rush hours—long distance telephone lines are pretty crowded now.
Telephone lines are less heavily loaded in the early morning and late afternoon hours. Day rates are in effect during these periods, but you will find that calls generally go through faster than in the busy evening hours.

An Army Wife Shops In Columbus

By Phyllis

In your own particular way, as the wife or sweetheart of a military man, you'll have your best Christmas ever, if you hint or beg, as the case may be, for exciting perfumes by MAXANDRE OF NEW YORK. the appropriately named "Geronimo" for the Paratroops and "Conquest" for the Army, will more than please both you AND the man in your life. "Geronimo" has a spicy, heady and linger-longer quality about it which is instantly captivating. In fact, a "twin sister" of Chanel No. 5 describes it best. "Conquest," on the other hand, is a fresh, rather subtle, liltingly-lovely perfume, designed for your most discriminating feminine tastes. Packaged with the Army or Paratroop insignia in gold on a smart, squared container and tastefully wrapped in red, white, and blue striped lacquered paper, these perfumes are catching everyone's eye at the Main Exchange at Fort Benning, the only place they're available. Equally appealing is "Shangri-La," exotic and memorable, indeed. Any one of these unusually enticing scents will certainly enhance your loveliness!.

—V—

Whether you give or you get p o r t r a i t photographs this Christmas, they'll be a perfect likeness when produced by AIME DUPONT STUDIOS of Columbus. Now, more than ever, when photographs can be such expressions of devotion, they'll be treasured by you and your loved noes. As with anything truly fine, time is required in taking photographs, so the earlier your appointment is made, the better. Appointments made in the very near future will assure you a maximum of time to confer with the photographers regarding poses, costumes, and facial expressions. After you have done your part by looking prettily at the birdie, skilled technicians will develop and offer rough proofs for your approval. At this point you may suggest a bit of retouching here and there which will be done with the utmost care taken that the expressions and character will not be altered. Indeed, a short while after this, when you see the final photographs, you'll know at a glance, they really look like you and you'll be proud to give such a work of art to those near and dear to you.

For years the MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY has been the haven of all fashion-minded women in Columbus who are determined to have the very best in smart footwear. This shop has catered especially to women, knowing full well that they are often as not the main shoppers of the family. Fond parents realize that here they may shop for themselves and their children as well and know that each shoe purchase bears the mark of quality footwear. Especially popular for women, presently, at Miller-Taylor's are the new low-heeled styles, which are not only practical, but becoming. Many of these low-heeled styles by Mademoiselle are expertly tailored of good, soft, durable leathers to bring out the graceful lines that artfully minimize size, which is, of course, an all-important consideration in any low-heeled style. Other styles in this vast quality selection have been executed by Florsheim, College Bred, I. Miller, Vitality, all names of years standing. All this, plus the courteous and considerate attention of all sales personnel is why Miller-Taylor's is the most popular shoe shop in Columbus.

Many feminine residents of Columbus and Fort Benning favor evening gowns which are just about nothing more than a ball of fluff trimmed with yards of ruffles. On the other hand, many older or perhaps more sophisticated women realize a slim and simple evening gown is most becoming to their particular type. Whether you're on the sweet and girlish side or fancy you have a certain flair-tingue look about you, you'll find the perfect evening gown at KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, INC. One especially pretty compliment to a pretty girl is fashioned of soft yellow net with drop shoulders and a billowing and graceful skirt. Other equally attractive pastel-toned frocks are bound to make one who wears them "the belle of the ball." For the more mature woman, Kayser-Lilienthal's displays a wide selection of crepe evening gowns in subdued colors, highlighted by a touch of glittering sequins or sparkling jewelled trim. For the holiday festivities ahead you'll look your loveliest and be appropriately and c o r r e c t l y gowned if you make your selection at this quality shop on Broadway.

—V—

This is the Christmas to remember the worth of the permanent and practical . . . but not to forget the toy and the twinkle. Which is just one of many good reasons why you'll want to do your gift shopping this year at MONTGOMERY WARD COMPANY, where you'll find handwarming gloves, and foot-warming slippers, and throat-warming scarfs, and shoulder-warming bed-jackets. And many a gay heart-warmer. Glittering earrings, bracelets, necklaces, games and scrap-books and map jig-saw puzzles. And compact and correct additions for military-minded men who hold a top place on your shopping list. Well-designed writing cases, gin rummy sets, serviceable socks, ties and shirts all in the regulation army tan shade. Here too, you'll find pretty gear for a house . . . a tray, cigarette container, vases, victrola records, salad bowls, pyrex sets, rayon stockings, dainty and yet sturdy house dresses, warm overcoats for growing boys and girls, and so on ad infinitum. . . . As always with Ward's, the family department store the utmost in value is assured no matter what your purchases. So this Christmas remember to shop at Montgomery Ward's and remember to do your Christmas shopping early.

—V—

Luscious things to give or to get for Christmas are in every woman's corner of KIRALFY'S. Compacts, calfskin cigarette cases trimmed with white saddle stitching, plastic and daintily flowered pillboxes, jewelry of every type, evening bags, in fact just about everything dear to the hearts of women. Outstanding along the jewelry line are gold mesh fobs sprinkled with topaz, ruby, sapphire or multi-colored stones, as you will. Designed by Hattie Carnegie, these decorative fobs are the ultimate in smart jewelled pins. The most eye-catching evening bag is on envelope style, large enough to hold things and woven of copper and gold strands to form an all-over checked effect. Heavy gold rope trims the whole frame of this, the perfect accessory for evening wear. Other Christmas suggestions are the always welcome products of The Herb Farm . . . spices, salts, vinegars, done up in minute packages, or very complete, cellophane-tied baskets. Whether you have a bit of Christmas shopping to do, or a great deal, making your selections at Kiralfy's will make it indeed a pleasure.

—V—

Though it may seem a bit roundabout, it's not hard to figure out that some kindhearted soul at Kirven's certainly has our feminine interests at heart for, surprise! surprise. THE J. A. KIRVEN COMPANY plans a "Stag Nite" for all our men folks the night of December 2. This Thursday night is really for "men only," but we girls will most certainly be there in spirit, for what is this "Stag Nite" meant to be but the time to select presents for us. I might say as women, ever-wise, we'll be hintly broadly from now until December 2nd just what we'd like for Christmas. It is true, isn't it? Here is the perfect opportunity to speak up and say what we'd like to see in our Christmas stockings this December 25th. While voicing a list at least a yard long be sure to mention to friend hubby that cigarettes and refreshments will be "on the house" this most eventful night. So let's all band together and see that all our husbands, or sweethearts as the case may be, spend their time from 6:00 until 9:00 next Thursday at Kirven's shopping for our Christmas presents. Really sounds like fun, doesn't it?

O. C. Narrates Peiping Incident

National origin? That was James P. Grant's main problem a few weeks ago when he was filling out some forms for the Infantry School. He sat on his bed in the barracks of the Fourth Company, Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School and kept talking to himself and those around him. He couldn't figure out what to put down in the space entitled "national origin". His father was born in China; his mother was born in Michigan and upon being married she became a citizen of Canada; and, the befuddled OC was born in Peiping, China. His answer finally ended up as "British."

Grant's home address at present is Skyforest, California, having come to the United States in 1937 when he was 15 years old.

Japanese and Chinese hostilities caused Jim to leave his home in Peiping, and he went to Tientsin to get his passport in order to travel to USA. On his way to get his passport, his train passed Chinese and Japanese troop trains on the same railroad. This surprising use of a railroad by two fighting forces was explained by Grant.

"The war flared up 20 miles west of Peiping and the Japs were moving men up from Manchuria while the Chinese were pouring troops in from the south, both hoving by necessity to use the same rails in one sector in order to get the men into the engagement. Naturally, neither cared to blow up their means of communication and transportation."

After getting his passport, Jim returned to Peiping, then to Japan, then to San Francisco, then through the Panama Canal to New York. He lived a while in Massachusetts, then in Nova Scotia, and finally in California and Mexico.

THE JAPS ATTACK

The conversation returning to the War of China, the polite and ever smiling candidate told of some of the unusual incidents that occurred "over there". One morning in 1932 he woke up and found a large hole in the wall around the settlement. It was the result of a Jap air raid the night before.

Jim smiled as he related how the Japs were "slapped" in a cabaret killing. "Some Japs were killed in a cabaret brawl and the Japanese claimed that two British service men had done the killing. To prove it they had gathered 15 Japanese witnesses. The British unit commander there took one witness at a time and allowed him to pick the murderers as his unit of about 800 men passed by. Then the men were promenaded past each of the other witnesses. Only one Britisher was picked twice and since the affair was enacted under the watchful eye of an officer of the Rising Sun, the Japanese 'forgot' the incident."

Grant plans to do his part in the war by getting his commission and returning to China in order to teach their troops the use of American equipment and their possibilities in modern warfare.

The genial OC warns future travelers to China to be stocked up on cigarettes. His father, who is still working in India and China as a public health administrator, wrote him that common American brands cost him seven to eight dollars a pack in Free China.

Col. Hamilton Receives Legion Of Merit Medal

Col. James R. Hamilton of the General Section of The Infantry School has been decorated with the Legion of Merit for distinguished service with United Nations forces in Iceland. The decoration was presented by Maj. Gen. Charles H. Bonesteel, Commandant of The Infantry School during a review of the 176th Infantry on the Regimental Parade grounds.

The citation which accompanied the award stated that Col. Hamilton contributed in a high degree to the formulation of plans for the relief of United States Marine Brigade and the British forces in Iceland and in the execution of those plans which included taking over bases, camps, supplies and equipment for the use of American troops. He aided most materially in the establishment of an adequate and steady stream of supply which of necessity involved difficult land and water routes to provide for the needs of the many isolated outposts for the Iceland command. He was conspicuous for his initiative and marked leadership in developing procedures which have materially contributed to the turn-around of shipping, and also to the conservation of supplies and equipment.

During his service in Iceland which began in Sept. 1941, Col. Hamilton served as assistant officer of supply until September 1942 when he became Chief of the Office of Supply.

He attended the Universities of Chicago and Illinois, was graduated from the Company Officers course of The Infantry School and also the Commander and Staff officers course. Col. Hamilton's foreign service also includes duty in the Philippines in 1924-25 and the Canal Zone in 1936-37.

He is a native of Willow Hill, Ill., is married and resides in Fort Benning.

Good Samaritan-Soldier Gets Eleanor's Support

Cpl. John P. Pitcherale of the Medical Detachment of the 176th Infantry of The Infantry School Troops, has had many occasions to visit hospitals. Being the kind of a fellow who likes to help others, he frequently took time out to write a letter for a soldier-patient, to bring him magazines, cigarettes, candy or writing paper.

This began at Fort Meyer Hospital in Virginia and continued when his Army service brought him to Fort Benning.

Here he branched out, interested USO clubs and private citizens in his efforts. The crowning climax came last week with the following letter which contained a $10 bill to further his efforts:

THE WHITE HOUSE
Washington

My dear Corporal Pitcherale,

I have heard of your good work and am sending this note of appreciation. I know it must be a real satisfaction to you.

Very sincerely yours,
Eleanor Roosevelt.

"I've been fortunate," the Corporal said, "to obtain the cooperation necessary to carry on my work. A Mother's Club sends me home-made cookies and candy which I distribute to the men in the hospital. I have sent out over 150 Christmas letters and cards to men overseas, something I also did last year up in Washington. Those men really appreciate receiving Christmas cards and mail. I could tell that because of the trinkets and gifts and letters from all over the world which I receive in return. Many mothers have written me thanking me and asking me to thank those who have helped. I get a big kick out of doing what little I've done. Mrs. Roosevelt's contribution will go into my Christmas packages. It's heartening to receive such support."

Area Engineer Branches Out

Three important installations were placed under control of the Fort Benning Area Engineer to administer all construction, it was announced today as Capt. James A. Baird received notice of the consolidation of areas.

They are the Ozark Army Air Field at Camp Rucker, Ozark, Ala., Dothan CAA Project and Napier Field at Dothan, Ala. Capt. Baird also is in charge of the engineering department at the Opelika Internment Camp, Auburn CAA, and Fort Benning.

At Fort Benning, the Area Engineer is charged with drawing plans, letting contracts, supervising and inspecting new construction. At the new posts under his jurisdiction, he will superintend more than a million dollars in new construction which is now being pushed to conclusion.

Capt. Thomas H. Hopkins will act as resident engineer at Ozark, it was announced as the orders came through from the United States Engineer Office at Mobile.

1st STR Enlisted Men Promoted

To sergeant—Cpl. John D. Bennett.

To Technician Grade 4—Cpl. Gerald Fisher, T-5 Arnold Temple and Pvt. Oscar C. Kolb.

To corporal—T-5 John W. Mosley, T-5 Philip C. Campos and T-5 Steve F. Perez.

Saber Officer Is Veritable Globe Trotter

Should the 300th Infantry moves into other parts, no matter where, chances are that Lt. Col. John B. Furay, Commander of the 1st Battalion, will know the territory. Recently assigned to the 300th of the Infantry School Troops Brigade, Col. Furay has spent the greater part of the last two years establishing Army Exchanges, arranging for Supplies from the United States, coordinating local purchases with American and British agencies and setting up financial arrangements in all the remote parts of the world.

Among territories the Colonel has visited are Brazil, the Caribbean area, the Gold Coast, Nigeria, Eritrea, Egypt, Libya, the Holy Land, Persian Gulf Area and India.

A keen observer, Col. Furay's conversation is comparable to a rapid fire reading of any Richard Halliburton book. In quick succession, he will tell you of the Holy Land, take you on a verbal tour of the Valley of the Shepherds, show you the River Jordan and the Great Biblical port of Jaffa and the caves which served as Hostelries in Biblical days, or he may switch to India and the sacred cows, for which he states the American G. I. refuses to show proper reverence.

You learn that it's cheaper to buy a Persian rug in New York City than it is in Persia, and that you'd better watch your conversation around an Indian native; he's liable to pick up most of your unsavory vocabulary. All in all, Col. Furay is a well-traveled, well-read soldier.

He's glad to be with the 300th, and he hopes to help them with any difficulties they might encounter in case of a "repeat performance" in the countries he's traveled.

Sgt. Holloway Is Old Head In Post Office

With as practiced a hand as if he'd been doing it for life, Sergeant Watt Holloway daily routes hundreds of letters and packages even those addressed in undecipherable scrawl, through The Infantry School's 1st Student Training Regiment mailroom and on their way to anxiously waiting recipients.

He ought to know his job. For two years before enlisting in July, 1941, square-peg-in-a-square-hole Holloway was postmaster of Walterhill, Tenn., cotton center of historic Rutherford county. He had been appointed to the post after the death of his uncle, Grover C. Matthews, incumbent for 30 years.

Though his post office, located in the spacious general store Holloway operated in partnership with another uncle, was small, it nevertheless brought its share of headaches. For it was a one-man organization, with Watt as supervisor, clerical force, and janitor rolled into one.

"Seeing that the right people got their mail wasn't much of a problem," according to Tennessee State College-trained Holloway. "I knew everyone in town. But enough other details kept me on my toes—parcel post, registeries, and U. S. savings stamps, to name a few. And then I had to help run the store."

CAPTAIN ENGELLAND

The promotion of 1st Lieutenant Lloyd W. Engelland, commanding officer of Company "G," Truck Regiment, the Infantry School, to the rank of captain, has been announced by Colonel Frank J. Vida, his regimental commander. Captain Engelland has been in the army since March 8, 1934, when he volunteered and joined the service at Fort Snelling, Minnesota. He joined his present organization on December 22, 1042, and has served as a company commander since that date.

SGT. YARBROUGH

Chute Top-Kick Nears 30th Year in Service

When the armies of the Kaiser rolled across the face of Europe to start World War I, a young man from Danville, Va., began his career with the U. S. Army. On December 10 that same man, Isaac Yarbrough, now first sergeant of the First Academic Company, The Parachute School, will have completed 29 years of active service.

When the Sergeant enlisted he was sent to the old Columbus Barracks where he received his 13 weeks of basic training. Soon after finishing his basic training, Sergeant Yarbrough was shipped overseas to the Panama Canal Zone and stationed at Camp Gaillard with the 29th Infantry.

Describing his experiences in the Canal Zone, Sergeant Yarbrough said, "Reading in the papers how tough the going is for our boys over in the South Pacific reminds me of how it was in the jungle country surrounding the Canal. Of course, we didn't have any of those little men to contend with but as far as the rest of the life in a jungle country goes I know just what those men are up against.

"My old outfit, the 29th Infantry, did just about everything in the book. we cleared roads, built gun emplacements, and constructed drill fields. Every time we would clear a field, the next few days would see the jungle come back and swallow it up again."

JUNGLE FUN

Besides the jungle the Sergeant remembers many amusing incidents that occurred to some of the men when they would run into some denizen of the jungle. One time a python curled next to one of the men, who was asleep, when the man awoke and turned over to find himself staring into the beady eyes of this monster, he let out a scream that scared that snake out of a year's growth. Then the man lit out from there and didn't stop running till he reached the Canal some five miles away.

Coming back to the states in 1919, Sergeant Yarbrough was stationed at Camp Beauregard in Louisiana with the 29th Infantry. Here the regiment was nearly wiped out by an epidemic of flu. "At that time we didn't get the 'shots' that you soldiers receive today," the Sergeant said, "and although you gripe about them, I know that a lot of men would have appreciated the injections in those days." Before leaving Camp Beauregard Sergeant Yarbrough became regimental boxing instructor and participated in many other sports.

MEXICAN BORDER

From the 29th infantry Sgt. Yarbrough transferred to the 46th Infantry at Legal Gap on the Mexican Border, where he took active part in border-patrol work. It was at Legal Gap that Sgt. Yarbrough made master sergeant and was regimental sergeant major for Generals Browne and Malone. "For a year," the Sergeant recalled, "life was nothing but a series of two-week field problems, first with one general, then with the other.

The lure of foreign service again called the Sergeant, this time it was the Hawaiian Islands where the Sergeant put in three years with the 19th Infantry. Nostalgia got the best of him after his first three years on the island outpost, and he put in for a transfer back to the States.

Coming back to his Southland, Sergeant Yarbrough was stationed at Ft. Benning. In 1927 he married Miss Veshti Hoyle of Columbus, Ga. Continuing in his work as sergeant major, Sergeant Yarbrough served in this capacity under such men as General Bonesteel, General Singleton, General Brown, and General Fiske, during their respective stays at the Infantry School.

On Aug. 1, 1941, when the Parachute School was formed as a separate section of the Infantry School, Sgt. Yarbrough was chosen by Col. William Ryder, pioneer officer of airborne tactics, to be in charge of the Academic section. The section consisted of 46 enlisted men and 10 officers.

"Watching this school grow," the sergeant said, "has been one of the greatest thrills I've had in my years of service. Often I've wished I had been a few years younger so that I might have enjoyed the experience of being a jumper in this 'new Infantry'." When the sergeant first came into the Parachute Company they were using packing boxes for desks, unheated hangers for training and long hours of experiment before a new technique would be put into use by students.

"I can say that I am proud to

Blood Bank Returns Dec. 15

The Blood Bank will visit Fort Benning again on December 15, 16 and 17, according to an announcement from Ralph J. Mitchell, field director of the American Red Cross at Fort Benning. The exact dates for registration of volunteer donors among military and civilian personnel will be made public later.

Director Mitchell announced that the Benning quota, based on surplus volunteers in the past, has been raised to 240 pints per day with one day being allotted for the first time to personnel of the station complement troops, including the WAC.

The tentative schedule calls for blood donations from Infantry School troops on Dec. 15; from Parachute School personnel on Dec. 16, and from the station complement and civilians on the last day.

BENNING'S RECORD

In July Benning donated 545 pints of plasma and in October 552 pints. The July donations included 150 pints from the Parachute School, 200 from the Infantry School, and 195 from the WAC and civilians. The October donations included 170 pints from the 7th Armored Division, 170 pints from the Infantry School, and 212 pints from other donors.

The December visit of the Blood Bank will mark the third for the post since last June. Benning over-subscribed for both June and October. The October quota was filled by members of the 7th Armored Division, Infantry School troops and civilians employed at the post.

PLASMA SAVES LIVES

The great vlue of blood plasma donated by a military and civilians not in combat zones was attested to early this week by Lieut. Gates J. Wayburn, MC, of Atlanta, who has just returned from the North African theater of operations.

Lieut. Wayburn declared in an interview in the Atlanta Constitution that in the Tunisian campaign, "We took in some of the worst casualties, yet our mortality rate was very low—only 2.2 per cent. We got most of them well enough to evacuate. All this was with the help of God, of the sulfa drugs, and of plasma. Without these three factors, the mortality rate would have been much higher."

Largest single War Bond purchase by a member of the 11th Company of Colonel Robert H. Lord's 1st Student Training Regiment was made recently by 1st Lieutenant Earl A. Hamrick, whose home is in Shelby, N. C., when he laid out $750—the cash price of a $1,000 bond. Lieutenant Hamrick is attending the Officers Basic Course of The Infantry School, here.

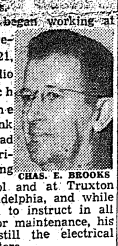
TIS Automotive Section Civilian Trio Compiles 68-Year Record With Unit

Three civilian employees of the Automotive Section of The Infantry School have rolled up a total of 68 years' service with the Section at Fort Benning with its predecessor the Tank School at Fort Meade Md.

They are Emory M. Shipley, Charles E. Brooks, and Ira C. Sears, instructors in the Engine Group of the Automotive Section. All three are natives of Baltimore who joined the staff of the Tank School soon after its organization in 1920, and came to Benning when the school was transferred from Fort Meade in 1932.

Before October, 1940, the school taught maintenance of both tanks and wheeled vehicles. At that time, the tank section was moved to Fort Knox, Ky., and the personnel and equipment retained at Fort Benning have been used to teach automotive maintenance to officers and enlisted men picked from camps throughout the country.

Mr. Sears began his War Department civil service career May 1, 1920, when he joined the staff of the Tank School at Fort Meade. But his first experience with the Army came in 1916, when he enlisted in the 3rd District of Columbia National Guard at the outbreak of incidents on the Mexican border.



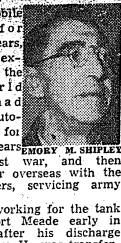
IRA C. SEARS

14 MONTHS OVERSEAS

His outfit spent several months in a camp in Texas and returned to Washington just in time to march in President Wilson's second inaugural parade in March, 1917. It was mustered out March 18, called back into service April 1, and made part of the 41st Division.

Mr. Sears served 14 months overseas and was discharged from the Army in March, 1919. He worked at auto welding before his employment at the Tank School in May, 1920. He is married and lives at 2509 17th Avenue, Columbus.

Mr. Brooks began working at Fort Meade December 1, 1921, for the Radio School, which later became part of the Tank School. He had studied electrical engineering at night school and at Truxton Institute, Philadelphia, and while he is qualified to instruct in all phases of motor maintenance, his speciality is still the electrical branch of motors.



CHAS. E. BROOKS

In his years with the school, Mr. Brooks has been most impressed with watching its graduates make good. Many of the country's present military leaders were his pupils when they were young officers attending either the tank or automotive schools. Mr. Brooks is married and lives at 1809 Wildwood avenue, Columbus.

SHIPLEY SERVES 30 YEARS

Mr. Shipley has been working with automobile engines for some 30 years, including experience in the first World War. He had been doing automotive work for five or six years before the last war, and then served a year overseas with the 28th Engineers, servicing army vehicles.

EMORY M. SHIPLEY

He began working for the tank school at Fort Meade early in 1920, soon after his discharge from the Army. He was transferred with that school when it was moved to Fort Benning and was retained here with the Automotive Section when the tank department was moved to Knox.

Mr. Sears is married and has one daughter, a student at Wesleyan College, Macon. His home is at 1750 Wildwood avenue, Columbus.

Army to Honor Civilian Workers

3,000 Employes Will Receive Decorations At Parade Dec. 8

Approximately 3000 civilian employes of the War Department's Army Service Forces at Fort Benning will be tendered a salute by the Army on December 8 when thousands of troops at the post will march in review before the civil service workers. Civil service employes throughout the country in Army Service Force installations similarly will be cited at appropriate ceremonies.

Named as eligible to receive the new awards are approximately 3,000 of the 3,700 civil service employes of the ASF at the post. Capt. Raymond A. Parkins, chief of the Civilian Personnel Branch at post headquarters, said that employees each will be given the Emblem for Civilian Service which denotes at least six months continuous service. Capt. Parkins disclosed, however, that the average length of service of the 3,000 employees is more than two years each.

Awards for faithful service of civilian employees of the War Department have recently been authorized, and December 8 is the first date at which the initial presentation may be made. The awards consist of three classifications. The first award is for civilians with six months service; the second is the Emblem for MeritoriousCivilian Service to all employees with 10 years' service or more; and the third is the Emblem for Exceptional Civilian Service for employees who have, through their work, performed some exceptional service.

The Emblem for Meritorious Civilian Service, to cite civilian employees with 10 or more years' service, will be awarded on January 15 and thereafter. A survey of employees eligible at Fort Benning disclose there presently are employed 93 persons by Army Service Forces with civil service employment in excess of 10 years. Their combined service totals 1,616 years, or an average of 17 years per person, seven years more than that required for the award.

Tentative plans for Fort Benning's ceremony on December 8 call for a mass review in Doughboy Stadium on the Main Post. The 3,000 civilian employees will be grouped in one section of the grandstand and after the presentation ceremonies it is planned for soldiers and members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps to pass in review before them, tendering them a salute for their meritorious work for the War Department.

A Civilian Employees' Award Committee, established to pass on awards for civilian employes of Army Service Forces at Fort Benning, was announced this week by Col. William H. Hobson, commanding officer of the post.

Named to the committee are two officers at the post headquarters and three civilian employees. They are Captain Raymond A. Parkins, chief, Civilian Personnel Branch; First Lieutenant Richard E. Tukey, Assistant Director, Public Relations Division; Mr. Henry B. Hug, civilian employee at the Supply and Service Division; Mr. Ray S. Miller, civilian employee at the Ordnance Branch; and Mrs. Thelma G. Byars, civilian employe in the Civilian Personnel Branch.

Yule Furlough Rail Tickets Go On Sale Monday

Military personnel lucky enough to have secured a holiday furlough may secure their rail tickets at the special ticket office that will be set up in the Rail Transportation Office with hours from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. every night Monday, December 6 through Saturday December 11, it was announced by Captain Charles W. McKeown, Transportation officer of Fort Benning.

The office will be maintained by representatives of the railroad companies for convenience of homeward bound soldiers.

FULL CASH BASIS

Personnel who will be travelling on furlough tickets between December 11 and January 11 must secure their rail tickets at least three days in advance, so that the railways will be able to handle the traffic. All sales are on a cash basis and no checks can be cashed, it was pointed out. No refunds will be made unless the furlough is cancelled due to circumstances beyond the soldier's control and the cancellation is certified by the immediate commanding officer in writing.

TRAIN SCHEDULES

For benefit of military personnel planning holiday travel, times of trains leaving Columbus are listed: For Montgomery and New Orleans, at 7:45 a.m.; for Chicago-St. Louis, 8:15 a.m. and 4:05 p.m.; for Atlanta-New York, 9:50 a.m. and 3:50 p.m.; for Macon, 3:10 p.m.; for Jacksonville, 11 p.m. All are Eastern War Time.

The post transportation office is located near the Fort Benning railroad station, behind the post commissary. Establishment of the ticket-selling service will relieve the burden of handling holiday tickets in Columbus and save officers and enlisted men a trip to town.

Faithful Fox Fixes Fox-holes For Fighter Friends

The expert — and who would know more about foxholes — is a fox.

Gray-black in color, and about 20 inches in length, the new pet of the Tankers was "inducted" about three months ago while the members of the company were busily engaged digging gun emplacements.

The fox has two buddies in the company—a pair of dogs named Salvage and Repair. Occasionally he is released from his cage, but prefers frollicking with the pups to taking off for the woods from whence he came.

The mascot is not very choosy about food and eats anything in the way of scraps that the boys in the company can rescue from the previous day's meal. He has been trained to the point where he can "beg" and do the little tricks most pups can do!

Cpl. Sidney Cole, custodian of the company mascot, claims that the fox is friendly only to the dogs and one or two men in the company. He is afraid of fire more than of men, and you can play with his mouth sooner than his tail or feet, Cpl. Cole, expert on fox lore, claims.

PX Reports Gift Shortages

Chalk up another war casualty. The black nightgowns and negligees that were Fort Benning soldiers' favorite gifts to the girls back home last Christmas just aren't available at the Post Exchange this year.

C. E. Shean, manager of the Main Exchange, said that although heavy orders for black underwear had been placed in anticipation of soldiers' calls for such gifts, only a few pieces have been delivered, and the PX has no hope of getting enough to meet the demand for them.

There is no such thing as a trend in gift buying this year, Mr. Shean said. Shortages of gift items in the market make a limited selection in the PX, and soldiers are buying whatever the Exchange has in stock, he explained. Probably the leading sales items is candy, of which the PX usually has a good assortment, Mr. Shean said.

Andrew Jackson Leads 1st STR Unit

The Sixteenth Company, 1st STR, has selected as student company commander a namesake of one of America's greatest generals and presidents—Andrew Jackson of Tennessee. The 16th Company's Lieutenant Colonel Andrew L. Jackson, comes from Bluefield, W. Va., and is a West Point graduate.

Seventh Armored Luckies Take to the Open For Four Tough Weeks In the Wildwood

BY CORPORAL LAWRENCE C. MURPHY
Seventh Armored Division Public Relations Office

FIELD HEADQUARTERS, SEVENTH ARMORED DIVISION, Nov. 29—Quietly and efficiently, and without any fuss or bother, the 7th Armored division moved lock, stock, and barrel into the field Nov. 15 for a four-weeks reconditioning and training program.

To citizens and merchants who miss the familar "Lucky 7th" triangular patch filling Columbus cafes and stores, the move was news, but to the Armoraiders it was an old story. Training afield has occupied a large part of their army life, and, as good soldiers, they are at home anywhere.

Ordered by higher headquarters to spend a part of their training time away from the civilized comforts of garrison life, Division Commander Maj. Gen. Lindsay McDonold Silvester and his men took to the Georgia pines just outside of the Sand Hill area.

Set up and running with typical army efficiency and alacrity, the 7th Armored division operates afield just as it did in garrison, except for specified periods when it goes "tactical." Then it functions exactly as it will in battle.

Even between battle problems or command post exercises the 7th is on the alert with every pup tent and vehicle well camoflauged from the commanding generals to the buck privates. On the day the division left Sand Hill every man, regardless of rank, had his slit trench dug and camoflauged before he attended to anything else in the bivouac area.

The first day in the field was a busy one with pup tents to put up, fire pits to dig, wood to chop, and the many other chores attendant upon camp life. But by nightfall everyone was pretty well settled in his new surroundings.

Now, almost as much at home as they were in garrison, the men say they rather enjoy "camping out" for a change, despite the cold evenings and early morning. In off-duty hours they make short work of the dead wood lying about as they chop, saw, and haul away fuel for campfires.

After the somewhat shopworn amusements of town and garrison life, the men enjoy and appreciate such simple pleasures as swapping stories and singing songs around their roaring campfires which dot the area nightly.

And if these diversions grow stale, GI's can always take in a movie or some refreshments at a mobile PX within their area. When

CBS Mel Allen With TIS PRO

Pvt. Mel Allen, nationally known radio announcer, has been transferred to Co. A of the Academic Regiment for duty in the Public Relations Office of The Infantry School at Fort Benning. Inducted in September, Pvt. Allen took his basic training at Camp Croft.

Prior to his induction, Allen spent more than six years as an announcer for the Columbia Broadcasting System with which he became associated after completing post-graduate work at the University of Alabama where he received his A. B. and LL. B. degrees.

During his six years as an announcer, he has broadcast World Series games and the major league all-star games since 1938; the daily home games of the Yankees and Giants since 1939; football games since 1937. He has also broadcast basketball games from Madison Square Garden and conducted a daily sports review for CBS.

Among the special broadcasts he has made were the inauguration of President Roosevelt in 1941 the burning of the Hindenburg and the studio news flashes of the attack on Pearl Harbor. His voice was the one which called in CBS foreign correspondents for a round up of the news. On several occasions he has been loaned to NBC, MBS and the Blue network.

His home is in Birmingham, Ala.

In his new assignment, he will assist in the preparation of radio programs which originate at The Infantry School.

AIR FORCE IN TIS

Forty-one Air Force lieutenants have reported to Capt. Joseph G. Palumbo's 7th Company of the 1st Student Training Regiment for a special four weeks course.

Women Aplenty—Just No Technique

For no obvious reason, a letter was posted on the bulletin board of one of the companies of the 300th Infantry addressed "To Whom It May Concern". It read:

"This morning while standing on the corner of Eleventh and Broad streets in Columbus, we made a survey.

"In the space of 3 minutes, 52 women walked by. These were the kind of girls a fellow would like to go out with. So with an average of 1040 women going by in an hour, if you can't get a date, you must have a poor technique."

It was signed "Two Soldiers (without dates)".

TIS, TPS Troops Get Three-Day Yule Holiday

Personnel in the Infantry School and Parachute School will enjoy a three-day holiday during Christmas and a two-day holiday at New Year's, Public Relations Offices of the two units announced Wednesday.

TIS and TPS officials were in receipt Wednesday of a communication from Army Ground Forces headquarters announcing that all service schools in its command will suspend training on December 24 and 25. Since December 26 falls on Sunday, it too will be a holiday.

January 2 also falls on Sunday next year, and with a one-day official holiday announced for New Year's Day, Army Ground Forces service schools will have a two-day recess at that time.

No word has been received at Benning relative to holidays for the other Post elements.

Jewish Troops To Celebrate Hanukkah Rites

Fort Benning troops of the Jewish faith will observe Hanukkah, the Feast of Dedication, from Tuesday, Dec. 21, through Wednesday, Dec. 29, Chaplain Samson Aaron Shain announced today.

The observance wil begin with the lighting of the first candle and an additional candle will be lighted each successive night for eight days. The fourth candle will be kindled at the Friday, Dec. 24, evening services at children's school, and other candles in the ASTP area on Sunday, Dec. 26 and in the 7th Armored area on Monday, Dec. 27, following the regular schedule of services.

The December 24 services at children's school will be concluded with a reception tendered by the Jewish Welfare Board of Columbus. At that time service men and women will partake of traditional Hanukkah delicacies. Transportation has been arranged for this particular service from all parts of the post, the Chaplain said.

Chaplain Shain has at his office in Station Hospital a supply of Hanukkah greeting cards which will be issued free to those desiring them for mailing to families and friends. There is also available a supply of Hanukkah candlesticks and candles for use by families of Jewish troops on the post and in Columbus and vicinity.

The feast of Dedication commemorates the reconsecration of the Temple in Jerusalem after it had been defiled by idolatrist worship at the hands of the Syrians. The festival lasts eight days and the traditional explanation is that when the sacred lamp was to be kindled at the reconsecration of the Temple only a small flask of oil undefiled by the idolater could be found. It was deemed sufficient for the requirement of one night only but it miraculously lasted for eight nights.

The rededication was made possible by the heroic resistance of a small number of Hebrew soldiers against their far mightier foes. The victory appears all the greater in view of the consideration that if Judaism had perished, Christianity probably would never have been born.

Communications Men Must Be Expert Climbers

"Be sure you can climb before you leave Fort Benning."

That's the advice of 2nd. Lieutenant Carl G. Edelmyer, of Philadelphia, Pa., now a communication student at the Infantry School here, has received from a friend serving as commupication officer in an Infantry regiment overseas. Edelmyer is attached to Lieutenant Grant's 13th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment. Writing from a war zone, his friend relates just how important are those pole-climbing spurs, standard equipment in all communication units.

One day, an overhead wire fell in the command post. As no linemen was available the communication officer strapped on a pair of climbers and went aloft to tie the wire back in place. Then several enemy planes came skimming along the treetops.

Expecting a surprise raid, everyone in the command post scrambled for cover. When the planes did not return, several men returned from their foxholes to discover he was something of a hero.

"But you see," he confides to Lieutentant Edelmyer, "it had been so long since I was a communication student and had tny practice with the climbers. After I had labored to get up the tree I was a little doubtful of my ability to use those climbers to come down in a hurry. So I just hugged the trunk until the planes had passed over."

3d STR OC Used To Keep Self On Jump

Spencer has 13 jumps to his credit and all were made before he came into the Army. As an employe of the United States Forest Service, Spencer had to jump into areas to fight fires, which were not accessible to ground traffic.

Candidate Spencer made his jumps in Montana in the summer of 1942. All were static line jumps from a height of 2,000 feet. Spencer had only two weeks instruction before making his first jump, but apparently absorbed it well as he made all his jumps free from mishap.

The technique employed by Spencer differs only slightly from that of the paratroopers. A 30-foot chute is used instead of the paratroopers' 27-foot job. This is necessary to provide for slower landings in this heavily wooded country. Also wire mesh and a football helmet were worn to shield the head and face, as tree landings were usually made. In case the tree was high Spencer wore ropes around his legs with which to lower himself.

This former Universiity of Idaho student has had several interesting experiences in his jumping career. Once, on leaving a plane, Spencer was caught in an updraft and when he opened his chute he was higher than the plane that had dropped him.

Another time Spencer was caught in a strong wind and it appeared as if he were going to land in a lake, however, a slight change in the wind pushed him back and he landed on the shore.

New Phone Booths At Ft. Benning Prove Popular

Somebody has finally done something besides gripe about a GI line. One of the worst liens of all—the crowd of Fort Benning soldiers waiting to make long distance calls home—was actually a pleasure Thanksgiving Day.

The room containing the telephone booths had just been redecorated, so L. A. Wood and O. W. Cobb, camp managers for the Southern Bell Telephone Company at Fort Benning, decided to have a house warming.

They had one corner of the room decorated with pumpkins and straw men dressed in Thanksgiving colors, and brought the prettiest girls from the company's business office in Columbus to act as hostess during the afternoon and evening.

So GI's who went to the telephone booths expecting a dull time sweating out a long wait for their calls to go through, met instead the pleasant surprise of pretty girls handing out candy, cigarettes, and conversation.

The novelty was so popular that Mr. Wood and Mr. Cobb are hoping they can stage something similar for Christmas.

LT. WOOD COMMANDS

1st Lt. Kenneth M. Wood, commander of the recently inactivated Company I, Academic Regiment of the Infantry School, is now the CO of G Company, following the departure of 1st Lt. Rudolph H. Lange to a new and important assignment.

Violin Playing OC Sure Ain't No Slouch With Weapons Neither

The public eye focussed sharply, during the first week of school, on OC Ralph S. Gustin, Sixth Company, Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School, when he raised his hand in ranks to ask:

"Sir, may I keep my violin in the barracks?"

We wonder whether he was here to fight or fiddle.

Next time he made the headlines was on the M-1 range, where he shot an expert 191, tops in the company. Perhaps he had the makings of a soldier after all.

Next Saturday music poured from the top floor of the barracks. Ralph was lured into playing a brilliant "Hora Staccato," the most difficult piece we know of for horsehair and catgut.

Last week Ralph shot an expert 220 with the LMG, so it was obviously time to clear up the mystery. What kind of a candidate was this?

Heredity was the answer, knocking Watsonian behaviorists for a loop.

"We had some good shots in the family," Ralph explained, sucking a chromium-plated pipe as he rubbed some more gloss onto his shoes. "My uncle could light a match with a rifle. He used to participate in the national meets at Camp Perry. He is a famous gunsmith—they'd even send him rifles to fix all the way from Germany years ago. And my grandmother could drive a nail with a rifle. You see, they lived in Wisconsin, and a rifle was all but a bedfellow.

"The musical talent is also hereditary. There has always been a singer or an organ player or a violinist in the family. I started at the age of six. That violin under my bed has been in the family for three generations—it's over 100 years old.

"Von Zweygberg, who ranked with Casals among the great European 'cellists has invited me to spend a summer with him in Switzerland when we get this war done and finished, and I think I will accept.

He Removed Shoes Band Played On

Private Dan Kruger took off his shoes and the 6th Regimental broadcast over radio station W. R. B. L. Sunday afternoon went off like a professional performance.

Every time Private Kruger, leader of the 4th Battalion band, gave the boys the rhythm beat, he stomped on the floor so loud the radio engineer complained that he almost drowned out the music.

Reminded, threatened and cajoled about it . . . nothing could break Private Kruger of his stomping. But some smart man hit on a happy solution . . . and Kruger took his shoes off.

Talent on the program from the 4th Battalion in addition to the band included Private Martin Schwartz, vocalist, Privates Donald Bohl, Donald Ferber and Sol Nemzoff, actors, and Private Phillip Potter, announcer. Also appearing on the show was Miss Irene Spencer of Columbus.

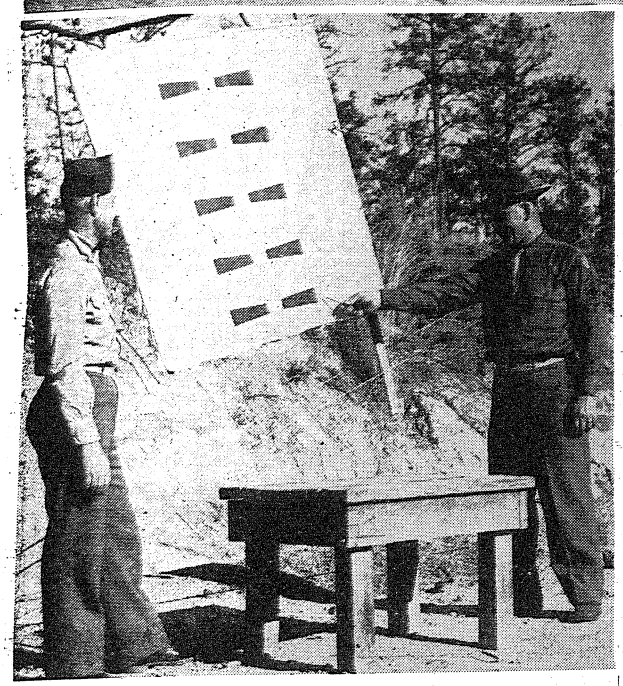
Medicos Toast Thanksgiving Day



One of the first Thanksgiving dances and programs of the season was held Monday night by members of the Medical Detachment Number 2 of Station Hospital Number 2 in the Harmony Church area.

Held in the Officers' recreation hall, which was decorated with corn stalks and other Thanksgiving motifs, the dance was formal and the feminine guests were the Military Maids of Columbus. Music was provided by Sgt. Natale Pintello's "Medicos", often termed the "biggest little band at Fort Benning. Refreshments included sandwiches, doughnuts, cocoa and coffee as well as soft drinks.

Among the guests at the dance were Col. W. L. Starnes, commanding officer of the Station Hospital, Lt. Col. William C. Kennedy, commanding officer of Station Hospital Number 2, Capt. Willie A. Ruff, adjutant at unit Number 2, Major John B. Joyner, commanding officer of the medical detachment, Lt. Edward W. Bernatowicz, commanding officer of the medical detachment at unit number 2, and Lt. W. B. Frohn

Benning Has One of Most Complete Series of Firing Ranges In Nation

Behind the mere fact that there are more than 60 ranges within the 220,000 acres that comprise Fort Benning producing some of the best marksmen in the world is the truism that is not too well appreciated by the personnel who use those ranges. And that is "there is more to the problem of maintaining firing ranges than meets the eye."

It's a job that requires a closely knit organization whose primary purposes is to make those ranges safe for firing and keep them in condition for firing. The human element of carelessness has to be combated in the former while in the latter, it's Mother Nature herself who raises havoc ever so often.

Nearly half of the ranges have been constructed and most of the old ones increased in size during and since 1941 when the present emergency made it imperative that this post expand rapidly to meet the requirements for the speeded-up training program. The earliest ranges built on the present location of The Infantry School were the Shelton rifle range on Dixie Road west of McAndrews range and Simpson pistol range, also on Dixie Road. Both were constructed in 1920. The latest range to be added was completed a short time ago, a rifle range named in honor of Colonel Kameil Maertens who met death early this summer in a plane crash. It is located off 8th Division Road near Jamestown Road in Harmony Church.

These ranges at Fort Benning are under the direction of Colonel Lewis A. Minichiello, range officer of The Infantry School. He is a graduate of the University of New Hampshire and has been associated with forestry and engineering work practically all his life. He received his B.S. at New Hampshire and has two years credit toward his M.S. at the same university where he also earned his reserve commission.

Prior to his call to Federal duty, he served with the U. S. Forest Service, working in the White Mountains of New Hampshire on timber management, logging, reforestation of cut over land and thus reclaiming old forest lands to prevent erosion of water sheds. His duties also concerned the planning of areas for the conservation of wild life.

EROSION RAISES HAVOC

Colonel Minichiello also worked for the Public Works Department in the city of Portsmouth, New Hampshire. One of the problems which he learned to combat prior to entering service was soil erosion. And no sooner did he get his assignment as range officer for The Infantry School that he learned that his old enemy, erosion, was one of the headaches he would entertain on his new job.

The range officers and their men found all of them although one posed a problem. It was a parachute bomb which was found swinging by its chute in a pine tree. Lt. C. S. Penick attached six sticks of dynamite to the tree and blew it up. This job, incidentally, is one for officers alone. Enlisted men are not permitted to detonate duds. Personnel of the ranges are always conscious of the need for scrap metal. And to that end, they salvaged over 65,000 pounds of scrap shrapnel during the last year.

Co-ordination of the firing problems means the co-ordination of safety factors. Safety officers of each unit that is firing, must be informed of any units firing in that area so that their units will not move into the impact areas of those other units. Notices of road closures during periods when units will be firing in areas through which these roads or trails pass have to be posted. Unit safety officers are responsible for the placement of road blocks and they're also responsible for getting their troops out of areas at the expiration of the time allotted to them.

Besides The Infantry School, the range officer co-ordinates the safety factors for firing on the ranges of the 7th Armored Division and the A. S. T. P. which are in proximity to those used by the school.

All of the five officers in the Range Section are detailed to the disposal of duds but each, in addition, has specialized duties.

Lt. Cherry is in charge of the sub-range office in Harmony Church. Lt. Bernard Mulvaney has charge of supplies and one of his toughest jobs is to get materials for targets. Lt. Creed Penick handles safety factors and maintenance. Lt. Keith B. Evans is detailed to handle the maps and road closures and the safety factors attendant to them.

NAMES FOR HEROES

Most of the ranges are named for heroes of World War I, and not necessarily officers, either. Carkener Range was named for SCarkener, a corporal. Weigel antiaircraft range was named for Sgt. Roy Weigel.

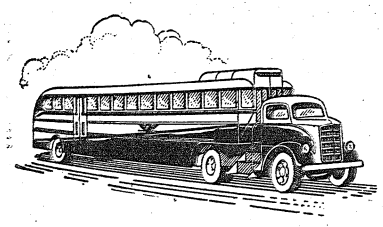
The problem now has been fairly well hand-cuffed, but as Colonel Minichiello points out, erosion can't be beaten completely over an area as large as that involved in the ranges at this station. Flumes have been built at many of the ranges and these have curbed to a large extent, the washes which have made certain ranges untenable at times. Even so, the range personnel of 209 enlisted men and five officers have a 365 day a year job on their hands to meet and check erosion whenever and wherever it begins.



There is another job of building and maintaining targets of various sizes and shapes for the various types of ranges. These vary from the ordinary frames, on which are pasted the various types of target sheets, to those targets which simulate moving vehicles. There are others which simulate truck convoys such as "The accomplishments of this indispensable member (the ground forces) of the air-ground-naval team will when the story is fully told fill many of the brightest pages of our war history. This is something I have felt for a long time. It comes from the heart."

—General Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Take Care of Your Stuff And It'll Take Care of You

In connection with the "Take Care of Your Stuff" campaign sponsored by the Infantry School it might well be appropriate at this time to consider that the Army, prepared for all eventualities, has clearly stated what is expected of every soldier as regards care and cleaning of equipment.

FM 21-100, otherwise known as the Soldier's Handbook, makes it pretty clear on the entire point. Here are a few of the comments made in the Handbook about equipment that would be well to remember, particularly during the present drive:

"The arms and equipment which are issued to you are the property of the United States. They are entrusted to your care for miliary use during your period of service in the Army. You are responsible for them and it is your duty to see that they are properly cared for."

In a masterpiece of understatement, the Handbook adds this: "Your safety and comfort in the field will depend upon the manner in which you keep your arms and equipment. You must take particular care not to lose them, as you may not be able to replace them by the time you will need them most."

Here at Fort Benning, there are countless officers and enlisted men who have been considerable action on the many fighting fronts in the present global war. We have no doubt at all that they could tell many stories of men who found need for one of their articles of issue only to realize that it was not functioning properly because they failed to spend a few moments in cleaning up the equipment at an earlier time. These same officers and enlisted men could tell of many men who are now regretting such carelessness—in some hospital. They probably could also tell of a great many who will never again get an opportunity to take care of their equipment properly.

It is not enough to say that you will be obliged to pay for articles, damaged or destroyed through your carelessness. Or that you can get another article.

Look at the last sentence of Paragraph 61 in FM 21-100. Keep it in mind. Some day you may be glad that you did.

"Remember that carelessness in the protection and condition of your arms and equipment may cost you your life or health, or that of a comrade."

Start now. Take Care of Your Stuff.

Pity the Poor Civilian, He's Catching It

Would you rather be a civilian or a sodjer??? . . . It's two years since Pearl Harbor, and that oughta be time enuff for youse to decide one way or t'other!!! . . . Let's suppose ya wanta be a civilian . . . okay . . . iffen you owned a drug-store, youse would be in a grave next year on account of loneliness!!! . . . Iffen youse owned a hotel, you would go ska-rewy trying to please sodjers 'n their families . . . And that goes fer barbers too!!! . . . If you was a milkman, you would have to be careful and not run over any sodjer what is trying to make reveille!!! . . . If you was a clerk in a department store, you would have people looking at ya like you was a donkey in the Kentucky Derby!!! . . .

Supposing you, as a civilian, was invited to a house party where servicemen also got a invite? . . . Poor soul, you would get as much attention as a fire extinguisher at a USO dance!!! . . . And that gets ya thinkin about how funny wimmen is sometimes . . . Why, two years ago, wimmen was saying they would think twice't before they married a sodjer . . . And now . . . jeez!!! . . . look at 'em!

Civilian automobile dealers is wondering whoinell can they sell second hand tanks to next year!!! . . . I think it is much more good to be tha sodjer!!! . . . Civilians gotta worry about alimony and rubber goods what they can't get now, and I betcha it ain't long before it'll be fashionable . . . ladies' woolen undies!!!

Army Wives Take Hard Knocks Aplenty

Every now and then someone comes up with an editorial which is spoken of as being "timely". Now this is not an attempt at "editorializing" and it is far from "timely", as a matter of fact it is late, very late! For subject matter today, we didn't have to look very far to find something very near and dear to the heart of the average G. I.; namely, his wife. A lot of people get all excited when you get to talking about their wives and from personal experience, we can't say that we blame them, but, as we said before, we had to have subject matter and this was nearby.

To get down to the matter in hand, these wives of ours come in for a lot of rough knocks being Army Wives and we propose to examine the situation and attempt to find out why and what can be done about it. No crusade, understand, just an examination of the situation. So, here goes.

To begin with, your G. I. gets shipped to Ft. Benning along with anywhere from ten to a hundred other G.I.'s and of course Mrs. G. I., figuring that sure enough this is about the last round as far as she and Brother G. I. are concerned, packs up whatever it is she packs up and grabbing little G. I. Jr., by the arm, comes to Columbus. According to all the magazines, right here is where the story should reach a happy climax, but it "Ain't so, Brother," no indeed! "It ain't necessary so!" For, no sooner has Mrs. G. I. and Jr. arrived in the fair City of Columbus, than she is faced with the problem of getting in touch with Hubby, changing Jr.'s pants and more important, finding a place to park the Gladstone and the Taylor Tot and cook chow. Brother, that ain't a problem, it's Dilemma, Model M1A1, complete with horns and forked tail! So, what does Mrs. G. I. do about said dilemma? Well, she goes down to the Billetting Office and puts her "John Henry" on the dotted line and waits. What happens? Nothing! And so, after walking around all day, she finds a "lovely)-rm.eff.apt." For your information, this consists of one room stuffed with all the old furniture that the owners have had palmed off on them by three or four generations of relatives and although it's called antique, it's just worn out and no mistake. Kitchen privileges are to be hers for the payment of a nominal sum and for two bucks more she can use the front door and wash out Jr.'s pants in the bathtub which she shares with six other families.

Now the future looks rosy for the G. I. family, yes, indeed, they've got a home, a place to park Jar. and space for papa G. I. to hand his Overseas Jr. and space for pap, G. I. shoes. Yes, sir, things are really looking up for our friends, the G. I.'s. But their troubles ain't over yet, not by a jugful, there's a lot more to the story but it will have to wait until later when we can get more space and time to tell it.

V. D.'s Are No Respecters of Age

Do you know that if the human race would abstain from any promiscuous sexual relations out of wedlock for one generation, gonorrhea would disappear from the earth? Of course such a hypothetical state of society is visionary in the extreme. We may limit venereal disease, hedge it about, keep it subdued, reduce its incidence, but eradicate it—never. Lest the race perish, the sexual instinct has been made the ruling passion.

The ravages of veneral diseases among our people are enough to tear your heart out. All doctors have seen children born blind, deaf and deformed, to ignorant mothers. Even girl babies only a few weeks old with gonococci vaginitis have been brought to the physicians attention. This is an old story in institutions where large numbers of children are cared for and treated.

Gonorrhea infected tubes (Salpingitis) has been seen in girls as young as five and in women as old as 75. This disease misses no age, or creed or sex, not the least among the ill effects upon society is the fact that Gonorrhea in both males and females is so often followed by sterility. There is a much higher percentage of sterility among men.

Probably not over ten percent of the women infected with gonorrhea ever receive treatment. For this reason alone, women are more often the "carriers" than men. Under adequate treatment the gonococcus disappears from the body within a few weeks to a few months. Without treatment it maybe more or less dormant for years. Practically the same can be said of Syphilis, except that the period of treatment is necessarily longer. The earlier a patient presents himself for treatment after contracting the infection, the better will be the outlook. It is much easier and a great deal safer to use prophylaxis and prevent the disease, than to try and cure it after it is contracted. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

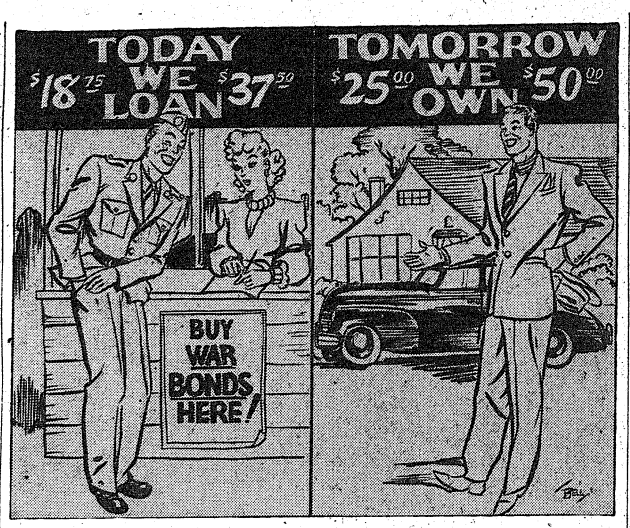
The Individual Is Once More In Saddle



Beginning with the years of the period following the first World War and continuing up to the present time, the methods of modern warfare have caused theoreticians to fill the air with dire warnings regarding the future presaged for individuality by the huge scale of the conflicts.

With the senseless slaughter of the massed hordes of Prussian automatons hurled against Allied gunfire at Verdun, a legend has grown up that in modern warfare the individual does not count, that he is but one of a mass of men whose job it is not to reason why but merely to do and die. People here said the future belonged to the Legions of Faceless Men. While it is of course true that strict discipline plays an essential part in the modern army, this legend cannot be given credence by the thoughtful soldier. For he realizes that never before, perhaps, has so much depended on the right action by an individual in avital spot.

In the fabled days of old individual kings may have saflied forth to battle with other single kings. Yet there was not upon their shoulders the burden of responsibility that rests upon many ordinary buck privates in today's wars. If they failed, they alone died. Yet the thoughtless action, the one misinterpreted order, the poor choice of course of one soldier today can doom scores of comrades, and through them, important units and battles.

The fact that tactics today, with the fluidity of warfare reintroduced by the airplane and fast mechanized units, and the new importance of the individual foot soldier is a harbinger of the return swing of the pendulum of warfare to the types prevailing in the Indian wars of our nation's youth. It is also an omen and a symbol of the coming defeat of the massmen and the coming victory of democracy.

THANKSGIVING EN TERTAINMENT GALORE FOR TURK EY DAY

By LT. M. S. DANK

The Ninth St. USO is planning to inaugurate a new program if there proves to be sufficient interest among the officers and enlisted men of Fort Benning . . . The novel feature—part of the athletic program of the club—has tentatively been called "The Art of Fencing." . . . All those interested in either learning or improving on their ability with the foils are asked to register their names and addresses with the Ninth Street USO as soon as possible so that the program can get under way.

Another unusual program is also scheduled for the Ninth St. USO. It's an evening of Folk Dancing to take place every week on Tuesday evenings starting at 9 o'clock, E. W. T. At that time Club Room No. 3 of the building will be turned over to officers, enlisted men, and civilians alike for Square Dancing, Folk Dancing, and the like. So it's grab yer pardners and fall in line this Tuesday at 9 o'clock.

The Salvation Army Club at 3rd and 16th Street in Phenix City calls attention to the Fort's camera enthusiasts to its dark room for who desire to make use of it. The room may be reserved by calling the club. It's open from 2:30 to 8:30 E. W. T. Bring your own chemicals and paper, but other equipment is available at the club.

Two parties are scheduled for this week end at the Episcopal Church Service Center, 1130 First Ave. The first one is slated for Saturday night, beginning at 7 o'clock, Benning Time, while the second one takes place next day, Sunday, starting at 4:30 with the musical Vespers program. Then comes the usual bountiful supper and social program.

Dr. Fred E. Luchs of the First Presbyterian Church of Athens, Ohio, arrives Friday to take charge of the Presbyterian Service Center at First and 11th, and to assist Dr. J. Calvin Reid in work sponsored for service men. Incidently, the Service Center will be open Saturday afternoon and evening and the same time on Sunday for those of the armed forces who desire to take advantage of it. Refreshments, of course.

The Town Hall group of the Ninth St. USO plans to have a special program this Sunday at its usual meeting time, 3 o'clock, E. W. T. Speakers will be Dr. Zebulon Judd and Dr. Showalter of Auburn University who will talk on "Education Before, During, and Post-War, and its Implications." Dr. Paul M. Munro of the Columbus Educational System will act as chairman, and Pfc Harry Dubin will serve as moderator . . .

The Army-Navy YMCA USO at 14 W. 11th St. has scheduled two dances this coming week for the entertainment of GI's . . . One takes place this coming Saturday with music by a 7th Armored orchestra, and the second follows on the next Tuesday with dance tunes by the 131st Infantry ork.

Lovers of the opera can get their fill of it every Saturday commencing with the coming one when the Ninth St. USO opens its music room for those who wish to listen to the opening Metropolitan Opera broadcast from New York . . . Also, lovers of classical music might be interested in learning that the music room of the Army-Navy YMCA, just opened a short while ago, now has a collection of about 1200 recordings of fine music. . . .

BY PVT. G. I. GRIPE

We hear that after the war is over and everybody is back in civilian life again, the boys from the 300th will start a "De-sabered Veterans Association."

Over in the 176th, they're claiming that one of their boys got a furlough and then spent it right at Fort Benning. Blonde-trouble, they say.

That Brian Aherne actor guy sure had what it takes with the femmes. They went completely ga-ga around the post. We thought that the boys went a bit screwy over Jane Russell, but when it comes to getting excited about a member of the opposite sex, us guys ain't got nothing on the dames around the Post. Sgt. Neu, who piloted the handsome guy around, still wonders what Aherne has that Neu hasn't. For one thing, sergeant, he has Joan Fontaine for a wife.

Geez, thanks, Sgt. McDonald, but we ain't got no ambitions to become a pfc. Next thing we know, we might be a Sarge like you and then we'd have to have dignity like you. And that'd just kill off all our charm, if any.

Pfc. Aleon Shapiro of the staff of the "Spirit of 176" has a hard time of life. Seems that the 176th Non-coms club has been demanding some publicity in the paper. He went over the other night, got a pix at a dance—and accidentally showed some sarge with another sarge's wife. First sarge set foot down. Says his wife is coming here soon and might not understand. What the heck would she think we do at dances down here, with gals so scarce?

Sgt. Milano nearly had a fit other day when he came to get Athletic Association station wagon—only to discover that Sgt. Neu had lost the gas ration book for it. Quick work by the laundry found it in one of the Sarge's shirts. Cleanliness must be getting next to forgetfulness these days.

Somebody called PRO day or so ago and wanted to know if ASTP had classes for illiterates. Kind of a smile there, considering that all ASTP men are supposed to be at least high school graduates and of college calibre. Or is that caliber? Or calibre? Never can remember and how do you look up things in a dictionary if you don't know how to spell 'em in the first place? Or is this just a lot of caliber oil?

Hey, you GI's scattered around this place—don't nothing never happen to you-all? Why not give out with some of the funny things that happen your way? We need 'em.

No one who faces full responsibility in life will ever find himself out of a job.

A "transition period" after the war may be a good thing provided we don't use this "cooling off" just to settle back in our old moulds.

THE MONOTONY OF MEDIOCRITY

Chaplain F. M. Thompson

It is a sad hour in a young man's life—or a young woman's—when he realizes that he belongs to the common herd of humanity; that he has not the gifts or ability that makes for significance; that in all likelihood he will continue to do the same tasks year in and year out without a break in their dreary, irksome uniformity, the experience of countless thousands. And it is not surprising that he should feel somewhat discouraged over the future.

But, after all, who are the important folks? What is the most important business in this world? Who will decide?

The general wins a great battle. However he depends on his staff and they on the rank and file of the army, and all in turn, depend on the farmer toiling far away in some valley or plain. The general writes an indelible page in history, the farmer dies unheard of and unsung, his was a humdrum life, mediocre, commonplace, but who will say did the most worthwhile work.

"A commonplace life, we say as we sigh.
But why should we sigh as we say?
The commonplace sun in the commonplace sky
Makes up the commonplace day.
The moon and stars are commonplace things
And the flower that blooms and the bird that sings.
But dark were the world and sad our lot
If the flowers failed and the sun shone not.
And God, who studies each separate soul,
Out of commonplace lives makes
His Beautiful whole."

Your scribe is all a-twitter about the Soldier-Show Conference from which he has just returned. It was held at Fort Mac in Atlanta and was one of the best planned affairs of its sort that this conferee has ever attended.

For four days we were instructed in the various phases of soliershow production. Eminent personages from stage, screen and radio were on hand to assist in the instructions. Brian Aherne (who later 'popped' down to Benning) gave the low-down on the workings of the Hollywood Victory Committee. George Jessel, the inimitable, acted as show doctor and needless to say, made use of every opportunity to mention his marriage. Arch Oberler's helpful hints on radio production were priceless.

It was old home week for the Broadway Boys—such handshaking you've never seen. It was great to see the 'old bunch again even without their camel-hair coats.

Well, rehearsal for "Holiday-time" got under way last Monday evening and your little B. is still punchy from the goins-on . . . Everyone there was a potential star or so it seemed. Imagine, finding the star-complex infecting a group of G. I.'s . . . No! Neither could I. It took me a day or so to realize that all these star-studded kids didn't even know what a revue was and what was worse didn't seem to feel they could learn anything . . . Well, time will tell.
Somewhere around the Post there must be a few men interested in scenery designing and construction. If you happen to know of such a rare creature have him phone 3411 . . . Thanks.

Kay Says—

MULTIFARIOUS DU TIES PLACE TERRIFIC BURDEN ON. U. S| WOMEN

Any army wife, confronted with numerous demands upon her time, can understand why there is a certain proportion of legitimate absenteeism among women workers. In fact, we marvel that there isn't more. In our own small way we have the same problems as those women who try to hold down a war job and at the same time keep a home and family going.

What most men fail to realize is that where formerly the working woman had two jobs, she now has many. Running a compact house after working hours with the help of innumerable electrical aids used to be fairly easy for anyone possessed of a modicum of common sense. But now something always interfers with the efficiency of even a volunteer, part-time worker.

For one thing, shopping is not the comparatively easy job it once was. No longer can the busy housewife mull over her prospective menu on the way to the grocery, pick out the most likely prospects for a quick but palatable meal, and have a piping hot dinner on the table by the time her family is ready to eat. Food buying requires thought and mathematical precision these days, and often hours of preparation to make the most of less-familiar vegetables and meats.

Nor is the laundry problem as easy to dispose of as it once was. Electric irons and washing machines have a habit of wearing out, and laundries no longer deliver spick and span clothes in a given number of days. The wear and tear on the nerves of a housewife when she realizes her ten-year-old iron may give out any minute, is beyond the comprehension of any mere male.

'We don't seem to get the cooperation from the nominal heads of families we used to, either. Time was when it was not beneath the dignity or beyond the resourcefulness of a fond husband to take off the screens, rake up the leaves, tinker with a light cord, discipline the children, wash the car, or do the innumerable small tasks necessary to keep a home in first-class condition. All this has changed since male personnel, whether in civilian life or, in the army, is confronted with a shortage of help and a consequent lengthening of hours and responsibilities.

It is mama who is expected to take the clothes to the cleaners in these days of no-deliveries. It is mama who is expected to tinker with the electric fixtures. It is mama who is expected to see that the yard is kept in trim, whether there's anyone to help her with it or not. It is mama who varnishes the floors, whitewashes the maid's room, or carries out the ashes. It is mama who sees that there's gasoline in the car, and it is mama's responsibility to see that tires, oil, and battery are checked. It is mama who rounds up that elusive quart of whiskey if guests are in prospect, and it is mama who worries as to how to feed them without surrendering too many of the family's ration points.

Just how mama manages to do this is sometimes baffling even to herself. Somehow everything usually manages to get done. But I imagine there are innumerable women who would gladly forswear their jobs, whether full or part-time, whether as paid workers or as volunteer helpers, and go back to the days when it was no disgrace for a woman to loiter over a light novel and a cup of coffee while the breakfast dishes remained unwashed.

Sgt. McDonald's Basket

COL. SWAMPWATE R ATTACKS WASTE BASKET A L A DON QUIXOTE

BY S.-SGT. TOM M'DONALD

From where I was reclining in my swivel chair I could easily see through the half-open door to my commanding officer's private office.

The ol' boy was busily reading his last month's copy of THE INFANTRY JOURNAL and every once in a while he would grit his teeth and pound the desk with his fist. This bit of behaviour continued for about 40 more pages, and when I was beginning to think that maybe I should call the medical officer, the ol' boy elevated his nose from the magazine and energetically bellowed:

"Sergeant! Assemble Private Sawgrass, and you two report here immediately!"

"Yes, Sir," I replied, giving Sawgrass the high sign and starting for my leader's lair. After we had saluted and frozen into position of attention, Colonel Swampwater began:

"It has just come to my attention that due to forces beyond my control you men have been neglecting your military training. In the future I shall require complete devotion to your task of being soldiers."

"Yes, Sir," we replied.

"To begin with, we shall have a little tactical problem. I will be the regimental commander and each of you men will be squad leaders of mortar squads. Sawgrass, you will command the 60mms and Sergeant, you take care of the 81's.

"Sawgrass, your area will be that corner, and, Sergeant, you will begin your attack from that corner."

"What will we use for ammuniquired Sawgrass.

"Paper wads! Here roll up some of these old chewing gum wrappers and efficiency reports," the ol' boy advised.

"Where is the enemy, Sir?" I askd.

"The enemy will be my waste basket. Set it way off over there! Now when zero hour approaches and I give my signal for the attack, the 81's will open up with a heavy barrage at three-minute intervals. The squad leader of the 60's will crawl forward two feet and supplement the barrage. At 15 minutes past the zero hour the other infantry units will charge with grenades and fixed bayonets. Are there any questions?"

"Yes, sir. Where will your CP be?"

"I will have a combination command post and OP from the top of my desk. Sawgrass put my swivel chair up there for me to sit on."

"Yes, sir," replied Sawgrass as he elevated the chair to its position.

"When the barrage lifts, all of us will assimulate infantry rifle companies and charge the waste basket—er, I mean the enemy with fixed bayonets as I previously stated.

"Sir, there is a broom, a map, and your umbrella out in the hall. Shall I collect them now for distribution?"

"Immejately, Sergeant!"

"Good. Now, Sir, there is one more question: at what point do we reassemble for reorganization and to collect our medals?"

"We shall reorganize over there by the windows. Now there is no time to be lost; synchronize your watches and be prepared to move out. Are there any more questions?"

"Yes, Sir," mused Sawgrass. "If I should make the supreme sacrifice, Sir, will you see that my company commander gets my dog tags o.k., Sir?"

"By all means, Sawgrass. Now dammit, move out!" the ol' boy retaliated as he bristled with excitement. We immediately moved to our positions and prepared for the zero hour.

From his vantage point on the desk, Colonel Swampwater scrutinized the waste basket with his field glasses. Then with a quick up and down motion he gave a violent blast on his GI whistle. The mortar barrage began! Sawgrass and I hurled paper wads at the waste basket for all we were worth. The Colonel picked up his telephone and yelled reports of our progress to the operator. Every time the poor girl tried to get a question in edgewise he yelled "Roger" and continued spieling off his orders to rear and adjacent units.

When we had exhausted our supply of paper wads HE-M-I, the ol' boy gave another shrill whistle, jumped off his desk, grabbed a map, and we charged the objective yelling at the top of our lungs. After we had jabbed and banged and stomped the basket into a state of debris, one of our officers looked up! Silhouetted in the doorway was none other than our division commander, General Auspur G. Quagmire!

"Swampwater," he bellowed, "what in the hell is going on here?"

"The enemy, Sir, has been annihilated," replied the colonel, raising to full dignity of his stature. Without undue hesitation Sawgrass and I headed for the back of the filing cabinet as the General and three MP's escorted our leader to the rear areas to give his report.

Ideas are funny things. They don't work unless we do.

Unity is more than treaties. It is built, as confidence is built, by many selfless acts. And can be broken by a single inconsiderate demand.

If post-war people are just like me, will that change the course of history?

Parachute School Work Impresses Brian Aherne

He came, he saw, he conquered — and he was conquered.

I'm talking about Brian Aherne, the British born film star who is visiting Fort Benning as a member of the Hollywood Victory Committee.

Fascinating himself, he was fascinated by the Parachute School, saying "If I were in the service, that would be my choice. Those boys lead the adventurous daring life that every man dreams of."

"My one disappointment about my stay here is that I haven't seen a mass parachute jump," Mr. Aherne said, "but I'm hoping to see that, too, before I leave. It must be the most beautiful sight imaginable."

The six feet two and a half inch film star, who "likes to forget about that extra half inch," arrived in Columbus Wednesday evening for the last stop in his tour of service camps over the country. He immediately was whisked away to Fort Benning where he has been quartered at the Officer's Club.

"I think Fort Benning is without a doubt the largest establishment of its kind I have ever seen," Mr. Aherne comments, and also the most overwhelming. It is really a magnificent camp."

Having toured the South for the past three weeks, he is in a position to know. "It's all been a wonderful experience," he said, "but the Parachute School has made this camp stand out in my mind."

Explaining a little further about the Hollywood Victory Committee, Mr. Aherne, said, "We do the best we can to show the boys that we in Hollywood haven't forgotten them. Right now over a hundred stars are being sent out to Iceland, Alaska, and all over America."

Mr. Aherne's job is to talk to the boys, give their morale a little boost. He came here completely alone, no singers, dancers or troop of entertainers came with him. He has been visiting mess halls, class rooms, recreational halls, and the hospital just "talking with the fellows like one guy to another," as he put it.

"It was quite a thrill to have Thanksgiving dinner in the mess hall yesterday," he smiled. "The food was wonderful, has been in most of the camps I've been to. And now I know where all the steak and butter has gone. I've been sorely tempted to put one of those slabs of beef in my pocket to take home to my wife."

Mr. Aherene will leave Fort Benning Saturday morning for New York where he will attend the opening of his latest picture, "What a Woman," in which he is co-starred with Rosalind Russell.

Benning Private Wants To Be Ace Like Brother

Pfc. Frank McArthur, on duty in the Provost Marshal's Office at Fort Benning, has good reasons for his ambition to become one of the Army's fighter pilots. His older brother, Captain Paul McArthur, assigned as a fighter pilot with the Ninth Air Force, recently became an ace, with five enemy planes to his credit. Paul is now the holder of the highly coveted Distinguished Service Cross, the Air Medal, and the Distinguished Flying Cross.

Although Frank has experienced some difficulty in meeting certain requirements for Aviation Cadet Training, he has not given up trying to qualify, and his illustrious brother is urging him on.

Frank's scrapbook reveals an astonishing number of reports of Paul's activities. In the air battles leading up to the capture of Pantelleria by the Allies, brother Paul's squadron shot down eleven Messerschmitts and four Macchi fighters and damaged two additional Messerschmitts without the loss of a single American pilot. Captain McArthur destroyed two Macchis and damaged another before he was forced to bail out. His was the only plane lost. As a result of the gallantry of two comrades who risked running out of fuel to stand by him until he was picked up, McArthur was rescued after parachuting into the Mediterranean. This action took place when the Americans intercepted ten Messerschmitts escorting a large seaplane just north of Pantelleria.

The seaplane bore the insignia of the Red Cross and was allowed to fly back unmolested to its base in Sicily, but every Messerschmitt was shot down. Three other planes were shot down by the Mosquitoes and two others were probably destroyed a little later when the Mosquito squadron formed part of the Allied umbrella over the Axis island fortress.

The McArthur brothers are natives of Reform, Ala. "Ace" was an enlisted man for a year before going to cadet school. He received his primary training at Goodfellow Field, basic at Hicks Field, and advanced training at Foster Field, Texas. He received his commission in April, 1942, and was stationed at Windsor Locks, Connecticut before going overseas.

Frank, following his graduation from high school, was employed by the U. S. Engineers at Mobile, Ala. He entered the Army in August of last year at Fort McPherson, and was shortly afterward transferred to Fort Benning and assigned to the Military Police. He will soon leave for Fort Belvoir, Virginia where he will take a specialist course for three months. He confided that when he completes this course, he hopes to qualify for Air Cadet training and later follow in the footsteps of his brother.

Frank and his parents, Mr. and Hrs. H. D. McArthur will be able to see Capttain Paul soon, as he is expected to be back in the States this week

U. S. Might Impresses Brazilian Army Officers

Twenty-one Brazilian Army officers including two generals of the General Staff left Fort Benning Saturday afternoon after six days of inspection of The Infantry and Parachute Schools. And they left it with a vivid picture and clear concept of what this nation can do in the matter of building an army, once its production and training shifts into high gear.

Gen. Oswaldo Cardeiro de Faria, who was an artillery officer before he was assigned to the general staff of Brazil, summed up the impressions gained by the Brazilians on their tour of Army installations in this fashion:

"We didn't believe it possible that the United States could build an Army as big as it said it would do. We thought the production of 50,000 planes a year was just a wishful thought on the part of your President. But we know now that he knew what he was talking about. And we can see too, how it was possible to raise and train such a big army in so short a time.

LOT DONE, LITTLE TIME

"The training methods here at The Infantry Schools have to be seen to be appreciated. Everything that is said and done in the classes is so plausible that ordinary common sense is all that is needed to apply effectively those things that are taught. Another element—the time element — is taken care of effectively. I've never seen so much taught in such little time. I presume too, that it has been learned. During the short time we have been here, I'm sure we have learned many valuable things.

"I can't say too much in appreciation of the opportunity given us to go behind the scenes of American Army training." His comment was echoed by Gen. Canrobert Pereira da Costa, another former artillery officer.

The tour of the Brazilians was a rapid one which was concluded this morning with a visit at pioneer and demolition demonstration at Ochilee. On some of the problems, they were accompanied by Maj. Gen. Charles H. Bonesteel, commandant of The Infantry School and by Brig. Gen. George H. Weems, assistant commandant. Col. Leonard R. Nachman, chief of the General Section and Lt. Alonzo Moore with four enlisted men who are accompanying the Brazilians, served as interpreters.

PARTY LISTED

Besides Generals de Faria and da Costa, the Brazilian party included:

167 Academics Win New Motor Vehicle Award

The Army's new Motor Vehicle Award—rated in a class with badges awarded for qualification in arms—was presented to 167 Academics recently at a special assembly in Building E 1 of the Infantry School Automotive Section.

Col. Leo A. Bessette, Chief of Section, made the awards, assisted by Maj. Marvin W. Jared, Academic Regiment executive officer.

The presentation of these badges,—the colonel indicated in his open address—means that the army places a "high score in automotive maintenance in the same class as a high score with the rifle."

"Only a real mechanic is entitled to wear this badge," the colonel emphasized, pointing out that "the word mechanic is abused. A lot of men who call themselves mechanics cannot perform even the simplest mechanical operations." The soldier awarded the mechanic's badge, however, combines "intelligence with experience."

The colonel concluded his remarks with the observation that he expected "every other assistant instructor eventually to get badges." More than 200 Academic Regiment men from D and H Companies need only time in their present assignments to qualify for the award.

Parachute School Advances Enlisted Men To Higher Grades

Promotions announced by the Parachute School at Fort Benning include the following in the Headquarters and Service Company: Pfc. James R. Clemens to corporal; Privates Robert Donald and William E. Gilbert to technicians fifth grade; Cpl. Charles B. Fisher to technician fourth grade; and Pvt. Donald F. Reynolds to corporal.

those used in the air-ground demonstration. The latter, appearing realistic enough from a distance, are constructed of logs.

Then there are the target racks which have to be kept in working condition. Those that are worked by steel cables on a windlass are a problem in themselves. Steel cables aren't obtainable by the simple procedure of requesting same from the Ordnance. To that end, constant supervision and care of the cables must be maintained in order to preserve them.

THE SAFETY ELEMENT

The safety element of the range officer's job, and those of his assistants, is divided into two sections. One involves the coordination of the use of the ranges with the various units assigned to them. The other is concerned with the danger that remains on the ranges after firing—duds.

During the past year, range officers have destroyed over 600 duds and employed some 2,200 sticks of dynamite to do so. Duds aren't removed by hand; they're blown up. During a recent trip over the various ranges in connection with this story, Colonel Minichiello and Lieutenant William C. Cherry discovered an unexplained 105 mm shell that was fired during a demonstration near Schley pond. During that same demonstration, fire control officers reported 16 duds, some of them dropped by planes which took part in the demonstration.

Presbyterian Minister Visits Fort Benning

The Rev. Mr. Allen M. Frew, of Ardmore, Pa., conferred this week with Brig. Gen. George H. Weems, assistant commandant of The Infantry School, on the subject of the work of the Church and Camps Activities of the Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Frew recently concluded a month tour of duty at the Presbyterian Service Center in Columbus, where he assisted the church in its program for servicemen at Fort Benning.

Under the program of the Presbyterian Church and activities, parishes all over the country release and pay the expenses of their pastor for a one month tour at a Service Center located near a military encampment. Dr. Frew has been here through the month of November.

Col. Duffner Boasts Colorful Army Career

The Student Company Commander of the Advance Officer's Course, Col., Carl F. Duffner, of the 4th company, 1st STR, is newcomer to the Infantry School.

Col. Duffner has twenty-six years of service in the Army, rounding out a brilliant military career.

After attending two years of Engineers College, he enlisted in the Army in 1917 in the Corps of Engineers. Duffner went overseas with the engineers as a private in the same year and after several months in France he was promoted to 1st Sgt. While serving in France he along with 125 other men took several examinations for appointment to West Point, and was one of the seven that were chosen.

Col. Duffner entered West Point in 1918. During his course there he was a Cadet Captain. He was graduated in 1921. Upon graduating from West Point, he came to Fort Benning to attend an Officers' Basic Course.

Col. Duffner's next tour of foreign service came in 1923 in the Canal Zone, returning to the states in 1928. Until 1932 he was Federal instructor of the 118th infantry National Guard in South Carolina.

From 1932 until 1936, Col. Duffner was with the 29th Infantry here at Fort Benning and was the first commissioned Professor of Military Science and Tactics in Columbus, Ga., High Schools, in addition to his other duties. He again returned to foreign service in 1936 to the Canal Zone until 1938.

In 1941 Col. Duffner built the rifle ranges and the training aids in Camp Wheeler, and in 1942 those at Fort McClellan. In June 1942 the Colonel went overseas as deputy G3 on the General Staff of Service of Supply in England and was Assistant Commandant of the American School Center there, which he helped establish.

POINT-MAKER DIBLASI
. . . Leading Saber Scorer

Sam DiBlasi Paced Saber Scoring With 62 Points

Sam DiBlasi, formerly of Washington & Lee, whose athletic reputation was founded chiefly on his baseball ability, turned out to be the leading scorer this past season on the Infantry School's 300th Infantry Sabers' football team.

DiBlasi rambled for 10 touchdowns in eight games and booted two extra points for a total of 62 points.

In all the Sabers tallied 251 points on 41 touchdowns and 23 extra points. Fourteen of the extra points, incidentally, were kicked from placement by Guard Joe Routt.

Opponents registered 88 points against the Sabers, Georgia Tech and the 176th Spirits accounting for 54 of them in two games.

Following is the breakdown in scoring:

Local Elevens Place 15 Men On Honor Roll

Poschner, Allen Routt, McKewen Are On Varsity

Crack gridmen from the Infantry School's three major elevens did more than their share in upholding the Army colors on the 1943 All-Southeastern Service team selected by the Associated Press.

George Poschner (176th), Ermal Allen (300th), Joe Routt (300th) and Jack McKewen (124th) gained places on the first team and were the only soldiers named along with seven Navy players.

In all, the Benning elevens captured 15 places on the 33-man squad chosen by coaches and sportswriters in six southeastern states. The 176th Spirits, TIS champs, placed seven men while the 300th Sabers had five gridders picked. The 124th captured the other three nominations.

There was gridiron talent to burn this season in southeastern service camps—and the biggest bonfire of all could have been contributed by navy, marine and coast guard players.

The navy and its adjunct service units placed seven out of a possible 11 men on the 1943 Associated Press Southeastern all-service football team, and they could have supplied talent for the other four positions if called upon to do so.

Three men were contributed to the all-star eleven by the Georgia Navy Pre-Flight School; two by the Jacksonville and one by the Memphis Naval Air Technical Training centers, and still another by the Charleston, S. C., Coast Guard station. Fort Benning's 300th Infantry placed two, and Fort Benning's 176th and 124th Infantry units one each.

Here's how the Associated Press team would line up, were it possible to bring its members together:

Center: Brad Ecklund, Jacksonville N. A. T. T. C., previously University of Oregon.

Backs: Pat Harder, Georgia Navy, and 1942 third-string All-America at Wisconsin; Ermal Allen, 300th Infantry, former star for the University of Kentucky; Duke Iverson, Jacksonville N. A. T. T. C., formerly of Oregon; and Frank Filchock, Memphis Navy, who previously starred for Indiana and the pro football Washington Redskins.

176th Battles to 1-1 Tie With Navy in Soccer Tilt

In the final game of the season, the 176th Infantry soccer team played the eleven from the U. S. Navy Pre-Flight school at Athens, Ga., to a 1 to 1 draw in Doughboy Stadium on Saturday night under the lights. It was the second meeting of the clubs, the first affair resulting in a 3 to 2 win for the Spirits from the Infantry School.

In the first half, both teams threatened several times, only to have the backfields repulse the attacks. For the home club, Frankie Schultz, Andy Gimak and Dom Diaco played fine defensive ball.

At the opening of the second forty-five minute period, the Navy booters began to roll and Cadet Crompler shot one past Goalie Orlando Cesca for the initial tally of the evening's play.

With but six minutes of playing time remaining in the fray, the Spirits moved toward the Athens club's goal and received a break on a corner kick. Schultz booted the sphere from the side of the field where Limy Hallaway, Spirit forward, made the goal from seven yards out.

Although both teams threatened, it was impossible for either club to register and the setto remained a stalemate.

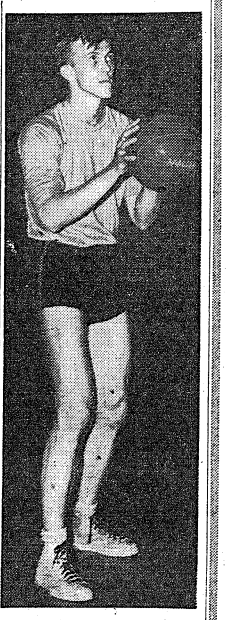
Ex-Penn State Star Will Be Mainstay of TPS Five

Van Nieda Belies Appearance With Form On Court

When the Parachute School quintet hits the hardwood this winter in the Main Post league, one of its mainstays will be a slender, gangling youth. From first appearances he looks like anything but a basketball player. It is this reporter's feeling however, that once the games get under way, the first appearance's opinion will vanish into thin, thin, air.

Pvt. Van Nieda, a qualified chutist now attending the advanced communications course of the Infantry School, has a brilliant basketball record behind him, and, we feel, before him.

He first played basketball with his high school in Ephrata, Pa. Leaving his high school Van Nieda enrolled at Penn State, where as a freshman he starred on an unbeaten first year quintet.



In his sophomore year Van Nieda went to the varsity where he became a regular. In 1941 he traveled to Madison Square Garden where he and his team mates took on Howard Cann's powerful NYU five.

Sidelight to the game is the fact that Sgt. Youngerman was sitting on the NYU sidelines at that game, watching this slim blonde speedster pound the boards for the Penn State hoopsters and little realizing that he would be playing on the same team with him in the not so distant future.

In his junior year Van Nieda kept the basketball fires of Penn State on the plane necessary in the fast Eastern league. In that year Penn State met and defeated the EICAA champions, Georgetown. Also defeated by the Nittany basketeers that season was a strong Pre-Flight team from Durham, N. C. The end of the '42 season saw the end of the basketball wars for Van Nieda as far as Penn State was concerned.

Coming into the Army shortly after, Van Nieda came to the Parachute School after finishing his basic training. And answering the call of Lt. David Wearley, athletic officer of the Parachute School, for the basketball team, Van Nieda returned to the hardwood.

The Parachute School team needing work on its team play, makes up for this discrepancy in board - pounding aggressiveness. Using last season as a criteria and knowing that this year's team shapes up better in the scoring department than did the '42 quintet there is every reason to expect them to be battling for that top slot.

Spirit Quintet Faces Nehi Foe In Gym Friday

176th Tops Lawson Tossers By 54-41 In Practice Tilt

Fresh from two wins in practice games, Coach Kirk Gebert's hoopsters will meet the Nehi quintet in the Post Gym Friday night in another warmup setto. The game will get under way at 9 o'clock.

Last week, the Lawson Field Flyers and Spirits met with the Spirits capturing a 54 to 41 decision. The game started off rather slowly, but the Red and Gray soon got the range, running up the score.

Sparky Suchara and Coach Gebert led the pointmakers for the Spirits with a dozen points apiece, while Jim Weir and Roy Stout hit the cords for ten points apiece and Joe Novocal garnered eight marks.

For the Flyers, Joe Metcalfe, a member of last year's Fort Benning League All-Star team was high man with 14 tallies.

"At first, we appeared ragged," stated the 176th mentor, "but the scoring shows there is power in the lineup. Our fast break is our chief asset and we hope to polish the defense prior to the opening of the Infantry School League.

"Now that football is over, several more men are joining the squad. Leo Mogus, who stands 6'3" worked out this week and will be a starter against the Flyers."

On Friday night, the cagers will face Columbus' Nehi Bottlers in the Post Gym at 9 o'clock in another practice affair. The first Infantry School League game will be on December 16 when the Spirits face the 300th Sabers.

Saber Gridmen Trounce 10th Armored Foe, 61-0

BY SGT. FORREST KYLE
300th Infantry PRO.

Polishing off their first football season with a point-a-minute offensive display, the 300th Sabers of The Infantry School shellacked the 10th Armored Tankers of Camp Gordon, Ga., 61 to 0, Thanksgiving afternoon before a sparse crowd of 2,500 at Legion Field, Birmingham, Ala.

The one-sided triumph gave the Sabers a record of five victories and three defeats for the season.

The Sabers had far too many gridiron weapons for the Tankers and used them all without letup. It was so one-sided the Tankers ended up with a minus three on net yards rushing and minus 35 on net yards passing. Coach Bob Friedlund's machine, on the other hand, gained 353 yards along the ground, 176 through the air and piled up a 16-4 advantage in first downs.

Four touchdowns poured over the Tanker goal line in the first period, another in the second and two each in the last two stanzas.

ALLEN SCORES EASILY

The game was only two minutes old when Ermal Allen, ex-Kentucky star, scooted 13 yards around right for a touchdown. Another touchdown followed quickly, Allen passing to Birmingham's own Bill Meek, for 36 yards overall. Meek gathered in another pass for the third touchdown and Sam DiBlasi shot through the center of the line and galloped 48 yards for the fourth.

Roger McCommons, late of Presbyterian, followed a brigade of interference for 57 yards and the only Saber second quarter tally.

Johnny Simcox conducted the Sabers to their first touchdown in the third quarter, ending up a 70-yard drive by skipping over from nine yards out. A razzledazzle forward-lateral pass play added another counter soon after. Simcox flipped a lateral to Paul Davis, who passed 27 yards to Jim Saub, who sped the remaining 30 yards for the score.

PASS INTERCEPTION

Lanky John Gilmore intercepted a Tanker pass and rambled 47 yards early in the fourth quarter before being grounded on the Tanker 13. Willard Wirht, faking a pass, ripped through the line for the tally. Wirht, Tony Encher and Henry Weller worked the ball to the Tanker six-yard line later in the final period, after Saub had intercepted a pass on the 19, and Saub plowed over.

Big Joe Routt booted extra after each of the first quarter touchdowns and the other three were added by DiBlasi, Parnell Curry and Frank Warpeha.

Rockets Beat Florida N. & I. Score 20-12

By SGT. HARRY M. SMYLES
Truck Regiment PR Office

The Florida Normal "Lions" and the Infantry School's Truck Regiment "Rockets" waged a veritable "Battle of Bunker Hill" Saturday afternoon, November 27 at St. Augustine where the "Rockets" defeated Florida Normal and Industrial Institute football stadium, defeating the Lions 20 to 12 in their annual Homecoming game.

The game was played under a warm Florida sun and the pre-game parade, the half-time demonstration put on by the Institute's Drill team and Corp of Drum Majorettes, and the final crowning of Miss Eugenia Belle of Miami as "Miss F.N.I.I." was very colorful amid the picturesque palms and parmettoes.

Soon after the opening kick-off the Rockets stormed to the Lion goal when their speedy quarterback, Bobby Lawson crashed over left-tackle from the 35 yard line and raced to the 5. The scrappy Florida team, however, held on the two yard line and the Rockets failed to score. Then it was Jimmy Johnson, Florida right-half attempting to pass from behind his own goal who was nailed for a safety and before the game was three minutes old, the Benning team led 2 to 0.

PASSES CLICK

The combination Coulter to Jones, Rocket right-half and left end respectively, began to click and a pass good for 20 yards brought the Rockets again into Lion territory. Lawson faked a quick kick, turned and ran around left end 21 yards to the 4 yard stripe and again the doughty Lions held on downs. As he did time and again Jimmy Johnson then passed from behind his own goal line, this time completing to Lincoln Walker, Lion left end. The pass was good for 20 yards. Cecil Coulter, Rocket pass-master, on the very next play intercepted a long pass intended for Walker again on the Lion 23 yard marker. Coulter then finished the job by running off left-tackle through a beautiful hole into the end zone for the first touchdown of the game. Lawson's attempt at conversion was blocked and at the half-time whistle the Rockets led by a score of 8 to 0.

The third period saw the balmy air filled with passes from both sides. The one that accounted for the most yardage in that period was a flipper from Lawson to Howard Huett, Rocket left-end, good for 22 yards. Captain Clarence "Pe" Jones intercepted two of the Lion's passes in this period setting up what seemed to be another Rocket touchdown when Wilson on a double-reverse, beautifully executed seemingly scored. However ,the officials ruled the ball back for an offside penalty against the Benning team.

Early in the fourth quarter from the Lion 34 yard line Lawson flipped another 20 yard pass to Chester Jones. Then Lawson hipped his way over center for the touchdown making the score 14 to 0 in favor of the Truck Regiment team.

SEE-SAW BATTLE

After the Lions had so quickly changed the score to 14 to 6, Coulter passed 10 yards to Chester Jones putting the ball on the 8 yard line and Lawson passed to Wilson who stepped into the end zone making the score 20 to 6.

With only a minute to play, Lonnie Donaldson, fleet left-half who hails from Jacksonville took a short pass from Johnson on the Lion 35 and hightailed it for the Rocket goal via the sidelines, outdistancing the entire Rocket eleven going over for the touchdown making the score 20 to 12 at the final whistle.

This coming Friday evening, December 3rd under the lights at Memorial Stadium in Columbus, Georgia, the Rockets will play a benefit game with Tuskegee Institute's "Golden Tigers". The pageantry and the records of these two teams promise to make it one of the most colorful of the season.

TICKET SALE

Special soldier admission tickets for Friday night's grid battle in Columbus between the Truck Regiment Rockets and Tuskegee Institute are now on sale in the F.B.A.A. offices, bowling alley building on the main post. They are priced at 35 cents each.

Former Spirit Officer Wins Commendation

A former member of the 176th Infantry of The Infantry School is among the officers and men at the United States Army Headquarters in the South Pacific who have received commendations for outstanding service.

He is Lt. Col. William B. Enbank, Corps of Engineers, who was commended for outstanding conduct on New Georgia, Solomon Islands, from July 23 to August 7. As engineer officer of an infantry division, he was responsible for the construction and maintenance of new roads behind the advancing infantry.

"The roads were built with such energy, efficiency and indifference to personal danger that all front line troops were supplied with necessary supplies during combat," the commendation reads. "Roads were maintained with 200 yards of the advancing infantry at nearly all times."

On July 31 it was necessary to employ a unit of Colonel Eubank's engineer battalion in offensive combat. The unit attacked with such vigor that the enemy was driven from the position and a great number of casualties were inflicted upon him.

CAPTAIN MILLER

Lieutenant Harold C. Miller, of Riverside, Ill., has been promoted to captain. Intelligence officer of the 328th Infantry, 26th Division at Camp Campbell, Ky., he is now attached to the 6th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, to attend the Officers Advanced Course at The Infantry School.

Ex-Mormon Elder In Chute School Soldiers, Preaches

It is an uncommon occurrence to find a preacher among the enlisted men of the army. Occasionally, however, such a man does appear.

In civilian life T-5 Clyde Robinson of the Parachute School was an ordained elder in the church of Jesus Christ Latter Day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church. Today, three thousand miles from his native San Francisco, T-5 Robinson is still very much a church-going man. In Columbus, where there is a local branch of the Mormon Church, members often listen to sermons given by a soldier. Since it is the creed of the Mormons to give extemporaneous sermons, and since Corporal Robinson is an apt speaker, he preaches in Columbus quite regularly.

Back in San Francisco Robinson was by trade a blacksmith. He plied this trade for nine years, during which time he worked for the Southern Pacific Railroad and the U. S. Navy yard. In addition to his religious work he is an enthusiastic amateur racer, a hobby which he hopes to pursue again in the future.

At present the Corporal is the guiding genius of the tire inspection and maintenance section of the Parachute School Motor Pool. Under his watchful eyes pass the tires of all the pool vehicles.

When the war is ended, Robinson intends to return to the farm in California and his blacksmith forge. For the present, however, it appears that he will stick to tire maintenance during the week and preaching on Sundays.

Saber Battalion In Garrison After Bivouac

After living a rugged, but soldierly life in the woods for the past two weeks, the bivouacing 1st Battalion of the 300th Infantry of The Infantry School Troop Brigade returned to garrison with a clearer picture of how they will be expected to perform under field conditions.

The companies operating in the field were "B," "D," and part of Headquarters Company. They utilized the Clear Creek area for their training problems, after hiking 14 miles out to the location.

The bivouac is providing training for all units within the battalion, even to the communication platoon, although most of them remained in the regimental area because of troop requirements. They are nevertheless operating a radio net put to the field every two hours during the day.

The Medics are working out by having their stretcher bearers go up to the "front," load their stretchers with 150 to 200 pounds of rocks, and work their way back to the Battalion Aid station tactically, as if the enemy were operating in the immediate area.

Even the Battalion drivers making their way on foot, acting as "enemy detail." After the enemy was spotted by the intelligence scouts, Co. D, the heavy weapons company, deployed in the area and "wiped the enemy out."

Company "B" engaged in an approach march that lasted throughout the night, while the and Ammunition and Pioneer Platoon busied itself in cinstructing tank traps and road blocks as well as small bridges.

As the company unit training was completed at the end of last week, the battalion problems got under way against a mythical enemy. Everything was being carried on under tactical conditions, including blackout precautions such as no smoking, no lights and no fires.

11th Company, 1st STR, Produces Crack Marksmen

The Officers' Basic Class in Captain Walter E. Burr's 11th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, firing the Garand for record, finished up with 42 experts, 84 sharpshooters, 32 marksmen, and only seven "bolos", a showing on which the M1 Committee commented very favorably.

First Lieutenant Bennie A. Anderson, of Grand Forks, N. D., was high man wtih a score of 194 out of a possible 210.

T-Sgt. Howard Elected CO By His Buddies

Organizing for their three-month Enlisted Communication Course at The Infantry School, 170 radio students in the 1st Student Training Regimen's 23rd Company—men from Infantry, tank, parachute, ski-troop, and coast defense units from all over the country—chose Technical Sergeant Croff W. Howard, a Regular from Macon, Georgia, as student company commander.

ASTP Officer Is All-America Track Champ

Speaking of impressive athletic records, take a gander at this of Captain George Arnold, C. O. of the 15th Company, 6th ASTP Regiment. He's a track man of Olympic calibre.

As a freshman at Ohio State University, he was one of the outstanding quarter milers in the Big Ten and an alternate with Eastman and Carr in the 1933 Olympics. In 1933-34, he was a member of the national collegiate track team and took part in the Big Ten indoor championship races.

Other events in which Captain Arnold made track history are as follows: 1935, first place in Sugar Bowl meet at New Orleans; winner four years in a row at the Cotton Carnival in the quarter mile; a member of the All-American track team for four years, 1935-38; member of the U. S. team visiting Canada and Mexico the year of his graduation; national cross country champion 6 years as a member of the Melrose cross country team in the six mile run; finished seventy-fourth out of 458 runners in the 26 mile Boston Marathon in 1937; Pan-American races at Dallas, Texas, in 1936; 500 meter K.C. meet in Brooklyn, N. Y., 1935; National A.A.U. champion in the 440 yard race at Princeton in 1936; metropolitan champion in the 440-yard hurdle and 440-yard dash in 1938; won quarter mile in 47.5 seconds from Denny Shore, British empire champion from South Africa at Princeton invitation meet in 1937; ran for Melrose A.A., N. Y. C.

Captain Arnold still holds the state of Ohio quarter mile record of 47.5 seconds set in 1936.

One event in which Captain Arnold proved the sportsman that he is was the half-mile match race with Glenn Cunningham in Cleveland in 1935. Four yards from the finish line, Cunningham fell and Arnold stumbled. He went back and helped Cunningham up only to be beaten by him.

Headquarters Company Captures Academic Regiment Court Crown

By SGT. WALTER MILLER
Academic Regiment

Headquarters Company won the Academic Regiment basketball crown for the second consecutive year last Monday night, by vanquishing H Company 23-17 for Headquarters' sixteenth straight victory.

Johnny Russo was the outstanding star of the night in the pre-season tournament's last scheduled game which, if won by Harpe's "H" five, would have precipitated a three-way tie for the regimental honors.

Topkick Bill Kelly sank the first field goal of the night for Headquarters, with topkick Harpe following suit for the losers. Johnny (Meatball) Russo then unleashed a furious attack, sinking four goals to outpoint the combined work of DeStefano, McCrary and Harpe, the first quarter ending 10-8 in favor of Headquarters.

BATTLE OF WITS

The second session was a battle of wits with both sides playing tight defense. The greater height of the H Company men threw up a wall about the basket, which only Russo could pierce for a field goal. When Harpe matched this for H, Ricks sank a foul shot to give Headquarters top-score in the second quarter and the half, which ended 13-10.

In the third period H Company played sustained professional ball. Harpe led off with two-points flung with one hand from almost mid-court, but Zientara of Headquarters sank a foul to hold a weakening lead. Harpe countered with another foul shot to end the third period indecisively at 14-13.

BRIEF LEAD

Sullivan put H in the lead in the opening minute of the final quarter, but only for the bare moment that it took Connolly to sink his first for Headquarters. It was give and take now as Miller tied the score on a foul, Ricks regaining the lead for the winners, 18-16. Harpe threatened to upset the balance just once more, when he sank another foul shot, but it was H Company's last tally. Connolly, Ricks and Russo administered the coup de grace, with Headquarters winning its toughest game of the year, 22-17, in the last few minutes of play.

H team fired at the backboard almost constantly, while Headquarters made fewer misses. McCrary, playing his first game for H, was definitely off form, locating the hoop only once in repeated tries. Zientara, as usual, was the sparkplug of Headquarters' defense.

The pre-season tournament thus ended with almost 100 Academics having strutted their stuff in a spirited six weeks' warm-up for the Infantry School hoop league. By now Coach Ricks has a pretty definite idea of what the Prof line-up is going to look like.

Spirits Upset by Miami In Season Finale, 20-7

It couldn't happen to the Spirits—yet it did.

Capt. Bud Pollock's Infantry School champions are not looking for sympathy for their 21 to 7 defeat at the hands of the University of Miami eleven in Miami last Friday night. That the 176th Infantry gridders were beaten by two touchdowns was due to the fact that Miami scored all three of its touchdowns by playing heads up football. That, in effect, indicates the Spirits had some lapses.

The game was only a few minutes old, when the home team pulled a fast one that gained 53 yards, thereby setting up their initial tally. After the game, Bob McBride had a bit to say about the play. "It was perfectly legitimate," stated the Spirit guard, "and the play is as old as the hills. Minnesota is famous for it and almost every high school coach teaches it. You just need a smart signal caller to know when to use it—sometimes it works and it surely caught us napping. I saw through it right after they lined up, but it was too late then."

Four minutes after the start of the second quarter, the Miami line broke through the rugged Spirit wall to block one of Waterfield's punts, a rare occasion indeed. From here, the Hurricane roared to their second pointed and in the third canto, made good on a pass interception to put the game on ice.

All was not gloom on the Spirit side and spectacular playing kept the crowd of 11,164 on the edge of their seats. Outstanding for the 176th was the fine playing of Slick Rogers, whose pass snagging and line plunging kept the visitors in the game. After the game, several newspapermen mentioned Rogers as the outstanding back on the field. Late in the final period, the former Texas Aggie star, on a line play, literally carried three Miami players a distance of six yards before they finally halted his driving frame.

Both teams were hitting with unusual power and in spots, the fray became quite heated. In the third quarter, End George Poschner and Miami Tackle Morris Klein, a 201 pounder were banished from the game by the officials for roughing.

Sully Harris, plucky little tailback, deserves a world of credit for his play throughout the season, much of it with a shoulder injury. On Friday night, Harris had been tapped up prior to the game, through the courtesy of Joe Paluzzi's special sponge shoulder pads. Said Joe, "That's just about as close as any of me will get to playing the game and I'm glad my shoulder pads got into the game."

An interesting note on Bob Duffy, the ex-Georgetown terminal, came to light the other day. It seems that Bob's eyes are not too good and to aid his vision, he wears "contact lenses", which fit over the eyeball. He inserts them before the game and removes them with the help of a prepared vacuum.

For the record, here is the individual scoring record for the gridders for the season:

Holcombe Found Something He Couldn't Smoke

Cpl. James Holcombe, 2nd Company, 6th Regiment, is going to look twice before he leans over again to pick up a twig to clean his pipe.

Corporal Holcombe, out on bivouac with the 1st Battalion this week, reached out for a twig to clean his hod (that's supposed to be slang for pipe) when a four-foot blacksnake stuck his head out of the weeds and hissed at him.

To hear Holcombe tell the story . . . it was a terrific battle with the two-striper finally emerging as victor. Observers say, however, that the corporal had a healthy respect for the snake . . . going after it with a 10-foot pole and big rocks.

7th Armored Luckies Are In Field for Four Weeks

the situation is non-tactical nine movies and an equal number of travelling post exchanges cater to the men nightly.

Reading and card playing are popular pastimes afield too, but the number one diversion seems to be letter-writing which is done by everyone.

Working and living afield is not all a bed of Georgia pine needles though, for there are discomforts and inconveniences. When a simulated "battle" is in progress "no fires and no smoking" are [illegible] orders of the day. Then it's tough to do without cigarettes; to shave in icy water out of a steel helmet; and to eat cold "C" rations out of a can; but its these things among others which go to make real fighters of former soft-living civilians.

But toughening up is only a part of the picture. In addition to this Gen. Silvester and his men undergo "bombing and strafing" attacks from the sky with flour sacks as missiles and cital CPs (command posts) as objectives.

Here in dense woods valuable hand to hand combat lessons are learned as companies are pitted against one another.

As an example there is Friday's Commando raid in which Headquarters Division Trains Co. as a Commando group, attacked the division CP between 11 p. m. and 3 a. m. the next morning.

Under cover of darkness scores of rear echelon men attempted to take Division headquarters and the commanding general by surprise, but the general and his men were on the alert. Friday afternoon a part of the defense platoon foiled enemy reconnaissance work by removing strips of paper which had been laid and strung to aid the commandos in finding their objective at night.

Unknown to the enemy also was the fact that Division headquarters had carefully planted mines and booby traps overhead in trees in the expected direction of attack. Thus, when the Trains Co. Commandos attempted to sneak into the area the noise and flash from the explosives gave their position away. A double ring of stationary guards around the Headquarters then found little difficulty in capturing nearly all of the attackers with the exception of one or two who managed to get uncomfortably close to the general's tent.

When not engaged in such realistic battle training, enlisted men and officers carry on the work of the division just as they did in garrison with field offices set-up and the usual routine in effect.

Here in the field, laundry is picked up and delivered once a week; field kitchens serve hot meals three times daily; and business is "as usual."

On Thanksgiving Day a certain percentage of the men was granted 24-hour passes over the holiday, but those who remained in bivouac ate just as bountiful dinner as those who went to town. Except for the fact that they ate from mess kits, troops in the woods ate even more traditionally of the turkey, cranberry sauce, and pumpkin pie, for their dinner was served in surroundings similar to those of the Pilgrim fathers on that first Thanksgiving Day in the New World.

After their holiday dinner these men slept, read, washed clothes, or chopped wood, depending on how much they had "stuffed" themselves with food and drink.

Guests of the commanding general and escorted by the public relations officer, they expressed themselves as being quite impressed with armored equipment, firepower, and tactics as demonstrated by various units in the "Lucky 7th."

Speaking partly in Spanish and partly in English, they made their observations as they went along, clambering over and into tanks, armored cars, and other pieces of equipment with much enthusiasm.

To the enlisted men of the division who saw them, the Bolivians, provided an interesting topic of conversation with their smart uniforms and their interest in armored equipment. Only in the desert had the division been honored before by the military representatives of a "Good Neighbor" country to the south of us.

Visiting dignitaries, combat problems, holidays, paydays . . . regardless of the situation, the men and officers of the Seventh Armored division find life afield a little tougher but just as interesting as life in garrison.

USO-TA Advises Soldiers to Secure Rooms First Before Inviting Yule Guests to Columbus

BY JANET H. RASTALL
USO Travelers Aid

Are you expecting your parents, wife, sister or fiance to visit you for Christmas? Or do you think they might come down to "surprise" you?

Better stop a minute and thing about it, so that the surprise or visit is sure to be a success. Did you know that the guest houses at Fort Benning are already filled, by reservation, for Christmas, and that the hotels in Columbus have few vacancies left for the holiday season?

The USO Travelers Aid will list vacancies in some private homes in Columbus over the holidays, but last Christmas it was found that many of these rooms were inadequate. Sometimes it was necessary for as many as ten people to share the bath in one home. Many rooms, made available in response to pleas and appeals from the USO, have no adequate facilities for heating, and Christmas may be cold. Columbus families who customarily rent rooms often find their guest room occupied at Christmas by their own guests, or perhaps their own son or daughter in the service gets a furlough and come home. A few other families wish to have their homes to themselves for Christmas, as it has always been a family feast.

Last Christmas it was necessary for several army wives to remain in dormitories while their husbands returned to camp, because no private rooms were available, and others stayed up all night in hotel lobbies and bus and railroad stations for the same reason. It was particularly hard for children who came to spend Christmas with their fathers because often facilities in the single guest room in a home are not sufficient to care more more than a couple. One unfortunate mother had to move five times in the course of a single week because no home was able to accommodate her for more than a night or two.

Columbus homes were very generous last year, and probably will be again this year, but the USO Travelers Aid is already receiving requests daily for Christmas accommodations, so that again this year accomodations, so offered may not be enough. It is impossible to make reservations by mail or phone, because the USO Travelers Aid is only an agency for referral, and the person renting the room wants to know to whom she is renting. And so, if you wish to have guests over the holidays, visit the USO Travelers Aid at Tenth and Broad Streets early and often until you are able to secure accommodations, and tell the family at home to wait for the go ahead signal from you before they make final arrangements to come.

And one final suggestion. If your family is coming, and for some reason you are unable to let them know their Columbus address in advance, plan very carefully with them where you will leave a message in case you cannot meet them, so that you won't have to spend Christmas alone, although your family is already in town, just because they don't know how to get in touch with you.

1st STR Has Candidate For Burlington Liars Club

Missouri had its Mark Twain, Wisconsin prides its Paul Bunyan stories, but 2d Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, and Oklahoma must share honors in another typically American tall-story-teller, Captain LaVern Lee Hodges, student in the Advanced Class and native of Elk City, Oklahoma.

"Hodge," as he is affectionately known to the officers of his class, just bubbles over with stupendous tall-tales of the wonders of Oklahoma, which he tells unceasingly from the cold crack of dawn until 'lights out" time at the 2d Company's barracks. Complete with a long, soft drawl as typically Oklahoman as the Upatoi Creek is typically Fort Benning, Captain Hodges, spins his wondrous stories ("all based on absolute fact") with an ease that comes from long experience as a story-teller and an interjection of softly-spoken curse words that makes American slang take on new meaning.

"Hodge" fairly gleams with the narrator's satisfaction as he relates a humdinger about the cold days in Oklahoma, which, without a doubt, surpass even the chilliest days in the Arctic regions. Why, expostulates "Hodge," it gets so cold in Oklahoma that many's the time he's seen farmers milking their cows in the dead of winter and just twisting the freezing stream of milk as it comes from the cow around their arms like a stick of candy and then carrying it into the house like a stale pretzel.

TERRIFIC BREEZES

As for the Oklahoma breezes, why they're terrific. "Once," says "Hodge," "I pulled into a gasoline station during one of our lighter blows and there were three men, stretched out on the ground dead, and a fourth dying when I got there. From the lips of that dying man, I got this account: 'The four of us, we wuz trying to stretch a wagon sheet across the keyhole to keep the station from blowing away, but the corners of thet wagon sheet flappin' in the breeze just whipped mah buddies to death and has left me in mah most unfortunate condition'."—Anyway, so says "Hodge."

And in summer Oklahomans never dare go out on the plains without an asbestos suit. That's to keep 'em from being scalded to death in case of a shower. The rain's that hot!.

Favorite pastime of this Oklahoma Oracle as he makes the required tactical walks over Benning's hills and dales, is an unending search for walking sticks and staffs which he carves with dexterity. "Stick Hunting." Captain Hodges calls it, and by following his troop-leading procedure (map reconnaissance first followed by ground reconnaissance) he has classified most of Fort Benning for good and bad "stick-hunting." This, according to members of the Infantry School faculty who have been consulted, is something strictly new in the use of troop-leading procedure.

Among other typically American accomplishments at which "Hodge" is proficient are manipulation of the "galloping dominoes," card-playing, Oklahoma style, and doing well on his graded tests.

Over Half-Million Negroes Serving In Armed Forces

There were 582,861 Negro soldiers in the U. S. Army on Aug 31, 1943, according to a recent WD release, briefed in the current issue of "Yank." Of this number 153,900 were overseas. For reasons of security, the release explained, a complete breakdown into components and branches would not be fesible.

The following figures, however, were given: Negro GIs in Infantry, 57,323; Coast and Field Artillery, 58,328; Cavalry, 9,750; Engineers, 92,171; other arms and services, 360,903. The figures include Negro Wacs, warrant officers, nurses and 4,386 commissioned officers.

A recent Navy Department announcement reveals that there are 74,013 Negroes in the Navy, of which 7,100 are members of the Seabees.

One Wrong Letter Gums Up Works

The dit-happy boys (radio operators) of the 1st Battalion communications section reaped a whirlwind of grief for S-Sgt. Joe Sherkey, Operations Sergeant of the same battalion when they slightly confused a radio message from The Infantry School bivouac area the other night.

It seems that Lt. Sam DiBlasi on bivouac, was expecting a telegram to be delivered to the Fort Benning area. He requested by radio, that it be forwarded to the woods.

About midnight of the same night, Sgt. Sherkey rolled into the bivouac area hauling a very dusty 37-mm antitank gun. When Lt. DiBlasi refused to accept delivery of the gun and denied any knowledge of requesting it, Sgt Sherkey triumphantly flourished his copy of a received radio message. "If you have ATG for Lt. DiBlasi, send it out at once."

Next time, Sgt. Sherkey says he'll stay in the theater and let 'em get their own guns!

Editor's Note: TG is the abbreviation for "telegram"; ATG for "antitank gun."

Criticism is a form of jealousy—an effort to pull ourselves up by the other fellow's bootstraps.

An Army Wife Shops In Columbus

By Phyllis

Early Christmas shopping is recommended by post office officials and Columbus merchants alike. The time to do your shopping is now, and one of the places to do it is THE CITY PHARMACY, 14 13th Street, across from the Waverly. For in this most complete drug store you'll find all the better known brands of cosmetics for women and the best of shaving sundries for men. What could be nicer than powder in a warm, soft tone, with rouge and lipstick to match, and perhaps a bit of cologne or perfume to add the final touch of beauty. It sounds nice for you, or any of your dear friends, doesn't it? For men, military, or not, shaving cream, after-shave lotion and talcum powder, all smartly packaged in a variety of brands at The City Pharmacy. Another tiny, but treasured gift, might be cunning little jar filled with delicious preserves for your sweet-toothed friends. Compacts, cosmetics, ash trays, cigarette boxes, fine tobaccos and countless other interesting articles make The City Pharmacy shopping centre for all wise shoppers.

Whether you plan to be a real-life Santa Claus or not, you'll be intrigued with the colorful jewelry at the quality shop of KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, Inc. As a gift for yourself or others, a sparkling pair of clips, earrings or a gleaming rhinestone pin will do much to highlight a new costume or help perk up one you've had for some little time. Ideal for wear with rather tailored or sporty outfits are the necklaces and lapel pins of polished wood. Gaily colored and of ingenious design, these wooden pieces are most practical in price and durability. Glamour can be gained by the addition of a pair of glittering earrings set with bright colored jewels. To match many of the earrings you'll find intricately-designed rhinestone pins and clips. Simulated stones in all the favorite jewel tones of topaz, aquamarine, ruby, amethyst or emerald are beautifully made into clips, pins or necklaces certain to intrigue you or anyone to whom you give them as a gift.

SEARS ROEBUCK AND COMPANY has the perfect answer for those of you who shiver and shake when rising these chilly mornings. If you want to be both warm and attractively clothed, you'll hie yourself right down to Sears for a look-see at their lovely robes and housecoats are all the same small price; so small you'll be able to buy yourself a robe and one to keep a friend as warm and prettily garbed as you'll be in the morning.

Real linen handkerchiefs being hard to find, the J. A. KIRVEN COMPANY is justly proud of their selection of men's and women's fine linen handkerchiefs. These for men have hand-rolled edges and striking monograms, practical and perfect for any man. Others, made in Portugal, of swiss cotton material are hand-embroidered and should certainly please the men in your family. The colored handkerchiefs in this display for men are for the most part plaids or colored border styles. Feminine shoppers will revel in the hankies of linen, batiste and swiss materials. Prints, in every conceivable design and color are attractively made to harmonize with different costume changes. Especially lovely are the handkerchiefs trimmed with real rose-point lace or beautiful oppenzelle, as you prefer. Petit-point embroidery decorates many of the pastel hankies of linen or swiss materials. Outstanding in this display of pretty hankies are those of fine madeira embroidery to catch the eye of all lovers of really good handkerchiefs.

Christmas shopping can be fun only if your feet are comfortable and don't make you feel all tired out. Wearing sensible shoes for all the walking here and there involved in gift shopping is recommended by the MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY. Your feet will welcome the cushioned comfort of their footwear selection styled by Joyce. Many of these shoes have modified wedge soles and are most practical for not only shopping, but for golfing, hiking and other playtime activities. The Walkaway is an outstanding tie oford style in black or army russet elk leather. Best beau is available in black or brown suede or patent leather, as your tastes dictate. This is a bit dressier type shoe with a wedge sole and open-back and a tailored bow on the low vamp. Selecting a pair of these shoes by Joyce and really wearing them will save your dressy footwear and keep your feet correctly and comfortably shod throughout your active hours.

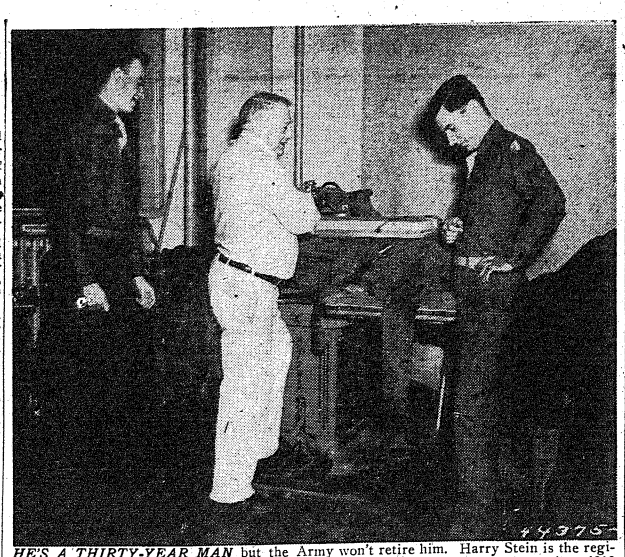
Tank Radio Men Are Among Army's 'Best'

Relatively obscure and unheard of because their work isn't as dashing and romantic as that of the "Sparks" (or radio operators) for whom they toil, 7th Armored Division radio maintenance men are, nonetheless, among the Army's best.

Theirs is the job of keeping hundreds of sets in top-notch working order to insure unbroken communication networks.

As many as 50 maintenance and repair jobs per day were completed during Louisiana maneuvers, while those beyond the radio operators' ken averaged about 150 per week during desert problems, despite swirling sand which invaded every carck and cranny of equipment.



Maj. Gen. Lindsey McDonald Silvester, division commander of the "Lucky 7th," has stressed time and again the fact that radio is a vital nerve center of the command, and that good maintenance is essential to a unit's success in battle.

In garrison, a carefully selected crew of men spend part of their time servicing GI sets and part of their time in special classes on radio theory and maintenance, to keep abreast of last-minute changes in design and construction. ALWAYS A "BREAK"

The majority of these skilled technicians were recruited from the ranks of civilian amateur or "ham" operators and servicemen, but an ambitious aspirant is also given a "bear."

If a soldier shows up well in aptitude tests he is given every opportunity to learn radio maintenance through 7th Armored division schools conducted by the 147th Armored Signal company.

Here, through a balanced program of classroom theory and actual experience, he may learn a trade in the Army which will laso be of value to him in post-war years. But first comes his value

HE'S A THIRTY-YEAR MAN but the Army won't retire him. Harry Stein is the regimental tailor for the Academic Regiment of The Infantry School and has been since 1913 when he 'signed up' with the Regiment, then a Detachment located at Fort Sill, Okla. He has no hash marks, no rank because he's a civilian. Harry has seen regular Army service but with the Russian Army in which he served four years during its war with Japan. (Official U. S. Army Photo—The Infantry School.)

SGT. JOSEPH J. VERGONA helps keep communication lines open in the "Lucky Seventh" Armored Division while the Division is on problems. He repairs sets in the 7th Division's radio maintenance shop, at all times whether in garrison or afield. (Official U. S. Army Photo-to 7th A.D.)

Overseas Training Will Go On to War's Very End

To prepare for and meet the ever-changing battle tactics and conditions, the training of American soldiers overseas is a continuing process and will be right up to the day of the unconditional surrender of the Axis, the War Department announces.

This training includes the battle-hardened veteran just out of the lines as well as the soldier just off a transport and assigned to a replacement depot. Naturally, it is not the same for the veteran as for the new arrival, but it has been designed to integrate and coordinate both to produce the team work essential to succeed in combat.

As a rule, large replacement training depots are set up in each theater. Here troops fresh from this country are given the final polish and become acquainted with the climatic and terrain conditions under which they will be called to go into action. Schools have been established overseas where the individual is given additional or post-graduate instruction in the particular specialty for which he was trained in the United States.

In reality, these are finishing schools. In the United States the soldier's instructions was largely in the fundamentals of his specialty, since it was not known at the time he started his training to which theater he would be sent. Consequently, his instruction had to be such as would meet the basic requirements for any or all theaters.

MORE TRAINING

However, on his arrival in the theater, he is given additional specialized training in his specialty. Necessarily, the time available for this type of training is determined by the tactical situation in the theater and the need for personnel with particular qualifications. All men are assigned to replacement depots upon arrival, and their period of training there continues until they are requisitioned to fill vacancies in units or installations. During this training period instruction is based on battle experience in that particular locality and on the tactics used there by the Allies as well as the enemy.

For example, a Signal Corps man is sent to a North African replacement depot. When he leaves the United States on a transport he has completed his basic military training and his training in Signal Corps procedures. He is entirely competent to send and receive all kinds of messages under all kinds of conditions except those of actual battle.

On arrival, he is first given a rigorous physical conditioning course. During the week or so on shipboard he has had little opportunity to exercise and has become soft and possibly put on some excess weight. Hikes serve the dual purpose of getting him into battle trim and accustoming him to the climate and terrain.

At the same time, he begins a refresher course in Signal Corps procedures, reviewing briefly what he had learned in the United States. He is given courses to familiarize him with the British terms and nomenclature used in their military communications.

The same procedure is followed with the infantrymen, the artilleryman and the score of other specialists who go to make up the modern army.

At length the soldier is ordered to join a unit. It may be a base section, a unit in reserve or a unit actually in battle. If the latter, he receives his baptism of fire and puts the theories he has learned in the long months of training to the ultimate test. Under such conditions he quickly becomes integrated and with the help of the veterans on either side of him learns the technique of teamwork.

INTEGRAL COG

Should he be assigned to a base section of a unit in reserve, he is given more instruction in the particular niche in the unit he is to fill. Here his teammates drill him in his duties until he is an integral cog in the smooth functioning machine. He soon realizes that the more smoothly the machine functions, the greater the chances of victory and his own survival.

Even the battle-hardened veteran is not done with training. New tactics and new techniques are being developed constantly and put into practice and he must be instructed in them. Time always is a vital factor in a combat zone and sometimes he will be given his instructions while under fire and at others, more leisurely, while his unit is in reserve. But still the training goes on.

For example, a field artillery battery may have a position at the front from which it has been firing constantly at the enemy lines without moving. The crews load and fire their guns with perfect coordination. There isn't a lost motion, a hitch or ar second's delay.

Eventually the battery is relieved and moves back into the more or less peace unity and security of the reserves. While the crew has become letter perfect in firing, it is rusty in the technique of moving quickly and going into action with the utmost speed. So it is trained and drilled in these essentials during the rest period.

Similarly an infantry company may have a station on a static front which calls for little or no movement. When it is relieved, it must be given hiking practice so that its members again are in shape for what the future holds. Conversely, a company which has been advancing rapidly may require training in the art of static warfare.

And so the training program goes forward in the four quarters of the globe and will continue until the day of ultimate victory.

have been allowed to share in the growth of this school of modern battle technique, and to serve with officers whom I feel are among the finest I've ever been with in my long years in the Army," the sergeant concluded.

Still busily occupied with his job as 1st sergeant, the genial 'top-kick' is well liked and respected by all who know him. From 1914 until last year Sgt. Yarbrough qualified as expert rifleman and pistol shot at least once each year.

1st STR Unit Has Ol'-Time Thanksgiving

But through the efforts of Fourth Battalion officers in the 1st Student Training Regiment, students attending Enlisted Motor and Communication courses at The Infantry School could forget for an hour that they were far from their kin and enjoyed Thanksgiving turkeys in an atmosphere as homelike as possible. Anyhow, at home you couldn't have Brian Aherne for a Thanksgiving Day visitor.

In the 19th Company, for instance, the mess hall was bright with holiday cheer. While records played old favorites, the men sat down at cloth-covered tables to take their family-style noon meal. The 19th is commanded by Captain Eugene C. Warden.

Members of the 20th Company, under command of Captain Dale K. Johnson, were each invited to bring a friend to the holiday fare, served in the evening. Some 40 guests, many of them ladies, enlivened the occasion.

Mothers, wives and sweethearts of a few fortunate students in Lt. Cary A. Kennedy's 23rd Company took Thanksgiving dinner with their loved ones. These womenfolk lavishly praised the wholesome food and quiet, friendly atmosphere of the dining room.

Enter Brian Aherne. Visiting Fort Benning that Thursday, he dropped in and complimented the 23rd's kitchen personnel on their skill in preparing so tempting a repast for simple foods.

Radio students in the 24th Company, commanded by Captain Charles E. Farmer, also observed a Thanksgiving attended by families of some of the company's officers and men.

'Round the Fourth Battalion, hard-working motor and communication aspirants had more than a little for which to be thankful.

Loyal Japanese Serve America

That the spirit of Americanism and the USA melting pot outweigh ties of race, color and creed has been proven by Private Roy Nishi, 16th Co., 6th Regt., ASTP.

Nishi, born in Harrah, Washington, is Japanese. He thought that he was just like any other American until December 7, 1941, but then the repercussions of the Pearl Harbor bombing also shook the life of Nishi. Though the evacuation of Japanese from the west coast started in the spring of '42, it was June before the Nishis were compelled to leave their home and friends.

They were first sent to an assembly center in Portland, Oregon. At these Assembly centers established in various cities on the west coast, the Japanese are classified, and then sent to appropriate camps throughout the country. The Nishis were sent to a camp in Wyoming. Here he was allowed to volunteer as a farm laborer and was sent to a farm in Oregon, where he worked and at the same time completed his high school education.

Immediately upon graduation he volunteered for service in the Army as his brothers had before him. Of the several Army camps and Nishi has been to he likes Fort Benning the best.

"The guys here are the swellest boys I've ever known," says Nichi.

When asked what the reaction to his nationality is he replied that most people don't know, that they guess Chinese—anything but Japanese. They forget that there are thousands of loyal Japs fighting for the United States Army.

Noted Woman War Scribe to Speak In Columbus Dec. 6

Miss Agnes Smedley, noted American war correspondent in the Far East and one of six Americans known to have been marked for assassination by the Japanese Secret Service, will lecture in the Columbus High School auditorium at 8 p. m. (CWT) Monday, December 6. The lecture, entitled "Toward Final Victory," is being given under the auspices of the Friedlaender Fund, and is free. Fort Bennnig personnel is invited to attend.

Miss Smedley was for 12 years a war correspondent and a volunteer in the Chinese Red Cross Medical Corps in the Chinese war zones. She knows intimately the horrors of war and the ruthlessness of our Japanese enemy, and her lecture will dwell upon her experiences in China and the lessons Americans may well learn from the Chinese.

She is the author of an autobiography "Daughter of Earth," published in 13 languages. Knopf will soon publish her most recent work "The Battle Hymn of China."

Veterans Will Get Technical Training

A program to give technical training to war veterans has been announced by the United States Office of Education.

Full and part-time courses averaging from eight to 16 weeks will be given at more than 200 colleges and at centers in more than 1,000 cities. Tuition is free.

The courses are designed to train veterans for jobs in war industries as draftsmen, radio technicians, inspectors, chemists, designers, and other technical work. Applicants must be high school graduates or possess equivalent training and experience. College training and even college degrees may be required for some of the more advanced courses.

Anyone interested may obtain further information by calling the Special Service Office at Fort Benning.

Nearly one-fourth of Australia's 840,000 working women are engaged in war work.

Musicians at the Italian Prisoner of War Camp at Fort Benning have formed an orchestra which gave its first performance at the post this week.

Led by a maestro who plays the piano while he directs, the orchestra includes 10 prisoners of war who were professional musicians in Italy before the war. The group is composed of three saxaphones, a set of drums, two violins, two guitars and a trumpet. Other pieces will be added later.

The orchestra was formed when a few of the musicians, shortly after their arrival at the camp in September, approached Lt. Roderick McEachen, chaplain, with a request to resume their playing. Impressed with the morale value of music, the chaplain enlisted the aid of Col. George M. Cheschier, commanding officer of the camp, and the band was formed.

For the past month the prisoners have practiced in their spare time and now devote six hours a day to rehearsals. Their selections range from light classics to Italian folk songs and American hit tunes of the day.

Colonel Chescheir has devised a schedule permitting the band to play three nights a week for the entertainment of the camp.

The director of the orchestra has played professionally for more than a decade. He is 23 and was a resident of Padua, Italy. His three and a half years in the Italian Army were spent in the Artist Corps, where he continued his music.

Lopez Orchestra Salutes Infantry School Thursday

Vincent Lopez, veteran orchestra leader, will salute The Infantry School this afternoon on his Mutual network program "Luncheon With Lopez," heard locally on WDAK, Columbus 1:30-2:00 p. m. EWT.

Each day the Lopez program is dedicated to a major service institution or unit.

Mr. Lopez has the distinction of being the first orchestra leader to speak over the radio and to broadcast with his band. That occasion was late in 1921 when radio station WJZ, New York, decided to get away from airing records of dance music and give the listeners the real thing. Lopez was playing at a New York night spot, and when asked to say a few words voiced the phrase that has come to be known as his vocal signature, "Hello everybody, Lopez speaking."

His musical theme and perhaps the selection with which his name is most closely associated is "Nola." Mr. Lopez is still among the finest pianists in the popular music world, and is famous as the sponsor and first employer of Rudy Vallee, Artie Shaw, the Dorsey brothers and Benny Goodman.

Puerto Rican Flyer Interred at Post

Funeral services for Second Lieutenant Osvaldo Mercado, 21, of San Juan, Puerto Rico, were held Sunday afternoon from the Catholic Chapel at Fort Benning. Chaplain William H. Hunt officiated, and interment followed in the post cemetery.

Lt. Mercado, who is the brother of Lt. Col. Luis Mercado now stationed at Fort Benning, was killed in a plane crash at Del Rio, Texas. He had served one year in the service as air cadet and officer at the time of his death. His body was escorted to Fort Benning by 1st Lt. Candelario Sanz of the Air Corps.

The military escort and firing squad for the funeral were supplied by The Infantry School Troops, and the 300th Infantry Band furnished the music.

CAPTAIN HALBROOK

Promotion to captain has come to Noah J. Halbrook an Armored Force officer since he was called to active duty in February, 1942. Captain Halbrook came from the 18th Armored Infantry Battalion, 16th Armored Division, (where he is a company commander), to attend the Officers Advanced Course of The Infantry School.

Woman's Club

By KATHERINE HAMMARGREN

A brilliant preview of the Christmas season, complete with tree, Christmas carols, and a roaring log fire, will be given by the Fort Benning Woman's Club at its next general meeting Monday, Dec. 6. The traditional Christmas tea, always regarded by wives of officers stationed at Fort Benning as one of the most delightful events, will be held in the Polo Hunt Club at 3:30 p. m. EWT.

Elaborate gifts may be missing under the Christmas tree this year, and even the Christmas tree may be a war-time substitute instead of the real thing. But army wives and mothers fortunate enough to have their families still with them are determined to make this Christmas a joyful one. Quarters will still be bright with Christmas decorations and the warm glow of the Christmas season.

In order to help solve the problem of Yuletide decorations, members of a Columbus garden club have graciously donated their services to demonstrate how Georgia's wealth of materials may be used to brighten army homes. They will prepare a Chritsmas mantel, a gaily ornamental tree, a centerpiece for a Christmas table made from seasonal fruits and leaves and an inexpensive string of lights, and will show how gifts can be wrapped attractively but with little expense. Garden club members will be present during the tea to answer any questions.

The Reception Center Choir of twenty-five trained voices will sing Christmas carols and spirituals during the tea. The perfectly blended voices of the choir are expected to add much to the afternoon's enjoyment.

Assisting Mrs. Harold E. Potter, club president, in completing arrangements for the meeting are Mrs. George H. Molony, hospitality chairman, and Mrs. Gilbert Parker, chairman of the house committee.

Non-Coms Do Dishes Turkey Day, Believe It or Not

Imbued—or perhaps saturated might better describe it—with the holiday spirit, Non-Coms of the 300th Infantry of the Infantry School went all out in their display of Good Samaritanism this week.

For one example, take 1st Sgt. H. S. Taylor, topkick of Co. A who volunteered to pull town patrol duty one night A St. Sgt. pulling town patrol is as unusual as a sergeant-major acting as Colonel's Orderly.

Furthermore, over the Thanksgiving holidays, six non-coms of Headquarters Company volunteered for the strictly private job of kitchen police. The G.I.'s grinned contentedly to see Cpl. Mann, S-Sgt. Pattison, Cpl. Lonce, Sgt. Forman, Sgt. Easterly and Cpl. Kramlich laboring over the pots and pans.

Star Vocalist In TIS Course

Bach Chorales and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony are a far cry from stringing wire across a shell - swept beach - head or through a Jap-infested jungle So vocalist Kenneth R. Webster, a resident of Princeton, N. J., has laid his music aside for the duration and is concentrating on his combat training as an Infantry officer.

Now member of an Officers' Communication Course in Captain Samuel Phillips' 13th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School, Lieutenant Webster has sung under such maestros as Arturo Toscanini, Bruno Walter, Leopold Stokowski and John Barbikoli. He was a member of the Westminster Choir, which toured Europe twice and is the only American choir ever to have visited Russia.

Webster joined the Infantry as a private in July 1942. He was chosen to attend Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning and was commissioned a 2nd lieutenant in August 1943.

Special Services Director Of Time Magazine Is Now 3d STR Candidate

Candidate Arthur Northwood, Jr., of the Fourth Company, Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School, held the position of Director of the Bureau of Special Services for Time, Life and Fortune magazines during the three years preceding his induction in April, and tells interesting anecdotes of the "news behind the news."

Northwood's duties included public relations and selective editorial promotion work, wherefore he had 48 reach key people—radio commentators, lecturers, professors, army and navy officers, etc. He helped them with advance copies of articles or enlarged maps, learning their reactions to Time's work, telling Time's story to them, smoothing ruffled feathers and explaining and vindicating.

When asked to give some "behind scenes" comments on Time, Northwood stated: "It's the only place I've ever been where things moved even faster than at the Infantry School. The articles are not written individually, for in Time's office, group journalism is really applied. Each article is revised over and over and is constantly improved by the members of the various departments before it goes to press."

TIMES STYLE

"Many people think that Time has a set determined style which must be followed throughout each issue, but any style of writing it may have is more accidental than planned. Perhaps the seeming standard of style results from Time's constant effort to present the most ideas to the most people in the least space. The slogan is 'curt, clear, complete'.

"Time became more and more exciting as it continued to add foreign staffs during the present war —in Cairo, Chungking and Buenos Aires, for example. An amusing incident happened about a year ago in connection with a feature article that Time was preparing on a high-ranking Japanese admiral. The article was written on the Nip's life, but the writers found that some rather glaring gaps needed to be filled in, nor did they know where to get the information. Finally they wired their Buenos Aires staff editor, telling him to get the dope from the Japanese Consulate in Argentine by some means. The foreign correspondent, realizing that the Japs would never give it to an American, arranged to have a neutral friend request the information from the consultae. Then the Japanese ambassadors said that they believed they could supply the information asked, but on thoughtful reflection added: But there is no need to get the information from us. Time magazine will have an article on the admiral coming out ina couple of weeks. You will be able to get all the information you need on him from it!' "

JUST LIKE OCS

Before taking over his work with Time, Northwood acted for two years as assistant on the Blue Network's "American's Town Meeting of the Air." In this period he held two fellowships from the Rockefeller Foundation, one for the study of group listening in this country and one for the study of English radio. In connection with the latter, he spent four months in London as a guest member of the Staff Training School of the British Broadcasting Corporation. "The work there was very similar to that in OCS—conference, lectures, demonstrations, etc.—with one all important difference—no GTs!"

The four months in London occurred between the Munich conference and the invasion of Poland. "England was a very exciting place in those days," says Northwood. "It was then that I saw my first blackout, in Manchester, I learned to love the English people."

When asked about the supposed traditional English coldness, reserve and lack of humor, Northwood ramarked:

"That type of Englishman—the monocled old gentleman that you see in movies—is very much in the minority. I found the people with whom I came in contact to be quite warm-hearted, easy to get along with, very hospitable, very humorous. There is an attractive graciousness and charm about the English way of life."

Candidate Northwood was graduated from Princeton in 1935 with a Phi Beta Kappa key and an American History major to his credit. During the following two years he was executive president of the National Student Federation of America, trade associationof college student governing bodies. During this last year as a civilian, Northwood was a Pfc. in the New York State Guard and entered the armed forces in April of this year.

Georgia 4-H club members this year concentrated on growing seven basic foods — beef, pork, peanuts, Irish and sweet potatoes, poultry, and eggs — all of which are easily marketed and transported.

528 Engineers Enjoy Turkey Day Musical

Something different in Thanksgiving dinners was served to the 528th Engineers company of The Infantry School Troops Brigade on Thanksgiving evening.

They had turkey, all right, and had it topped off with a show and dance at the Infantry School Rest Camp. The turkey itself was off the beaten path of roast turkey. Mess Sergeant James Mosely and his assistant barbecued the company's birds, and the Engineers and their geusts, members of Thee Infantry School's Main Post WAC Detachment found the culinary efforts a bit beyond the usual good G.I. touch.

Lt. Payne Thebaut arranged the program and Sgt. Gregory Flatt took over as master of ceremonies.

Sgt. Andre Richie and Pvt. A. A. Bell contributed a guitar duet; Pfc. Carl Buono sang and so did three of the WAC guests, Cpl. Dorothy Burri and Pvts. Geneva Thompson and Ruth Whitehead. Lieutenant and Mrs. Thebaut, the latter a talented singer and the former a guitarist, appeared in a duet.

Highlight of the evening was the performance of Lt. Haskell S. Schweidel, a student in the 1st Student Training Regiment who has been mystifying his fellow students with his bag of tricks and was finally persuaded to exhibit them for the Engineers.

Saber Brown Is 1st 300th Man Appointed to OCS

To Cpl. Benjamin W. Browne of the Cannon Company of the 300th infantry goes the distinction of being the first full fledged member of the 300th to make the grade to The Infantry School.

It's true that Cpl. Bruce R. Payne II of Headquarters Company left for O. C. S. in late August but it must also be remembered that he used the 300th only as a stopping off place on his way to the school. Cpl. Browne on the other hand has been with the 300th almost since its birth.

A resident of Cleveland, Ohio, Browne attended Lehigh University in Pennsylvania from which he was graduated, a qualified engineer in 1934. Various engineering assignments took him to most of the 48 states and eventually to the General Electric Plant in Lynn, Mass.

In 1942, Browne enlisted in the Army as a paratrooper, completed his training here at Benning, and was assigned to the 506th Parachute Infantry as a qualified jumper. An injury forced him out of the paratroops in early 1943 and he was transferred to Cannon Company of the 300th.

With his engineering background, the guns came easy to Browne. In his off moments this fall, he acted as manager of the 300th football team and supervised equipment.

FOOD FOR FIGHTERS

More than 1500 Four-H club members in Emanuel county grew food for fighters in 1943, according to County Agent Earl Varner and Home Demonstration Agent Edna Sue Stanford. Entering the garden contest were 702 Four-H club girls.

Real Irishman In Command of 1st STR Unit

With officers in its ranks from almost every corner of the globe where Uncle Sam's soldiers are stationed, 2nd Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, has as its student company commander an officer just back from a six-year tour of duty in the Panama Canal Zone, every bit as Irish as his name, Lt. Col. Leo William Henry Shaughnessey.

Equally as extensive as his name was the job Colonel Shaughnessey handled while in Panama. A Corps of Military Police officer, he served as Provost Marshal, Atlantic Side, Panama Canal Zone, his duty being to insure that order was maintained at one end of one of the most vital spots in the world, the link between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Not all of Shaughnessey's service has been with the Military Police, since upon graduation from West Point in 1934, he was assigned as an Infantry officer to the 18th Infantry of the First Division, then at Fort Wadsworth. Three years with that crack regular outfit that has made a brilliant record in the American and Tunisian campaigns found this 200 pound Irishman with a Company Commander assignment and orders to proceed to Panama, where he served until coming to The Infantry School as a student officer in an advanced course.

Native of Woburn, Mass., Colonel Shaughnessey received his appointment to the Military Academy from that state after he had completed three years at Boston College. At these two institutions, he secured a working knowledge of French and Spanish, the latter standing him in good stead during his Panamanian tour of duty.

F. B. P. A. Plans Art Exhibition

An exhibit of outstanding cartoons and photographs, published in Fort Benning newspapers during the past year, will soon tour the post under the sponsorship of the Fort Benning Press Association. The Academic Regiment MIRROR is in charge of arrangements.

Approximately twenty-five examples of the cameraman's and cartoonist's work from each paper, including the BAYONET and the regimentals, will be included in the display, which will start at Service Club Number One some time in December, appear next at the Officers' Club and then travel to Sand Hill and Harmony Church.

3rd STR OC Duo Has Soldier's Medal

Two officer candidates in the Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School are possessors of the Soldier's Medal for heroism, awarded them for courageous action displayed in distant theaters of war.

OC Lloyd J. Samuelson of the Sixth Company was decorated for his rescue of several comrades from a fire in the Aleutians while Candidate Harold E. Horn remained aboard a torpedoed transport in the Pacific to guide others to safety and saved the life of an officer to earn his hero's award.

Private Samuelson of Portland rescued two out of four of his comrades from an Aleutian hillside shack set on fire after it was buried by an avalanche of rock and snow, and Private Samuelson extricated himself, and digging back into the hut, by this time set ablaze by the stove, was able to carry out two comrades while extra ammunition stored inside exploded around him like Chinese firecrackers. The other two died in the wreckage."

The word "experience" was really an understatement. He had been in Alaska nearly eight months—after being drafted in Fort Lewis, Wash., in January 1942, and getting 13 weeks at Camp Roberts, Calif.—and was stationed at a lonely outpost 125 miles from Dutch Harbor. The day after Christmas last year a severe blizzard swept the solitary spot, cut off all communication the men had with their nearest buddies and provoked the avalanche which caused the accident.

Samuelson still remembers the explosions of gallon tomato cans in the fire, which, added to exploding cartridges, "made it sound as if a small war were going on."

IMPROVISE GARMENTS

The worst part, however, came after the accident itself and the initial excitement had worn off. All the warm clothes the survivors owned were buried in the wreckage and they had to improvise poncho-style suits by cutting neckholes in blankets and also wrap coal sacks around their legs to keep warm for 48 hours until they arrived at the hospital.

Samuelson recalls with a grin that he was nearly refused admittance to the hospital. He was helping to load the ambulance and the attendant, thinking Samuelson was in good shape, would not let him in the ambulance. The attendant did not know that Samuelson had three "birdseye" digits, which in Alaska means frozen fingers an dtoes, and that he also was suffering from shock.

"This shock was a strange psychological experience", Samuelson recalls. "You develop a mild form of amnesia that, with me, lasted for about three months. You tend to forget things and can only concentrate on one subject for about 30 seconds at a time. When you are reading you forget what is on the same page, or when someone is talking to you, you forget what they were saying. It wore off, though; at least until OCS."

Samuelson has won three tennis championships—one at Antioch College, Ohio—but his real hobby is painting portraits of his bunkmates. His cherished ambition, discreetly hidde nunder a bushel, is to paint a portrait of the company commander....

ON PRESIDENT COOLIDGE

When the Japs attacked the liner President Coolidge, serving as a troop transport early in the war, and sent her to the bottom, Candidate Horn was one of the few men who volunteered to remain aboard the sinking ship to guide others to safety.

Stationed in a lower passageway of the transport, Horn remained until the ship threatened to go under and then ran to the top deck. Leaping from the slide, Horn caught a life raft and completed his day of heroism by releasing an officer trapped under the raft, thus saving his life.

For his acts of outstanding bravery, Horn was decorated by Lieut. Gen. Millard F. Harmon, one of the commanders in the South Pacific.

Back from 11 months' service in the Pacific combat zone, OC Horn can cite instances of Japanese trickery from first-hand observation.

"One of the favorite Nip tricks", he says, "is to secrete a sniper, armed with two rifles, in a palm tree. When the Jap is discovered and fired upon, he drops one rifle to make opponents believe he has been hit. Then he uses the other rifle to fire on unwary patrols."

When the Japs land anywhere they usually intend to stay, said Horn, pointing out each soldier brings all his personal belongings.

Although they wage war a full 24 hours a day and often fight to the last man, the Japs will avoid close contact whenever possible, Horn maintains.

"They're afraid of our steel", he says.

513th Parachute Infantry Moves To Fort Bragg

The 513th Parachute Infantry, which was activated at Fort Benning January 11, 1943, has moved from the Alabama Training area at Fort Benning to the 13th Divisional Headquarters at Fort Bragg, N. C., it was announced today.

After acting as a replacement pool for casualties overseas, the 513th was officially activated as a regiment under the command of Colonel Albert H. Dickerson, on August 13. The men accepted into the regiment as parachute duty volunteers were given both their basic training and then Jump Training at The Parachute School here. As each battalion qualified its men as jumpers, they were transferred to Fort Bragg.

7 Saber Officers Get Promotions

Seven promotions of officers were announced this week by Col. Henry J. Hunt, Jr., commanding officer of the 300th Infantry of The Infantry School Troops Brigade.

Benjamin F. Zvolanek of Russell, Kansas, personnel adjutant of the regiment, has been promoted from first lieutenant to captain.

Promoted from 2nd lieutenant to first lieutenant were: Marc M. Schowalter of Malstead, Kansas, platoon leader in the Anti-Tank company; Lyle W. Selleck, Detroit, Michigan, Supply officer of Company E; Harry C. Brown of Eastaboga, Alabama, platoon leader in Company L; Paul Murray, Jr., New York City, platoon leader in Company G; Hubert Tinley of Council Bluffs, Iowa, Communications officer in the second battalion. Promoted from warrant officer, J. G., to chief warrant officer was John G. Hurley of Hackettstown, N. J., assistant personnel officer.

ASTP Glee Clubs Sing In Atlanta

Musical talent of ASTP is again in evidence as the 2nd Battalion Glee Club of the 4th Training Regiment kept a concert engagement in Atlanta last Sunday.

The 2nd Battalion, Lt. Col. Paul E. Jacobs commanding, has an excellent chorus composed of 35 men. Under the direction of Pvt. Stanley Fleisher, the individual members have a wide background of experience in glee clubs and choirs before entering the Army. Director Fleisher himself is a graduate of music from West Chester Teachers' College, West Chester, Pa.

The Glee Club sang in the First Baptist church of Atlanta. Of note is the fact that this church auditorium seats over 2,000 people and is said to have the largest seating capacity of any church within the state.

Among the compositions the Glee Club sang on Sunday were the following: "Salvation Belongeth to Our Lord", by Tchesnekov; "Hark! The Vesper Hymn Is Stealing", by Bertniansky, and "The Heavens Resound", by Beethoven.

The Glee Club of the 1st Battalion, 5th Regiment, also sang Sunday morning at the Baptist Tabernacle in Atlanta. This group, under the direction of Pvt. Earl Snow of Long Island, New York, has already presented several successful concerts in Columbus and Phenix City. They have sung regularly at the regimental church services held in Theater No. 12.

1914 German Soldier Now Oldest Enlisted Yankee Paratrooper

It takes a pretty darn good man to fight in one World War at the age of 16 and then, nearing 44, to be the oldest enlisted man in the United States Paratroopers during World War II. That is exactly what Sergeant Michale Peitch has done.

Some years ago, when a great many of our present soldiers were not yet born, or were at best merely boys, another soldier, scarcely more than a boy himself, marched in the mighty German army that overran Europe. Michale Peitch, who was once a corporal in the German army, today fights for America.

When the Armistice was signed at the end of World War I, young Peitch enlisted in the Polish army which was still at war with some of its neighbors. Wounded after 16 months of fighting, he returned home and for a time settled down. In the early "twenties" the family moved to America without Mike, who remained behind. In 1927, however, he crossed the ocean and joined them in New Jersey. Mike liked New Jersey and decided to remain there and make a home.

BECOMES CITIZEN

Five years later he became a citizen and began to build a prosperous real estate business. When he married in 1933 the thoughts of war were far from his mind. This, of course, was not to be. The year of 1942 saw him in uniform again, this time for Uncle Sam. Early in that year he joined the army and was sent to the Combat Engineers. After about six months with the Engineers he decided that the hardest hitting, most vital branch of service was the Parachute Infantry. An opinion he still maintains).

He secured premission from his C. O. to transfer to the Troops and in December of '42 he came to Fort Benning. Well over the age limit for Parachutists, which is 32 years, Peitch then a private, gave his age as 30. He passed the physical exam with ease, his appearance belying his years. He was well on his way to the finish of "B" Stage when his age deception was discovered and he was unceremoniously yanked out of training. However, since Michale had been a good soldier, he was given the opportunity to transfer to any Engineer Unit which he could choose. He refused. To an old soldier who had seen some of the fiercest fighting the world has ever known, an ordinary army seemed very tame. He had made up his mind that he would fight in nothing but the toughest division of the World's best army, the American Paratroopers.

HE WINS OUT

His persistence was successful, he was granted permission to return to training. His troubles were not quite over, for on his initial jump from the towers, he suffered a broken ankle. This only made him more determined to accomplish his goal. He returned to duty and with no further mishap, he became a qualified jumper.

Although Sergeant Michale Peitch is at present attached to the Parachute School, he is eagerly awaiting the call to combat. Someday a pair of "Troopers boots" will march over once familiar ground and help to plant the American Flag in Berlin.

For security reasons the name Michale Peitch is fictitious.

NEWS OF THE CONFIRMATION by the Senate late Monday of the promotion of Col. Ridgely Gaither, commandant of Fort Benning's Parachute School, brought forth a set of shiny new stars as Mrs. Gaither pinned the rank of Brigadier General on her husband. Tuesday afternoon the first battalion of Col. Julian B. Lindsey's 515th Parachute Infantry Regiment formed a Guard of Honor for General Gaither's inspection. Gen. Gaither, a native of Baltimore, Md., evolved plans for the organization of the U. S. Army's original paratroop unit, the 501st Parachute Battalion which was formed in the fall of 1940. (U. S. LAST WEEK we started a little feature of wasting space by running a horrible picture—one which caused the public relations office to groan. We promised you more. Well, here's another. Did you ever see such pretty mules? And if you did who gives a damn? Can you imagine a picture editor in his right mind using this fugitive from a waste basket? Can you imagine our readers breathlessly waiting for a newspaper filled with pictures like this one? The mules, of course, are pretty things. Such lines, such curves, such intelligent eyes. Hell, let the Yank and all these other paper run pin-up girls. We've got Section Eight photographers who can turn out art like this.

Lt. Shupe in New Post; As Enlisted Man Served In Many Important Jobs

Soldier since 1925 and veteran of service in Hawaii and Panama, Lieutenant Arthur R. Shupe has been appointed administrative officer in the 21st Sompany of The Infantry School's 1st Student Training Regiment, Colonel Robert H. Lord, regimental commander, announced recently.

As an inlisted man, Shupe had been chief clerk to such officers as Lieut. General Ben Lear, Lieutenant General Omar N. Bradley, Major General Richard C. Moore, Major General Walter E. Prosser, Major General Robert H. Lewis, and Major General Rene E. De R. Hoyle.

Shupe has also served a division as chief linesman, battalion communication chief, regimental wire chief, brigade wire chief, brigade communication chief, acting 1st sergeant, post sergeant major, and division chief clerk. He graduated from Infantry OCS as a 2nd lieutenant in November 1942.

From his home in Greenfield, Mass., Shupe had enlisted in December 1925 for Signal Corps duty in Hawaii. He spent the better part of three years in the islands, returning to the States in November 1928 for discharge.

UNHAPPY OUT OF ARMY

But Shupe was unhappy out of uniform and the following February rejoined the Army. He was assigned to the 13th Infantry, which was then at Fort Adams, Rhode Island and later moved to Fort Devens, Mass. Having soldiered with the 13th for over seven years, he was transferred in October 1936 to Headquarters of the newly activated 18th Infantry Brigade.

When the outbreak of war in Europe necessitated strengthening our outlying defenses, his outfit was moved to Panama in October 1939. Modernization of square into triangular divisions the next year de-activated the 18th Brigade organizatioin, Shupe was placed in Headquarters of the Panama Mobile Force.

Returning to the United States a month before Pearl Harbor, he was assigned to the 9th Division at Fort Bragg, N. C. In February 1942, he took a cadre of 1150 men to Camp Claiborne, La., to form the 82nd Infantry Division, and from these was selected to attend Officer Candidate Schcool at Fort Benning.

Lieutenant Shupe served as Assistant Adjutant to the 2nd S. T. R. and Personnel Officer of the Student Training Brigade before receiving his present assignment. He was promoted to 1st lieutenant in August 1943.

Member of Lost Battalion Given Discharge After 30-Years Service

Sgt. Forney B. Mintz, of Ash, N. C., one of the 20 or so heroic survivors of the famed "Lost Battalion," was discharged from the Academic Regiment Tuesday after 30 years with the colors.

Seeing his first active duty during the Mexican border trouble of 1916, Mintz went overseas as a sergeant with the 77th Division. As a result of his service with the almost - wiped - out "Lost Battalion," he earned the Distinguished Service Cross and the Purple Heart. He was twice wounded during the crucial days when the battalion was surrounding, starving and being cut to pieces. When relief came only a score of Yanks were alive to tell the tale.

Mintz has served with various infantry regiments "between the wars," and was an acting topkick in a CCC unit it Tennessee in 1933. He came to the Academic Regiment in April of 1942.

Ft. Benning Pays Homage To 3,000 Civilian Employes

Post Plans Full Christmas Slate

Christmas time events as announced for Fort Benning this week include an enlisted man's formal dance at the Main Post gymnasium on Dec. 22, open house at Service Club No. 1 on Christmas-day, a children's pary at the Main theatre Dec. 22, a tea dance at the Harmony Church hospital, services Christmas Eve and Day at the hospitals, midnight religious services at the Catholic and Protestant chapels, three-day holidays for the Infanry school and the Parachute school troops, and a special turkey Christmas dinner in all the mess halls.

The outstanding GI social event of the present Yuletide season is the Service Club No. 1 formal Christmas dance to be staged at the Main Post Gymnasium on Wednesday evening, December 22.

The affair will be very much in season with a "jingle bell" stunt, Santa Claus, and a novel presentation of the ladies.

In the presence of every GI from the Main Post units that can be present, the Columbus civilian nurses and the WACs, will be led to a stairway stage and presented to the assembly.

GIFT BAG

Ten gifts will go to ten lucky ladies who draw right numbers from Santa's pack, and ten useful gifts will go to ten lucky soldiers who do the same.

The Lawson Field orchestra assures the dancers that they will have fine music.

Plans and preparations for this event are in the hands of the Club's hostess, Miss Mary Farmer, and her assistants, Lieutenant Lois Price, Cpl. Kay Krazit, Pvt. Cecilia Eonta, and Mrs. Mary Meehan.

Open House, from three to six o'clock at the Main Post Service Club (No. 1) will be held on Christmas Day for friends and relatives of soldiers at Fort Benning, according to an announcement by Miss Mary Farmer, hostess.

Entertainment is to be centered around the Reception Center Chorus singing Christmas carols.

A good orchestra will be on hand to supply music for dancing, and refreshments will be served at intervals during the day. The hostess and her corps of helpers will try in every way, she says, to make the place as homelike and as entertaining as possible for those present who are away from home.

CHILDREN'S PARTY

Six hundred children of military personnel in Columbus, Benning Park, Baker Village, and Fort Benning will attend the children's party Wednesday, December 22, at 1:30. This is an annual event sponsored by the post chaplain, assisted by all the chaplains on the Main Post, and will start at the Benning Primary School from where the children will march over to the Main Theatre in the wake of Santa Claus.

There Mrs. Alfred B. Claus will tell them one of her children's stories in a way that is characteristicly artistic and entertaining. This will be followed by an appropriate movie that will last 45 minutes, and then the Post School's glee club will sing a group of Christmas songs.

Santa will then distribute well-filled gift baskets to each child.

Mass at the Catholic chapel will start at 11:30 Christmas Eve and will be conducted by Chaplain Wm. H. Hunt, while the Protestant communion service (with the post chapel choir) will be conducted by Chaplain Frank M. Thompson, assisted by Chaplains Frederick W. Helfer, and Alfred L. Pollock, and will be held at the same time.

HOSPITAL NO. 2

A tea dance at Station Hospital No. 2 (Harmony Church branch) of the Main Post on Christmas evening will be one of the big social events in the Yuletide entertainment of hospital patients, according to an announcement made by Mrs. Frances J. Hattaway, A. R. C. entertainment director, Hospital No. 1 (Main Post branch) is in the offing, but definite plans have not been completed for it as yet.

All these Christmas plans have the hearty co-operation and support of Col. Edward A. Noyes, director of the two branches of the hospital and in charge of No. 1.

SGT. JOE LOUIS

Sgt. Joe Louis Here Dec. 29

Sgt. Joe Louis, the internationally famed Brown Bomber and heavyweight boxing champion of the world, will visit Fort Benning on December 29th, it was announced late yesterday by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, post special service and athletic officer.

The visit of the gerat ringman, now an Army sergeant, will be in connection with his nationwide tour of Army camps which he embarked upon several months ago.

TWO EXHIBITIONS

Louis will be here for one day only, but will be kept plenty busy, according to Colonel Finnegan. He will box two exhibitions, one in the afternoon and one in the evening, and also make a hospital visit. Time and place of the ring exhibitions will be announced later, when plans are completed.

The Brown Bomber will bring along his entire entourage of soldier ringmen, including Corp. Walker Smith, better known as "Sugar" Robinson, the world welterweight title claimant. Sgt; George S. Nicholson, the Bomber's heavyweight sparring partner; Pvt. George J. Wilson, an ex-welter

TTC, Airborne Command Combine N. C. Maneuvers

Combined maneuvers employing elements of the Army Air Forces Troop Carrier Command and the Airborne Command are being conducted in the vicinity of Camp MacKall, N. C., during the period Dec. 6 through Dec. 11, the War Department has announced.

The maneuvers will include the movement by transport airplanes and gliders of an entire airborne division involving thousands of men and all their equipment. Combat teams, operating in daylight and night landings by both parachute and glider, will participate. The troops will be supplied by air. A demonstration of air evacuation of sick and wounded will be given.

Director of the maneuvers will be Brig. Gen. Leo Donovan of the Airborne Command. Lieut. Col. John E. Albert, base commander of Lawson Field, will attend the maneuvers as Senior Observer Guide.

Plans For Blood Bank Announced By Red Cross

Plans for reaching the largest quota of blood donations ever attempted by the Red Cross Mobile Blood Donor Unit or the Atlanta Blood Donor Center have been announced by Ralph J. Mitchell, field director of the Fort Benning branch of the American Red Cross. The unit will accept the blood in Ward G-2 of Station Hospital No. 2 in the Harmony Church area of Fort Benning during its three-day stay on the post December 15-17.

A total of 240 actual bleeders a day is the quota set at Fort Benning which is 80 more persons than the 160 per day which is the highest hitherto attempted by the unit or the Atlanta Blood Donor Center. This will require 280 volunteers a day, Mitchell stated.

The quota for December 15, the first day of the period will be met by personnel from the various units of the Infantry School, while the Parachute School will furnish volunteers for December 16. Civilians on the post will have an opportunity to donate their blood between 8 and 8:45 o'clock December 17, with their quota set at approximately 40 persons.

7TH ARMORED

The Seventh Armored Division and other units in the Sand Hill area will provide the blood donors to total approximately 200, for the remainder of the day on December 17. Blood will be taken each day between the hours of 8 a. m. and 1 p. m.

Civilian Registration for blood donations will begin December 6 at Red Cross headquarters on the man post at Fort Benning, Mitchell said, and will continue through December 11. Civilians may register between the hours of 8:30 a. m. and 5 p. m. during this period, he announced.

PERSONNEL INCREASED

The Blood Donor Unit is bringing additional personnel to Benning for its third stay here in order to be prepared for the additional work involved in attaining the record-breaking quota of blood. The reason for the unit's decision to up the quota substantially at Benning is due to the previous excellent results obtained here, Mitchel ldeclared. The high cooperations and coordination of the personnel in donating their blood and the smooth-functioning mechanism by which the donations at Benning are made is credited for previous outstanding results on the post, and the present plan of bleeding almost a person a minute during the forthcoming visit of the blood bank.

During the two previous stops at Benning, the unit received 545 pints of plasma in July, and 552 pints in October. Benning oversubscribed its quota both times.

Ranking Officers Laud War Work

Colorful Stadium Ceremony Marks Awards Presentation

The Army saluted Fort Benning's "Soldiers in Mufti"—the post's civilian workers—at a ceremony Wednesday afternoon in Doughboy Stadium, marking Civilian Awards Day.

Approximately 3,000 civil service employees of the Army Ground Forces, the Army Air Forces, and the Army Service Forces received emblems citing them for faithful service to the War Department, and were tendered a salute from troops of the three branches of the army who passed in review before them.

Maj. Gen. Charles Bonesteel, commandant of The Infantry School, presented awards to the 300th Army Ground Forces employees of The Infantry School and The Parachute School whose service of six months or more makes them eligible for the awards. Col. William H. Hobson, commanding officer of Fort Benning, made the presentation to the 2,500 eligible employees of the Army Service Forces at the post, and Major John W. Christner, base commander at Lawson Field, to the 300th Army Air Forces employees of Lawson Field and Lawson Field sub-depot.

THE EMBLEM

Representative employees of the three branches of the army were cited individually and accepted the Emblems of Civilian Service on behalf of the others in their groups. Ground Forces personnel cited were Miss Emma R. Price,

Chapel Choirs Plan Bach Cantata, Carols, Serenades On Yule Program

Hazel Hayes of Opera, Thomas Dix of Films to Take Solo Parts

A full program of Yuletide music including the beautiful Bach Cantata "For Us a Child Is Born," on Sunday, December 19, and a series of carol serenades for high ranking officers of Fort Benning and Station Hospital patients is included on the holiday agenda of the Main Chapel Choirs, Mrs. J. O. Methvin, Directors of the Choirs.

Soloists for the Cantata will be Mrs. Allen Anthony Putt, opera and concert dramatic soprano, and Pvt. Thomas Dix of Hollywood, motion picture star and baritone.

The choir's heavy schedule will get under way Sunday a week at morning services when the group will sing "There Were Shepherds Abiding in the Fields" by Vinent and "Lo How a Rose Ere Blooming" by Praetorius.

Following these services the choir will go to Station Hospital to sing carols. On Sunday night vesper services will feature the Senior and Junior Choirs and soldiers from the 176th Infantry.

Solo parts will be taken by Mrs. Putt, Mrs. B. Franklin Wills, and Pvt. Dix.

CANTATA NUMBERS

Later the choir will sing Bach's beautiful cantata "For Us a Child Is Born" with the following anthems and carols: "Glory to God in the Highest"—Pergolise." "I Heard the Bells on Christmas Day"—Andrews; "Break Forth, O Beauteous Heavenly Light"—Bach; "O Nightingale, Awake"—Dickinson; "Carol of Sheep Bells"—Kountz; "O Holy Night"—Adam; "Carol of Russian Children"; "Carol of Bells"—Russian traditional music; "Away in a Manger"—Hokansen; and "Sleep of the Infant Jesus"—Graevert.

On Christmas Eve the Senior Choir will sing carols for Major General Charles H. Bonesteel, commandant of the Infantry School; Col. William H. Hobson, post commander, George H. Weems, assistant TIS commandant; and others. They will then go to Col. Marshall Goff's quarters for refreshments

New Duties Given Officers

The reassignment and transfer of several station complement officers at Fort Benning became effective Monday last.

Major James E. Freeman, Infantry, formerly assistant to the post executive officer, has been designated Prison Police officer. First. Lieut. Francis W. Berry, Jr., CMP, formerly Police and Prison officer, is assigned to duty as assistant provost marshal.

Captain Salvador Lioss, assistant classification officer at post headquarters, will be assigned to the Recreation Center, while 2d Lieut. Ruth P. Chelbay, WAC, has been transferred from duty at the Reception Center to assume duty as assistant classification officer at Post headquarters.

Capt. Charles W. McKeown, post transportation officer, has received a new assignment at Harahan, La. His successor as post transportation officer has not yet been announced.

Col. Hobson Urges Post Personnel To List Rooms For Yule Visitors

An urgent appeal to personnel living on the post to make available for Christmas visitors their spare rooms was voiced Wednesday by Colonel William H. Hobson, commanding officer of Fort Benning.

"It is Christmas season again and hundreds of relatives want to be with a husband, son, or daughter in the service for just a few short days," Colonel Hobson asserted.

"Housing facilities in Columbus are already overtaxed, but the USO and other agencies are throwing open what little additional space that can be made available in town to visitors.

"How many families residing on the post will volunteer to let some visiting wife or mother use a spare room for a few days?

"Anyone desiring to help and thus demonstrate true Christmas spirit will please phine the Post Billeting Office at FB 3505. Your cooperation is urgently requested."

Local Talent to Play In Big Musical Revue

"Holiday Time" will burst upon Fort Benning the middle of next week in the form of a delightful new musical revue sponsored by the post special service office which will be performed in the auditorium of the children's school on December 15 and 16.

In announcing the presentation of the gay holiday entertainment, Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer at post headquarters, stated that the revue would also tour other areas of the post following its debut on the post proper.

Two new musical tunes, written by Benning soldiers, will be presented for the first time. "Holiday Time," the title song, and a new ditty called "If You Save Your Nickels and Dimes" were the results of collaboration between Corp. E. Barry Sturmer of the special service office and two members of the 300th Infantry Band, Sgt. Al Krasic and Corp. Robert Holmes. Sturmer did the lyrics while the bandsmen supplied the musical score.

COPE DOES DANCES

All dance numbers in "Holiday Time" are being staged by Sgt. Bill Cope, a member of the 176th Infantry and well-known post radio announcer. In civilian days, Cope appeared in several Broadway musicals. The musical director is Pfc. Lucy Mae Stewart, a Benning WAC, who is a graduate of the famed Juilliard School of Music in New York.

Scenic effects for the holiday production are being designed by Sgt. Don Johnston and Sgt. Val Westerhaus, both members of the Academic Regiment, who did similar work in pre-war days.

MIXED CAST

The cast is composed of soldiers, WACs and civilians well-known at the post for their stage talent. The station complement WACs, Lucy Mae Stewart and Gloria Sydenham, have important musical spots, while Pfc. Ruth Whitehead of the Infantry School main post detachment, will appear in several production numbers.

The two other female parts are played by Betty Putman, a recreational worker for the Red Cross at the Station Hospital, and Mary Edna Weed, a Columbus lass known to soldier audiences as "the little girl with the great big voice." Miss Weed will be remembered for her role as the ingenue in "Grin and Bear It," a holiday production of two years ago.

Stamina Pays Dividends In Battle---Col. Hamilton

Ex-Weapons Chief Rejoins TIS As Coordinator Of Training

There is one standby that is prevalent in all success stories concerning infantry in this war, a standby for which there is no substitute. And that is stamina.

Col. Raymond C. Hamilton, former chief of the Weapons section, largest group of the Infantry school, has returned from the African theater of war where, as president of an army ground force board, he studied and observed operations for a considerable period of time during this year. And stamina was the keynote of an incident or series of incidents about which he learned over there.

He is back at The Infantry School now where this week he delivered a series of three lectures to the staff and faculty of the school. After completing his notes and reports on his tour of duty in Africa, Col. Hamilton is to become Co-ordinator of Training for The Infantry School, a post formerly held by Col. Waine Archer, who is now on a special assignment in Washington.

COL. HAMILTON

Reference to stamina was made specifically by Col. Hamilton, to one infantry unit which fought its way from the beaches into the hills of Sicily and kept on fighting when by all the laws of living, it should have been worn out. It was a battalion commanded by Lt. Col. Clarence B. Cochrane of Okemah, Okla., which, within six days of seizing its Sicilian beachhead, assisted in the capture of a vital airport, captured an enemy tank park with a large number of prisoners, fought off numerous savage counter-attacks, and, in one stretch, marched 36 hours, fought and won.

"DON'T YOU SLEEP?

That accomplished, the battalion rested briefly, then smashed forward again in an action which captured 11 tanks, a fleet of trucks and 470 prisoners. It was after this engagement that one enemy officer, when asked why his troops had surrendered, replied, "You always have men infiltrating toward us and around us, backed by artillery fire. You are on us all the time." Other prisoners asked their American captors, "Don't you ever sleep?"

The exploits of the battalion commanded by Colonel Cochran began when it landed in reserve on the Sicilian beachhead. Assigned its objective, the unit headed inland toward the northeast.

From that moment and for six days Colonel Cochran's men fought almost continuously, with a ferocity and daring that elicited from one German prisoner the disclosure that "during certain hours of the day we thought doomsday had come." The achievements of this battalion served to drive home the fact that if men are well trained it doesn't make any difference how far an outfit marches or how tired it is.

On the first day of the landing, one rifle platoon and a machine gun squad were cut off from the rest of the unit, but fought their way back, capturing 60 prisoners, several guns, and seven wounded men. Meanwhile, one company took an enemy strongpoint with underground concrete emplacements and a concrete roadblock, together with 12 machine guns and two field pieces.

The battalions, minus elements which had been landed at another point on the beach, reached its first day objective shortly past noon.

The next day the enemy counter-attacked strongly, driving back most of the battalion and occupying a pass to the rear of Colonel Cochran. With about 200 men, the battalion succeeded in holding its position on high ground, although cut off from the main strength of its own forces.

A second enemy counterattack was launched the following day, but it was shattered by the American infantrymen, who then launched their drive and recaptured the pass by mid-morning, thereby regaining contact with their regiment.

Midnight found the battalion moving forward once again. Its immediate objective was to get astride the road between Biscari and its strategic airport, about five miles southeast of the town. Four hours later, half the battalion, supported by mortar and heavy machine gun fire, was occupying escarpments on both sides of the vital crossroads.

ENEMY TANKS ATTACK

At dawn Colonel Cochran's battalion was attacked by 16 enemy tanks, which were driven off by mortar and artillery fire from batteries which had been set up at the captured airport.

Contact with the main force again was achieved by evening, when the regiment was brought up to the advanced position taken by the hard-fighting battalion.

The next day—the fifth consecutive day of fighting—saw the battalion beating back a counter-attack by enemy infantry and tanks while operating at a point northwest of the remainder of the regiment, which was attacking the Biscari airport.

"In this action, one platoon, pinned down by machine gun and 88 fire, was counterattacked by a Mark VI tank and about 30 men," Colonel Cochran told Colonel Hamilton. "Eight of the enemy were riding the tank and shooting. The others were walking, flanking the tank. Our platoon was behind a stone wall. At 60 yards the enemy threw smoke grenades, but the wind was against them, and set the enemy in silhouette against their own smoke.

"The platoon worked on the tank at 50 yards with anti-tank grenades. The turret was struck and wedged so that it couldn't be used, while the tank was firing point-blank, trying to cave in the wall. The platoon had only two casualties and claims 18 of the enemy killed. Tht hostile tank and infantry withdrew."

That counterattack defeated, the battalion reorganized and moved forward again, now in full strength. At midnight of the action-packed day, Colonel Cochran called a halt near Caltagirone, about 15 miles due north of Biscari, while he, together with a staff officer and five men, moved into the suburbs of the town with an Italian rancher as a guide.

The battalion then proceeded north of the town and dug in at a point close to an enemy tank park. With only a semblance of rest, the outfit began to operate against the quartered tanks before dawn, with one platoon deployed to envelop the opposing right flank.

FIRE AT FLASHES

The Americans' presence had been discovered by the enemy, meanwhile, and a counterattack was launched with six Mark IV tanks, one of which was demolished, a second was set afire, and a third had its turret ripped off by our fire, Colonel Cochran said. "In the dim light, the men fired at the tank gun flashes."

With hostile fire from the enemy tank park silenced, Colonel Cochran recounted, the enemy began evacuation of the vehicles, and an American enveloping unit encircled and overran the parking area in a mopping-up operation in which infantrymen killed 13 Germans and captured nine. Four trucks, four motorcycles and one armored troop carrier were destroyed.

"A part of the mopping-up unit stayed at the crossroads in the rear of the park and threw grenades into the trucks as the enemy tried to evacuate them, and used bayonets on men jumping from the trucks who would not surrender," Colonel Cochran reported.

"In this fight the battalion had no artillery support," he daded. The fast night movement apparently took the enemy by surprise."

The Caltagirone fight terminated the six straight days of combat, but after a few days' rest, the battle-tempered battalion's regiment was sent into action again to relieve another outfit. The battalion was leading the regimental column. It "picked up right where it left off," the aggressiveness of the infantrymen in this action occasioning the remark by an officer prisoner that "you are on us all the time."

The ability of American soldiers to go into their first battle like veterans reflects the soundness and thoroughness of their training, Colonel Hamilton observed.

Personnel of one infantry division told him that battle "is just like the Louisiana maneuvers, except that bullets fly." Others asked Colonel Hamilton, who is stationed at the Infantry School, Fort Benning, Georgia, to tell units in training back home that infantrymen must be hard and tough. "If they cannot march 18 miles in a day and immediately go into battle, they are not ready for combat."

The American infantryman excels in night fighting, he found, and is an expert in hand-to-hand fighting with cold steel.

YANKS RESOURCEFUL

Mined roads, mountainous terrain, bridgeless rivers and enemy patrols are obstacles which infantrymen must surmount in the fighting in Italy, and they do well, Colonel Hamilton reported. They use the element of surprise with remarkable results and they are resourceful, he concluded from his observation in the Sicilian and Italian campaigns.

Colonel Hamilton said the lessons put to such excellent use by Colonel Cochran's battalion "were given in training, but it has taken battle experience to drive home the truth of their instructions. The men want the fact emphasized to those still in the United States. They told me to tell the troops back home that if you follow what you've been taught and stay on the beam, it's all right; but if you try your own stuff, you're likely to have trouble."

In his new assignment as Co-ordinator of Training, Col. Hamilton will have complete supervision of the data to be used in modernizing much of the instruction given in the school according to the lessons learned in this war.

Col. Hamilton has been in the Army since 1916 and was commissioned in 1917 from Officers Training Camp.

In 1916, he served on the Mexican border with the 1st Indiana Infantry. He was with the 5th Division in service overseas and remained with the Army of Occupation until 1920. He attended the Infantry School as a student in 1920-21 and was there as an instructor and secretary of the school through 1925 when he was assigned as a student to the Tank School at Camp Meade.

After ROTC duty at North Georgia for four years, he was assigned to Fort Moultrie with the 8th Infantry and went to China in 1932-34 as company commander and plans and training officer in the 15th Infantry. Back in the states, he served as supply officer and commander of the Service Company of the 10th Infantry at Fort Thomas. He was graduated from the Command and General Staff School in 1936 and the Army War College in 1938 after which he came to the Infantry School, as an instructor in the Weapons Section, the group which he headed from 1942 until his departure for North Africa. He is the holder of the Silver Star.

Col. Hamilton was born in Willow Hill, Illinois where his father still makes his home.

Chute Officer Establishes New Lawson Jump Record

Leaping from a plane at an altitude of 10,000 feet, 2nd Lt. Milton L. Honemann, instructor in the Communications Division of the Parachute School, established a record Friday for height in a static line jump.

This jump was made under the supervision of the director of the Communications Division of the Parachute School, Capt. A. G. Hall in collaboration with Major Lawrence Mitzen, test officer of the Infantry Board, and was designated to test a new type of radio. Lt. Honemann was in continuous radio contact with the ground during his seven-minute fall. The radio was carried in a special harness designed by the Riggers Division of the Parachute School. Lt. Honemann said that reception all the way down was perfect.

The jump was made near Seale, Alabama, from a C-47 transport plane regularly used to carry parachutists. Observers on the ground were able to follow Lt. Honemann's progress all the way down, and after he had landed, a car on the ground was directed by radio from the airplane to proceed to the proper spot to pick him up.

The Communications Division of the Parachute School, in addition is giving three and six-weeks' courses in communications for graduate Parachutists, conduct tests on a new type of communications equipment suitable for airborne operations. Lt. Honemann was an enlisted instructor in the school prior to his attendance at the Infantry Officers Candidate School, and since his graduation on Nov. 4, 1942, has been assigned to the school as instructor. Lt. Honemann lives at 3456 Park Heights Ave., Baltimore, Md., the son of Mr. and Mrs. Honemann.

Plane Crashes, 3 Aboard Live

At approximately 10:30 a. m., Saturday, an army transport plane crashed on the Ft. Benning reservation about four miles from Lawson Field.

The plane was based at Lawson Field and was on a training flight with three men aboard.

Pilot, Robert A. Duclos, 2nd lieut., of San Francisco, Cal.;

Crew chief, Alfred R. Turin, staff sergeant, Goshen, N. Y.

All aboard the plane survived.

Lieut. Dulcos appeared most seriously injured, with compound fracture of the left leg and multiple lacerations and abrasions. Lieut. Szemetko suffered internal injury and lacerations.

Staff Sgt. Turi was thrown clear of plane on impact and suffering contusions of the left arm and left leg, returned to the wreckage to remove the pilot and co-pilot who were still there.

After removing both officers from the wreckage Sgt. Turi started off through the woods for help. Upon reaching a road he was picked up by a car and taken to a hospital.

A board of qualiifed Army Air Force officers is investigating to determine exact cause of the accident.

Army Takes Care of Its Own With AER

There's one organization with which Fort Benning soldiers and their families should become more familiar. It is the Army Emergency Relief.

This organization is one answer to "The Army Takes Care of Its Own' and is doing untold good in maintaining morale of soldiers and their dependents by furnishing emergency relief in various ways.

The Army Emergency Relief office is located in the Red Cross Building on the Main Post adjacent to the football stadium and is administered by Captain John J. A. Lyons and his assistant, Lt. John D. Daggett.

The A. E. R. was established more than a year ago to supplement the excellent work of the American Red Cross, and the two agencies today work together towards taking care of soldiers and their dependents. It was the Red Cross that gave A. E. R. its start through a donation of one and a half million dollars.

Donations from private individuals, stage and theater benefit shows, particularly Irving Berlin's "This is the Army,' have assisted the A. E. R. to continue and expand its relief.

The A. E. R. office on the main Post is a busy place, for it is there that soldiers turn when, for one reason or another, their army pay has been delayed, allotments to dependents have been held up, or some other emergency has arisen that puts a soldier "in a hole."

Any dependent of a soldier, father, mother, wife, children, can turn to A. E. R. in time of distress and, upon proper proof of identity and need of assistance, obtain help. This help is usually in the form of a loan, but sometimes a cash grant is deemed advisable.

In Columbus and area there are many dependents of soldiers. Many have been helped by A. E. R. Others may be in need of relief, perhaps only to the extent of being advised on how to submit official government forms for family dependency, insurance premiums, gratuity pay, back pay, etc., but have not heard of A. E. R. A visit to Fort Benning will clear matters.

Quite often dependents will visit A. E. R. and request loans because allotments made by soldiers have not cleared through government channels. It is usually possible for A. E. R. to make a loan until the allotment is received. This is only one of the many ways in which A. E. R. gives aid.

Army Emergency Relief is nationwide in scope. There is an office in every post, camp or station where U. S. soldiers are located. And there are many A. E. R. offices set up in cities or towns far removed from army posts.

In order that the scope of the A. E. R. Section may be extended, all military personnel or their dependents or parents are invited to submit by letter to The Army Emergency Relief Officer, Post Headquarters, Fort Benning, Georgia, any questions concerning benefits provided for under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Dependency Act. Also, any questions relative to insurance benefits, gratuity pay in the case of deceased military personnel, back pay, etc., will gladly be answered.

There will appear in this newspaper every Thursday from now on a Question and Answer column dealing with Army Emergency problems. Only those questions that appear to be general in scope will be answered in this column. All other questions will be answered individually by letter. The Bayonet urges all military personnel to avail themselves of this service.

For The Duration Think 'Ere Talking

Here and there in recent months you have seen posters, slogans, gags, and cartoons warning against the dangers of soldiers and civilians indulging in promiscuous talk concerning matters of a military nature. These terse, but friendly, warnings are not so much bunk. They were not prepared because those doing the work have nothing else with which to occupy their time and efforts. They are meant for your own common good; they are for your protection and future happiness.

No successful business transaction was ever consummated between two parties without each first assembling and weighing to the best of his ability all information regarding the proposition. Lawyers do not enter proceeding without having all of the facts in their possession. Doctors generally do not plunge headlong into major operations Scientists do not make discoveries without thorough research. Many such illustrations could be given of the absolute necessity for advance planning, where prior information about the other side is of the utmost value and importance, where the desired outcome of the issue hinges upon such previously gained knowledge. In the successful execution of any worthwhile plan—be it only the sale of a small piece of property, or the conduct of a World War—advance preparations must be made. All available pertinent information must be acquired, so that when subsequent events occur, the changing conditions will not be entirely unexpected, and may be most effectively coped with. Think, war is not waged without elaborate beforehand preparations, which, among other considerations, include securing all possible knowledge of the enemy, his strength, his plans, his ultimate objective.

Think, when you hear warnings over the radio, when you read them in the newspapers. They do not exaggerate. Think, when you see the news-reels showing the death and destruction meted out by the machines of war. They are not filmed to deceive you. This destruction is real, not fictional. These men are actually dying. They are not playing a part. This is calculated destruction, premeditated killing.

Think, when you read the warning posters. They do not lie or distort the truth.

The entire program to safeguard military information is designed as a tangible means of holding to an irreducible minimum the loss of America's heroic fighting men; the maintenance of the welfare and safety of the civilian population; and the assurance of the future world freedom.

For the duration, THINK before talking.

V-I-C-T-O-R-Y

Victory shall be ours and will be here to stay
If only all Americans would make this War Bond Day.
With each Stamp or Bond you buy, you help to win the fight
And keep OLD GLORY flying high morning, noon and night.
We soldiers give our very best in all the things we do,
And with the help of everyone I'm sure we can pull through.
So one and all come on; let's go and each one do our share
So when the war is over, those profits will be there.

Pfc. Edward G. Strack,
Co. "B" 48th. Arm'd Inf. Bn.,
Fort Benning.

They are out there fighting for freedom. Let's fight back here and guarantee them the reward of a rebirth of freedom at home.

The problem after the war is not so much demoblization of our forces as remobilization of our motives.

It's not enough to have an answer to the problems of today. We've got to BE the answer.

Men who rise to the occasion are those who take occasion to rise early.

Aim high or you'll hit low.

It shouldn't take a burning plane to turn a man to God. Burning shame should be enough.

The problem of the church these days isn't so much keeping sinners out of hell as keeping men of good will out of armchairs and getting saints early enough out of bed.

Twenty-five years ago on Armistice Day we stopped firing. We also stopped hiring. This time, when the war ends, we must start shooting—and shoot for something big enough to keep everybody busy.

USO Presents—

A CIRCUS, LOTS OF D ANCES AND A HEBREW SO NG FESTIVAL

By LT. M. S. DANK

Probably one of the most unusual of entertainments presented by the USO Clubs during this coming week will be that offered by the Phenix City and Columbus Salvation Army Clubs tonight . . . The joint operation, which will take place at the Phenix City building, will be a circus, complete with animals, a midway, clowns, sideshows, and the like. . . . Featured on the bill is Bob Taber and his famous monkey troupe. . . . This group of simians go through everything from wire-walking to bike riding and roller skating. . . .

In addition, Taber has what is called a visual education program in the life habits of animals, birds, and reptiles. . . . According to the word from the Salvation Army group, he will have alligators, snakes, parrots, and, incidentally, skunks. . . . Further information on the latter was not mentioned, but since Taber has been doing this act throughout the country, with no apparent ill effects, it is assumed by this column that the skunks have either been well trained . . . or de-smelled. . . . The program is scheduled to get under way tonight at 9 o'clock, EWT, at the Salvation Army USO in Phenix City, 3rd and 16th streets.

The YWCA at 1425 3rd Avenue has scheduled a tea dance for Saturday afternoon from 4 to 6 p. m., Benning Time. . . . Although further details have not been given up to the time that this column is being written, it is advised that requests for tickets be made. . . . Phone number is 8451 (Columbus.)

The Jewish Welfare Board of the Ninth Street USO has organized a Hebrew song fest circle under the direction of Pvt. Louis Keller. . . . Group meets every Sunday evening at 7 o'clock, EWT, at the JWB office.

GI's with a hankering for roller skating will be interested in knowing, if they don't already, that the Army-Navy YWCA USO at 14 W. 11th St. has one of the most complete set-ups for the sport seen in many a day. . . . The rink, instead of the customary wood, is composed of terrazzo, a form of marble and cement flooring which makes skating a pleasure. . . . Furthermore, although the location is outside, the buildings all around it shelter skaters from the wind. . . . Skating takes place every night starting around 8 o'clock. . . . If you don't have your own skates, don't worry, they'll supply you.

There'll be a party given on Monday night (Dec. 13) at the Ninth Street USO by the Holy Family Church. . . . Although no time has been announced, chances are that it will get underway sometime between 8:30 and 9, Benning Time. . . . Those desiring invitations are urged to contact the Ninth Street USO.

The Negro Army Navy YMCA will hold a dance this coming Tuesday for the service men at its building at 841 5th Avenue. Time for the affair is set at 8.

To round out a rather full week of dances, the JWB of the Ninth Street USO will hold a party and dance at the Harmony Club, next Wednesday evening (Dec. 15) beginning at 8:30 EWT. . . . Invitations may be obtained from the JWB office in the Ninth Street US.

THE COLONEL CHA NGES TACTICS AS CHRISTMAS SEA SON NEARS

BY S. SGT. TOM McDONALD

Once a year here at Fort Benning, Christmas manages to roll around in time to invest Colonel Swampwater and his staff with enough spirit to carry them through the year, or at least until early December, as is cognizant in our present situation.

Both Sawgrass and myself noted that the first vestiges of this new spirit was enveloping our leader's personality just last week, when the 1942 Christmas spirit in his make-up had died its natural death. After a few days of ranting and raving and all in all making a perfect ass of himself, it suddenly dawned upon the ol' boy that Christmas 1943 was just around the corner. So he immediately changed his tactics and became the living symbol of peaches and cream.

The first recipient of his new allure was our commanding General, Ausper G. Quagmire, who unexpectantly paid another untimely visit to our office last Thursday.

Being extremely desirous of getting a handsome Christmas present from the General, Colonel Swampwater lost no time in "spreading the roses."

"Auspur!" he exclaimed, leaping from the chair he sat in and running to the door with out-stretched arms. "I'm delighted to have you in for a visit! I've been yearning for an audience with you I am anxious to hear more facts about the great events in your memorable career!"

"Aw hell, Swampwater," the General stammered, "I came over here to bawl hell out of yuh!"

"Why Shades of Salome, Ausper! You grieve me to the core. Here let me polish your stars," the ol' boy purred, at the same time pulling a well oiled blitz cloth from his left hind pocket and rubbing them vigorously.

"Damit, Swampwater! I was gonna give you the devil for letting your regiment fall out for the Armistice Day parade in fatigue clothes, but somehow I just can't."

"Why, Auspur!" beamed G. P., "that's certainly manly of you to be willing to overlook that little incident. You understand how it was though. My blouse was in the cleaners so it was my only alternative."

"That's all right, Swampwater," the General replied, "I like to see my officers act on their own initiative. You're a good man, T. P., an officer and a gentleman!"

"It's nothing, Auspur, absolutely nothing. Why if I had my way, you'd be leading the U. S. forces in Europe right this minute, but anyway, I'm mighty glad that you will be here for Christmas. I often recollect how generous you have been with Christmas gifts to your fellow officers in the past."

"Yes, Colonel, I am a very great man, a second Stonwall Jackson!"

"Undoubtedly," added T. P., leading him to the door and patting him on the back as he went out.

Chaplain's Corner...

ON PLAYING GOLF

Chaplain F. M. Thompson

So many have written about golf, I feel I ought to say something. As to whether one should play the game, I think the position of Diogenes very helpful. Being asked whether it was better to marry or not, he replied, "Whatever you do, you will repent it."

Almost everybody of any consequence plays golf. And most golfers at one time or another have thrown away their clubs, vowing never to play again. So it seems whether you play or not you are entangled in the doctrine of predestination.

You're damned if you do,
And you are damned if you don't.

My concern with golf is, does it make for piety?

On the impulse of the moment my answer would be 'No.' Somehow or another, a psychological change seems to take place in one as soon as he grips a golf club. A hitherto upright citizen becomes the object of suspicion as soon as he reaches the golf links. And not without cause.

An honest confession for most golfers would be something like this: "In playing the game I have sworn, lied, gambled, stolen, and felt like a gentleman in so doing."

And this is what perplexes me — and I should be taken to task for this position—I have not the heart to condemn that sort of conduct, I feel that something is wrong with a golfer who does not get all "het up," unbalanced, depraved.

* * *

Joking aside, the truth is the thing that gives zest and dramatic flavor to golf is what makes life—the difficulties, the hazards. In spite of traps, topping, slicing and hooking the ball, we go on day by day, and some day we will beat Old Man Par. So in the other great game, handicapped, a poor score today, defeats of yesterday, only make for increased courage and determination to win on the morrow.

For when the one Great scorer comes to write against your name,
He marks—not what you won or lost — but how you played the game.

There are those who, in their post-war plans, still believe it possible to strengthen the weak by weakening the strong.

It's no help to do for others what they can and should do for themselves.

"The true test of civilization," said Ralph Waldo Emerson, "is, not the census, nor the size of the cities, nor the crops—no, but the kind of man the country turns out."

Some of us are afraid to search our souls, for fear that we will find a "heel."

To get a job done better, a change of heart will often do more than a change of hands.

Too often when we think of being honest, we think of being honest about somebody else. The need is to be honest about ourselves.

Kay Says—

REFINISHING FLOO RS LEADS TO STRANGE GOINGS- ON AT HER HOUSE

For three days our house has been in a state of chaos. Strange men have been sauntering casually in and out, leaving the screen doors open, the lights on, and the windows up. A cloud of dust envelopes the place, and persons must be wary of where they sit or how they walk.

It all started when, one dreary day, we took a look at the floors and decided something had to be done. After all, when floors get to a certain stage, even the most hard-boiled officer must admit that something must be done, not for decorative purposes, but for the maintenance and upkeep of quarters. Had I realized, however, what refinishing floors means to the peace of mind of a household. I would have kept my lips resolutely sealed.

Not only have we been confounded by the roar of a huge sanding machine and the consequent clouds of dust, but we have gone to bed with the odor of shellac in our nostrils, and awakened with the taste of varnish removed in our mouths. Coffee, hot biscuits, boiled dinners or ice cream all have a predominant flavor of turpentine and sawdust.

Although the strange men and their stranger paraphernalia have moved out as suddenly as they came, and the floors gleam in pristine glory, the odor and the dust linger on. Friends assure me that they'll continue to linger for weeks—nay, for months.

It was during this experience that we also had a sudden influx of visitors. Strange kittens took to sauntering through the house, madly pursued by our hostile puppy. Gently but firmly deposited outside the kitchen door, they would shortly make a return appearance. It took the combined reasoning powers of the adult members of the family to determine that our uninvited guests were entering through the unguarded basement door, strolling up the basement steps, and suddenly appearing, to the startled eye, as a deluge of cats.

The neighbor children, too, suddenly developed a passionate friendship for our small boy. The doorbell rang frequently, with loud, incessant peals indicative of the most urgent need. Those still too short to reach the bell resorted to more direct methods—they just walked in, occasionally over floors not yet dry.

The receptacle for sawdust proved an irresistable attraction. A mixture of sawdust and water, it was discovered, makes the most wonderful sawdust pies it had ever been the fortune of the younger generation to concoct. That the sawdust, in these culinary attempts, became imbedded in clothing and hair was utterly beside the point. That our yard, previously in good condition as a result of cleanup week, became the depository of mounds of sawdust was also overlooked, along with the numerous pots, pans, sticks and spoons necessary to the manufacture of sawdust pies.

To increase the general chaos, our 200-pounds of laundress put in an appearance to do the family wash. A sensitive soul, she indicated by facial expression and deep, dark mutterings that an upset household and a lunch eaten to the accompaniment of a sanding machine were not to her liking. All signs point to the abrupt departure of Fanny from our midst, and a consequent frantic search for another laundress.

It is only after such an experience that one realizes too little importance has been attached to the maintenance and upkeep of floors. From now on no irreverent foot will be allowed to sully their hard-won perfection. The dog will be firmly shunted outside; the companion-seeking offspring will be forced to entertain his friends on the porch; the nonchalant friend will be watched warily to see where he drops his cigaret ashes. One experience like that might be looked back on, in future years, as an adventure, but a second such experience would be more than human nature could stand.

This Khaki'd World—

Capt. Schweitzer came in for considerable criticism by a lady this week. Seems that when he suggested the idea of having the Bayonet offer a prize for the first G. I. baby born after the New Year—the lady berated him for not having thought of it last April.

Sgt. Al Krasic, leader of the 300th Infantry Dance Orchestra, walking in downtown Columbus the other day, saw a face which looked awfully familiar, despite the fact he had never seen it over a khaki uniform. It was Nick Gallucci, now playing with the 131st Infantry regiment band. Both had played with Bob Parker's band in Cleveland, Omaha, Kansas City, etc., before their ways parted, about three years ago.

Corporal Snow, Company K, 300th Infantry, knows his General Orders. But he was rather at a loss how to apply the one about quitting his post only when properly relieved. Because while on a guard detail at Lawson Field recently, he was assigned to walk post over a transport plane. And when the durned thing took off, he had nothing left to guard. But he stayed there just the same until "properly relieved." He said later he felt sort of silly standing at all.

The fellows in Third Battalion Hq. Co. of the 131st, claim that one of their members was told by an officer recently "Use your ingenuity." Whereupon the soldat looked blank and said "But sir, I haven't been issued any."

WAC pin-up boy Johnny Bates of DEML was very red the other day when he opened a package in front of friends and found to his surprise that it contained some lovely flowers, accompanied by a card with the name of a WAC at post headquarters. He was redder still when, on thanking her for the flowers, she denied all knowledge of any posies being sent to him. Bates is now gunning for the pranksters—if he can find out who it was.

Officers at Post Headquarters are having lots of extra work to be sent back to Washington so somebody or other can figure out who does what and when and whether the previous experience of the officers fits in with what they're doing now.

Maj. Russell J. Hammargren, post public relations office, warned others in his office that the form was slightly tricky in its makeup, because after he had finished typing it, he came out with one part of it in the original, but another part came out with the carbon instead of the original type.

Lieut. Richard Tukey, assistant Public Relations Officer, came up an hour or so later with a very red face because despite his efforts, his form turned out the same way.

They told Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer, and athletic officer, about the tricky form and warned him against it. So he loftily told them he'd have his experienced stenographer make his out, to avoid the same thing.

Half an hour later he came into the Public Relations Office and reported: "Well, it came out the same for her as for you." The officers felt better about it then.

Didja'all (Southern influence, folks,) read over the selections for AP's Southeastern All-Service football team published Monday in the Columbus Enquirer? It was awfully fine to see so many Benning men's names on the team—but in all fairness, how do they pick them when in at least one case, a man played just two games before his team disbanded? And one man makes second team when admittedly there were half a dozen better men on his own team and he hardly ever appeared in a game the whole season?

Sgt Bill Nickerson, program director of the 513th Parachute Infantry Special Service Office, seems to spend his waking hours searching the dictionary for adjectives to properly discribe the voice of lovely Gloria Grace his favorite songstylist. Bill was formerly booking agent and entertainers manager back in civilian life under the name of "Bill Raymonds." Incidently, Gloria Grace formerly sang at smart supper clubs in Long Island and recently appeared on the "Fort Benning On The Air" radio program and various other army shows. By the way MISS Grace is Mrs. Bill Nickerson.

Some people talk so much you would think they had been vaccinated with a phonograph needle. God gave us two ears and only one mouth, which may mean that we should listen twice as much as we speak.

It isn't teaching that makes education but right teaching. Only that man is educated who has learned the truth.

Civilian Guerillas Give Valuable Assistance To Chiang Kai Shek

"China's civilians, organized into guerrilla groups under direction of Generalissimo Chiang Kai Shek, are a powerful adjunct of her regular army," states Captain Yu Nan Chang, Chinese tank officer who fought against the Japs from 1938 to 1941 and has just reported to the Infantry School after more than a year as observer with our Armored Force.

"When Jap invaders threaten a region, its inhabitants flee to the hills, hiding or taking with them livestock, farm implements, and seed. Able-bodied men are formed into guerrilla bands. These units in each province are controlled by the Generalissimo, insuring close coordination with the Chinese Army."

But this happy system, whereby the civilian population is saved from exploitation by the Nipponese and at the same time is able to help the forces of liberation, grew out of the bitter experience of the first two years of war, Captain Chang explained.

In 1937 and '38, cooperation between China's army and civilians was as poorly organized. The latter could not be evacuated in time and thus furnished cooli-labor for Japan's war lords as they overran province after province. But China, like the United States, learned from her experience in the war's opening phases.

WHOLE SCHOOL FLEES

At the time Japan staged the "China Incident" in July 1937, Chang was a cadet in the Military Academy at Nanking. When the aggressors marched on the former capital, the entire school—faculty, cadets and all—packed up and moved over 1,000 miles inland to new sites at Chintu and Changshat.

Nearly one-third of the way they journeyed by rail. But Chang and his classmates had to hoof it the remaining 700 miles—excellent Infantry background for future tank officers.

In the Spring of 1938, he was graduated from the two-year course (it has since been lengthened to three) at the tank school at Changsha. At that time they trained with Russian equipment.

As soon as he had been commissioned, Chang set out to do battle with the Jap imperialists. With an armored unit, he fought through the Honan and Nanfung campaigns in 1938, in Kwantung province during '39, and in Kwansi the next year.

By 1941 he was due for a change of duty from incessant combat. Sent to training areas as an instructor, Captain Chang brought his three years of fighting experiences to bear on the re-organization of China's armies.

In September 1942, the tank unit of which he was an officer was alerted to depart for the Burma front. But Chang, instead; was ordered to the United States as military observer. His old outfit consists of these now resisting Jap forces in the upper Salween valley.

TO FORT KNOX

At the Armored Force School, Fort Knox, Ky., he spent six months attending three officers courses—tank maintenance, communications, and tactics — of the five offered there. Then he took to the field with an Armored Division.

From one and one-half months' maneuvers in Tennessee, where he served as observer, Captain Chang reported to Capt. Joseph H. Martin's 3rd Company of the 1st Student Training Regiment here to attend The Infantry School's Officers Advanced Course.

For three months, Chang will go to lectures by military experts and tried veterans of the present war, watch realistic combat demonstrations by troops firing live ammunition and high explosive shells, and work out practical problems in logistics and tactics. Then he hopes to return to China and, with the aid of knowledge gained here, help drive the invaders from his country.

When he isn't fighting or travelling abroad, the Captain's home is in Chungking, capital of wartime China. Typical of the new generation of Chinese Army officers, he is slim, erect, and impeccably uniformed. And his fluent English makes him sound American born and bred.

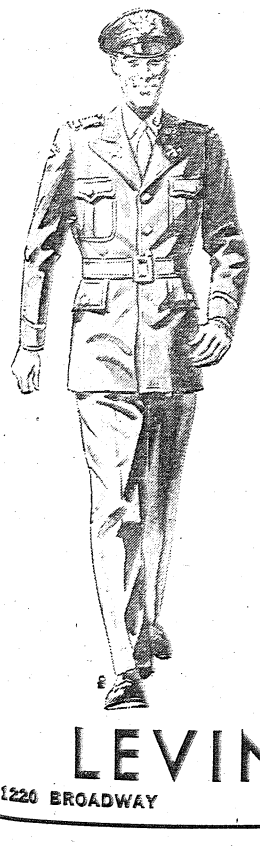
709 Tankers Do Well On Ranges

With this year's range work drawing to a close rivalry and competition is running high among the tankers of the 709th Tank Battalion of The Infantry School. Each platoon leader and tank commander is working for a perfect record for his crew. Company commanders are pointing with pride to the results of their qualification firing records.

Records compiled from scores on the Thompson Sub-machine gun showed a near perfect qualification record of 99.4 per cent of all personnel of the Headquarters Company, Service Company, "C" and "D" Companies, all with 100 per cent qualification.

In the heavy weapons firing the 709th tankers turned in a perfect average with all tank crews firing the prescribed courses with 100 per cent qualification on the 75-mm. and 105-mm. guns.



"D" Company, which is the light tank company, heads all companies with an enviable record of 100 per cent qualification for all men who fired courses for the Thompson Sub-Machine Gun, .30 Cal. Carbine, .30 Cal. Machine Gun vehicular, .50 Cal Machine Gun vehicular, and the 37-mm. tank gun.

3rd STR Rifles Boast Ace Courtmen for League Race

Star-Studded Entry Coached By Pair Of Ex-Ohio Luminaries

The Third Student Training Regiment's red, white and blue clad basketeers will take the court against the Fourth Training Regiment in their opening game of The Infantry School Conference on December 16, at 7:30 p. m. in the Harmony Church Sports Arena.

The Rifles, composed of former high school and college stars have been working out under the direction of Lieutenant Carl Ott, assisted by Lieutenant Edward W. Moeller.

"MOST VALUABLE"

Ott starred in basketball at Hamilton (Ohio) High school, and at the University of Ohio. In his junior and senior years, both in high school and college, he was named on the All-Ohio State team and voted the most valuable player in the 1941 Madison Square Garden Invitation Tournament in which they were defeated in the finals by Long Island University.

The Rifle tutor coached the 1942 Camp Wheeler team which won the Georgia Semi-pro Tournament in Atlanta and the U.S.O. League in Macon. Again he was voted the most valuable player in the League.

EX-BUCKEYE

Moeller starred at the Delaware-Willis High School, Delaware, Ohio, and at Ohio State University. He also played on the Camp Wheeler team along with Ott.

Ray Sundquist of Hoquiam, Washington, starred three years at Washington State College, where he was picked on the All-Northern Division and All-Pacific Coast teams. He was captain of the team that finished second in the National Intercollegiate Athletic Association in 1941, being named All-American Guard at that time.

ALL-AMERICAN

Herman Millikan, Maryville (Missouri) High School star was selected on the Helms Foundation All-American team in 1942 after three years of outstanding play at Oklahoma A. and M.

Other members of the squad include Harold Rembold from the Wayne (Nebraska) State Teachers College where he starred in both basketball and track; Raymond Maggard, who won a scholarship to U. C. L. A. as a pole vaulter at the Lincoln High School in Los Angeles; Frank Thomas, University of California; Lonnie Bland, Shamrock (Texas) High School and six years with the Twentieth Infantry team; Sydney Silverman, Rifle firstbaseman the past season, who played with the Warrensburg (Missouri) State Teachers College, two years M. I. I. A. champs; Ewell Blackwell, LaVerne College, California; Harry Clingenpeel, Kanawha College, Charleston, South Carolina; and Theodore Cook, Dixon (Ohio) High school.

131st Snipers Get New Togs

By CPL. ROBERT R. JANES

The Snipers, 131st Infantry basketball entrants in the Infantry School Basketball League, will be all decked out in their new uniforms when they take the floor to meet the 3rd STR in their opening game at the Harmony Church Sports Arena, Sunday, December 19 at 2 p. m.

WHITE JACKETS

While taking their practice throws the boys will wear their new white jackets with "The Snipers" lettered across the back in a combination blue and white lettering. The regimental insignia will be worn on the front of the jackets.

When the starting five takes the floor without their jackets the "131" supporters and the rest of the spectators will get their first look at the new white suits with blue trimming. The jerseys carry "131st Infantry" in a blue and white lettering across the front with a three-inch letter below. On the back are a combination blue and white eight-inch player number.

SQUAD OF 15

The Snipers have been having practices for the past three weks on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evening and are rapidly whipping into a fast-stepping, hustling aggregation. Lt. A. B. Pawlina, 131st coach, is concentrating his final practices more on defensive than offensive play and will cut the squad to fifteen men for the opening game.

"I won't say the Snipers will finish in first place, but if they play the brand of ball they have displayed in pre-season workouts, they'll win the title," says Coach Pawlina. "Win or lose, they'll be in there fighting all the way and make plenty of trouble for the other seven clubs in the league.

TIS Courtmen Prep For League Opening

Leaders Enter Circuit Under Banner of ASTP

Headquarters Quint Replaces 5th T. R. As Season Looms

One change in the line-up of The Infantry School Basketball League has been announced by Maj. Harry Gowdy, Special Service Officer of the school.

The ASTP Headquarters Leaders will replace the team from the 5th Training Regiment of the ASTP Training Center and will play all of the games assigned to the 5th.

The Leaders last year represented the Second Student Training Regiment and after a dismal showing in the first half, went on to win the second half championship in a walk and then bested the Academic Profs in a three-game title play-off.

MEN TRANSFEERED

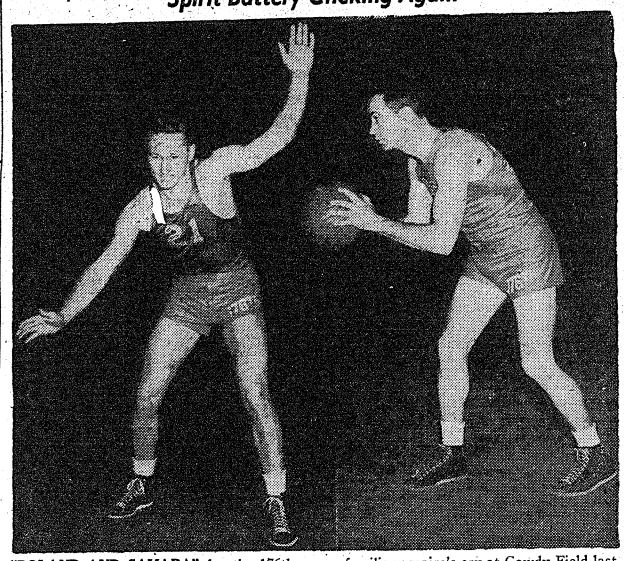
With the Second Regiment inactivated, some of the members of the team were transferred to Headquarters of the ASTP.

After a few practices, they discovered additional talent and made a belated start with a bang-up team that at the moment appears to be the dark horse in the league which will play its first games December 16. The Leaders recently took over the strong Parachute School quintet and it was after this victory that Major Gowdy tendered them an application to step into the fast company of the TIS circuit.

OPEN WITH SNIPERS

Their opening game will be against the 131st Infantry Snipers in the nightcap of the opening twin bill at the Harmony Church Sports Arena.

The big noise of the opening night is expected at the Main Post gymnasium where the 176th Spirits and 300th Sabers, fresh from a pair of stirring football battles, will tangle in the second game of the double header.



The first part of the opening program at the Main Post should provide another battle, this one between the Academic Profs and the 6th Regiment Eagles, coached by Frank Shannon who piloted the Profs last year.

PRE-SEASON DOPE

Around the post, basketball dopesters have picked the Eagles or Spirits to win the first half with the Profs for third place. But the advent of the Leaders and some powerful talent in the 3rd STR Rifle line-up promise to discredit these choices.

And of course the newcomers, the 131st Snipers, and the 4th Regiment team along with the untried 300th Sabers are apt to have a wallop which pre-season doping has not taken into account.

Spirit Battery Clicking Again

"POLAND AND SAHARA" for the 176th was a familiar umpire's cry at Gowdy Field last summer when the Spirits captured the post diamond title with the little southpaw pitcher heaving them to the husky sparkplug catcher. The same battery is shown above in different raiment as they prep for the TIS court season as members of the 176th quintet. Sparky Sahara, a great defensive player, is on the left, and Walt Poland, sharpshooting forward and veteran of last year's Spirit quint is on the right. (Official U. S. Army Photo—The Infantry School.)

Nehi Reds, Rucker Quintets Invade Post Gymnasium

Two exciting exhibition court battles are on top in the post gymnasium for the next four days. Friday night at 9:15, the Academic Profs and their long-time Columbus rivals, the Neho Reds, will collide in their annual battle of baskets. That tilt will be preceded by a game between the 300th Infantry and the Parachute School at 8 o'clock.

On Sunday afternoon at 3:30, Camp Rucker will invade the post hardwood for a clash with the 300th Sabers in an inter-camp tussle. A Benning intra-mural clash will provide the preliminary at 2 o'clock. Both twin bills are expected to draw large crowds as the league campaign looms.

Prasse of Profs Played With Oshkosh All-Stars

Academic Ace Was Member of World Championship Pro Quintet in 1942

By SGT. WALTER MILLER

When the Academic Regiment Profs get some much-needed practice tomorrow night while trying to bottle the Nehi Reds at the post gym, Benning fans will see in action one of the nation's top court pros who has played against all of the best in basketball.

Erwin T. Prasse, three-letter man from Iowa U., was one of the mainstays of the Oshkosh world's champions back in the days when a uniform was something strictly athletic.

Prof. Prasse first earned really national acclaim on that thrilling November 26th of 1940 when the Collegiate All-Stars, including Iowa's guard sensation, shaded the world's champ Harlem Globetrotters by two points in an overtime period. The classic match—which drew an all-time crowd of 23,000 to Chicago Stadium—was just the beginning of Prasse's career on the pro level, but he still remembers it as the most exciting game of his life.

JOINS OSHKOSH

Nobody was much surprised when the Oshkosh All-Stars, already strong with men like Cowboy Edwards and Charlie Shipp, added Prasse to their line-up. After pocketing the National Pro-League title the All-Stars came within two points of the '40-'41 world's crown, losing to the Detroit Eagles in the last thirty seconds of play. But the following year the Oshkosh five got the range of the Eagles, kept them within their sights, and winged them for the world's basketball championship.

Prasse was an All-American end from Iowa in 1939 and has played both college, pro and Army baseball, but he prefers the court to the gridiron and the diamond. The three-game-a-week Infantry School League schedule getting under way next week will be a familiar pace for Prasse, who tore through 80 games or more a season while with Oshkosh, which, incidentally, lost only eight games in its championship year.

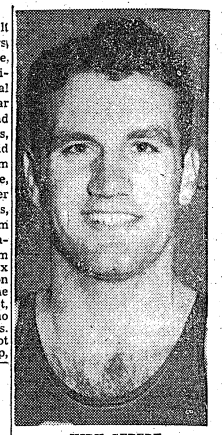
HOW THEY RANK

The Infantry School competition will put some of the country's greatest on the floor of the Benning main post gym and sports arena, and when the TIS teams take the wraps off their squads maybe Prasse will see some familiar faces. But until he's tangled with the Army's stars, he still ranks Johnny Townsend, Chuck Chuckovits and Ed Sadowski as the top men he's played against. Cowboy Edwards, of his own Oshkosh team, he calls the greatest pivot man of all time, pointing out that the All-Stars used Gene England, All-American center, as a substitute for Cowboy. Herm Witasek, of North Dakota, was one of the fastest men Prasse has ever seen on the floor; Nisket, Riska and Barle were some of the other big names he knew as teammates.

But that was before he played TIS basketball. Prasse expects that this year Maj. Gowdy's local loop will undoubtedly add quite a few "greats" to his list of names to remember and respect.

TWO NEW ROOTERS

And talking about additions—the TIS hoop league gained two new rooters when Prasse became a Prof. Mrs. Prasse, also of Chicago, who resides now with her lieutenant husband in Benning Park, will probably come to all the Prof games, with her little red-headed boy to watch poppa pick 'em off the backboard.



Spirits Build Strong Five From Nucleus of Six-Foot Court Stars

With less than two weeks before the opening game of the Infantry School Basketball league, Coach Kirk Gebert has four practice tests behind his 176th Infantry Spirts and is looking forward to several more. Gebert, an All-American choice at Washington State college, where he captained the 1942 quintet, is in his second year of coaching, having tutored the State frosh last season.

SIX-FOOTERS GALORE

The Spirit five will be built around a nucleus of six-footers, including Jim Weir, a six-five, 212-pounder from Wyoming University, winner of the National Collegiate Tournament last year and All-American on Grantland Rice's mythical team; Leo Mogus, six-four, an end on the Spirit grid squad and four-year star from Youngstown U. in Ohio; Marv Lee, six-three, two season performer on UCLA's court; Leo Phillips, promising center, hailing from Cold Spring, Minnesota; Bob Waterfield, six-one football ace from UCLA, and Sparky Suchara, six even, well known diamond star on the 176th championship nine. The above group averages six feet, three inches and should cause no end of worry to opposing mentors.

As yet, Coach Gebert has not chosen a definite starting lineup, but certainly Weir and Lee will be on the floor when the opening whistle blows on December 16 as the Spirits face the 300th Sabers. Mogus looks to be the most dependable pivotman, while Joe Novocal, a rugged Farrell (Pa.) cager and Roy Stout, product of Anderson, Ind., may hold down the guard berths.

KIRK GEBERT
. . . former Washington State court All-American tutors Spirits.

GOOD RESERVES

As reserves, the set-up calls for Gebert, Waterfield, Johnny Hamlin, late of Murray State, Suchara, George Petriska of Conebaugh, Pa., Johnny Sweeney, East Pittsburg,; Walt Poland, ex-baseballer from the Smokey City, and Buck Konopasek, from Griffin, Ind. The last five named boast several years of high school and club experience.

Grid Guessers Cop 6 Prizes

Winners in the BAYONET's football results guessing contest for the past two weeks were as follows:

Pfc. Joseph Novacal of the 176th Infantry won first prize of $15 in the contest for the week of November 21, while Major S. A. Milliken of the Tactics Section, TIS, won a $7 second prize and Sgt. B. J. Young of Company A, Academic Regiment, won the $3 third prize.

For the week of Nov. 29 Sgt. A. J. Harris, Hq. Det., Sec. 1, took the $15 first prize; Pvt. Anthony d'Amato of Service Company, 15th Parachute Infantry, won second prize of $7, and Pvt. Darcy Harris, 1st Company, 4th ASTP Training Regiment, was awarded the $3 third prize.

709th Tankers Win First Three Games

The cagers of the 709th Tank Battalion of the Infantry School, after some preliminary loosening and warm-up competition among the teams of their own battalion have ventured away from home grounds and sought outside competition.

Proportionately as the keenness of competition increases, the 709th team figures to perfect the evident flaws of its game and to maintain its clean slate.

Elmer Riddle Might Have Been Embarrassed But What About O. C. Who Didn't Recognize Him?

Officer Candidate Bob Borman of the Infantry School is an ardent baseball fan and will argue the merits of his beloved White Sox though hundreds of miles from Comiskey Park. However, after a recent occurrence, Borman hopes that his Chisox and American league loyalty will not again have to stack up against that deadliest of persuaders, a woman's tongue.

At a steak house on the outskirts of Columbus, Borman was engaged in a heated debate with a fellow 14th Company candidate, Dwight Sargent, a Boston Braves fan. The two, arguing the merits of the American and National leagues, finally brought up the topic of pitching superiority.

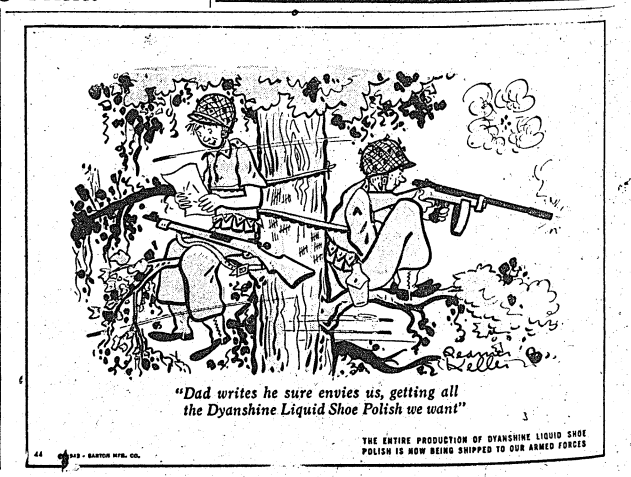
Borman was particularly outspoken on the matter. A lady and her male companion at the next table appeared greatly interested in the debate, too. At this moment, Borman summed up his judgment of National league pitching, to wit:

"The National league has nothing but a washed-up bunch of cruller arms!"

ELMER RIDDLE

At this remark, the interested lady's cheeks turned red and she hastily shouted:

"Pardon me, soldier, but I think the National league has the finest pitchers!"



Borman, a bit stymied by the interruption, returned in a somewhat chivalrous tone: "Pardon me, lady, but are you a Brooklyn fan?"

"No", came the reply, "I'm a Cincinnati fan!"

The chivalrous tone was not present when Borman queried: "Well, just who is a good pitcher on the Cincinnati Reds?"

"My husband!" was the proud reply. A deliberate finger was pointed across the table to a tall, well-bronzed chap who could hardly suppress his embarrassment. The husband was none other than Elmer Riddle, star pitcher of the Cincinnati Reds and president of Columbus during the winter months.

Borman gulped his coffee and centered his interest on carving the steak before him. Sargeant happily and loudly reviewed Riddle's "fair" season of 21 victories.

Rockets Upset Tuskegee In Benefit Grid Battle

TIS Truck Regiment Eleven Wins Over Tigers In Thriller, 19-13

By SGT. HARRY M. SMYLES

Fresh from their victory over Florida Normal the previous week, the Truck Regiment Rockets of the Infantry school proved too much for the mighty Golden Tigers of Tuskegee institute last Friday night in Memorial stadium before 5,000 fans and the soldier eleven handed the collegians their second loss of the season, 19-13.

The game between the Fort Benning Service Conference eleven and the famed Southern Conference leaders was a benefit affair with proceeds going to the 9th Street Branch of the YMCA-USO in Columbus.

Although the first half was scoreless, the passing of Tuskegee's Alva Tabor who officiates over the Tiger T. formation and Otis Head, right-half, for his gains on the ground stood out for the visitors in this half.

EXACTING PLAY

The spectators were constantly on their feet as the Rocket's Bobby Lawson, quarter-back from Kentucky, Cecil Coulter, full back from Newton, North Carolina, and Jimmy Wilson, right-half from Gainesville, Florida, picked up big gains along the ground. Coulter and Lawson's passes to Chester Jones, end from Lane College and Howard Huett, end from Akron, frequently connected for sizeable gains through the air.

Walter R. Bennett, Jr., ex-line coach at South Carolina State College now serving in the same capacity for the Rockets worked hard at teaching his men to break up the highly vaunted T-formation. He was in there at guard, leading the way, charging constantly ably assisted by Kennith Birch, rugged, fast left guard from Springfield, Massachusetts, Joseph (60 minute-man) Bennett, right guard from St. Augustine College in North Carolina, Andrew Mayo, tackle from Mather Academy in South Carolina and Willie Thomas, tackle from Pennsylvania.

JONES STARS

Rocket Captain, Clearance "Po" Jones, former Lane College captain, was in there in his dual role of safety on defense and center on offense despite a leg injury that has bothered him for the last two games.

The Rockets first tally came early in the third period when Lawson ripped over right guard, cleared the secondary with nice blocking by Kinzer, Wilson and Coulter; and made his way down the side-lines to the 19 yard-line, a dash of about 40 yards. Then seeing that he was about to be forced out-of-bounds and timing himself perfectly, he flicked a lateral to Jimmy Wilson, who went the remaining 19 yards to chalk up the first score of the evening. Cecil Coulter hit the line for the extra point but fell short of making it.

SEE-SAW BATTLE

It was somewhat of a see saw tiff until the closing moments of the third period when the Rockets started the offensive which set up their second tally. Left-half John Johnson, former Lane College great, shot bullet-like over center from the Tiger 45 for 9 yards and Lawson sped wide around right end subtracting 12 more. Coulter faded and threw a beautiful pass to Howard Huett who gathered it in as it floated right through a Tiger's outflung arms, stepping into the end zone. Lawson's attempt at conversion was blocked and the score stood 12-0.

As the teams changed goals going into the fourth quarter, it was evident that the Tigers were far from beaten. Like a tiger they had become more dangerous when wounded. Albert Crawford and James Burton, Tiger backs collaborated, picking up 8 yards apiece to the midfield stripe. Then Burton took a pass behind the line from Tabor, and came around left end for 13 more. Passes from Tabor to Charles Perry brought them down to the 10 yard line, Perry snagging one from Tabor to score. Tabor converted and the score became 12-7.

WILSON RUNS 51 YDS.

The Rockets scored their final tally when shifty Jimmy Wilson went over left tackle spinning and twisting his way 51 yards to the goal chalking up his second touchdown of the evening. This time Bobby Lawson converted and the score went up, Rockets 19, Tuskegee 7.

On the Rocket 40, Tabor intercepted Coulter's pass intended for Huett. Then on the very next play he passed a 25-yard flipper to Furness Miller, Tiger right-end, who was downed on the 3 yard line. Tabor and Miller completed their very efficient job of evening things up when Miller took Tabor's pass in the end zone, seconds later. Tabor then attempted to pass the extra point but it was knocked down, and the score stood 19-13.

In the closing minutes of the game the spectators were treated with still another exciting ramble by Jimmy Wilson that was good for 20 yards after he had intercepted one of Tabor's long passes. The game ended with Tabor lofting a 35 yard pass in the direction of the Rocket goal.

The Rockets, coached by Lt. Joseph D. A. Dihmond, former All-Conference full-back from Hampton Institute, will travel to Savannah, Georgia this week-end to engage in a return meeting with the Florida Normal and Industrial Institute's "Lions" in a benefit game.

Gremlin Gridders Awarded Letter 'G'

Members of the Fort Benning Gremlins, the Boy's Activities grid squad which concluded its campaign Sunday with a win over Edgewood County School, were awarded varsity letters in a ceremony at the Officer's Club last night.

Guest speaker at the occasion was Col. William H. Hobson, commanding officer of the post. The program was under the supervision of Lt. Col. Virgil E. Ney of the Infantry School, who heads the boy's sports program on the post.

Hospital Makes Staff Changes

Changes in three major administrative posts at the Station Hospital were announced Tuesday by Col. William L. Starnes, commanding officer of the hospital.

Major Wallace M. Johnson, formerly director of dietetics, has been named executive officer, succeeding Maj. Burton P. Grimes, who has been transferred to another station. Lt. Thomas F. Hanley, assistant director of dietetics succeeds Major Wallace as director of dietetics.

Capt. Willie A. Ruff, formerly adjutant of Station Hospital No. 2 in the Harmony Church area, has assumed the post of adjutant at the Station Hospital, succeeding Lt. Col. Donahue L. Emerson, who has been transferred to Cushing General Hospital at Framingham, Mass.

Capt. Alta Berninger has arrived at the Station Hospital from another station to assume the post of chief nurse, succeeding Major Ruth Anderson, who also has been transferred to Cushing General Hospital. Major Anderson, a veteran of more than 25 years service in the Army Nurse Corps, and who has served in many parts of the world, is one of the few Army nurses who now hold the rank of major.

FEED SUPPLIES

During the past year government-owned wheat has been a major source of feed. More than 400 million bushels of wheat were fed to livestock in the year ending September 1943, a much larger quantity than in any previous year, the Agricultural Extension Service reports.

131st Infantry Adopts Snipers As New Name

Now add the "Snipers" to the "Spirits" and the "Sabers" at Fort Benning.

The "Snipers" was officially adopted as the nickname of the 131st Infantry Regiment with the edition this week of the newspaper, formerly entitled "The Infantry News," with the name "The Sniper" at the masthead.

The paper announced that now "The Snipers" would be the name for the regimental athletic teams that will participate in Infantry School Sports Conferences. The 131st Infantry, located in the Harmony Church area, is the newest addition to the regiments at Fort Benning used for problems and school troops by The Infantry School. The "Saints" refers to the 176th Infantry while the "Sabers" refers to the 300th Infantry Regiment.

The new name was selected after a contest which ended in award to Pvt. Joseph Salomone of the Medical Detachment for another name all together—"The Bombshell." It was thought by the judges that it was the best name for the paper, but "due to the fact that the name didn't suggest anything about the Infantry and didn't have enough suitable editorial qualities, it was declared second place winner." The new name, "The Sniper," was suggested by a member of the paper's staff, so he was ineligible to receive the prize.

Excessive Gas Stickers Ordered Off Windshields

Here's a bit of good news for those of you who have been wondering what to do if you had to add any more stickers to your windshield—you can actually remove one or perhaps two now.

In fact, you're really supposed to hurry right out and do it, believe it or not. Yes, sir, new rules have come through regarding displaying of gasoline coupon stickers on windshields, it is announced today by Sgt. Louis Lipp, secretary of the Fort Benning branch of the Muscogee County Rationing Board.

Hereafter, only the sticker showing the highest denomination can be displayed. That means that if you have "A" and "B" and "C" stickers, or you have up "A" and "B" or "A" and "C" stickers, you must display only the highest one.

So, you lucky drivers who have auxiliary gas coupon stickers, you can dash right out and remove the "A" sticker from your windshield, thereby giving yourselves a tiny bit more room through which to see.

Miss Julia Tribble Is New Hostess, Service Club No. 3

Miss Julia Trimble of Russellville, Ky., is the new recreational and social hostess for Service Club No. 3 in the Harmony church area it was announced by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, Post Special Service Officer.

She will assist Miss Mildred Cawthen, director of the service club, in the recreational program and will be in charge of the guest house.

WACS Volunteer For Yule Duty

Seven Jewish members of WAC Detachment, Station Complement, Section I, Fort Benning, have asked to be put on all company detail on Christmas Day, and three members of the cadre have volunteered for KP on the holiday.

The Jewish girls are Technicians Fifth Grade Rose Hart, Paula Short, Evelyn Oppenheim, Sylvia Roffis and Florence Kaltin and Privates Vivian LeBrange and Minna Lipkin. They wrote to First Lt. Jeannette E. Miller, commanding officer of the detachment, asking for company duty "to allow those of the Christian faith to enjoy Christmas Day to its fullest extent."

Cadre members, normally exempt from KP, who volunteered for the duty on Christmas are Sgt. Mabel Lane, acting first sergeant; Cpl. Elizabeth Armstrong, assistant supply clerk; and PFC Mildred Brezic, company clerk.

Academic Court Loop All-Star Selections Nucleus of Prof Five

Three Members of Title-Winning Headquarters Co. Team Are Named

By CORP. JOHNSTON C. WOODALL

Selection of an All-Star team from the ranks of the Academic Regimen league, which has just completed a hotly contested schedule, present sa.fairly clear picture of the Profs who will carry the Academic colors in the Infantry school court loop which gets underway next week.

Troy Ricks, who skippered the championship Headquarters Company team and who will coach this year's Profs, was nominated to the all-star squad along with Benny Zientara and Johnny Russo, his team mates. Others selected were: Tony Pirrello and Herb Somerson of Co. A; Sully Sullivan and Wilson Harpe of H Company; Edwin Prasse and Leon McCrary of B Company and Ross Fenno of Company C.

OTHERS MENTIONED

Honorable mention was made of Barrett and Dempsey, Company A; Shell, Company B; Hanson, Company C; J. C. Smith, Capella, Ossi and Holtzclaw, Company D; DeStefano, Company E and H; Prophet and Richards, Company D; and Kelly of Headquarters Co.

Fans are well acquainted with Benny Zientara's fine court play. Last year, Benny was all-post guard—this year he is expected to repeat. The classy Hqs. Co. guard already looks in midseason form. Tony Pirrello was just a darkhorse before the tournament but was a bright star on completion of play. He led in points scored with an individual record of 93. This boy plays a whale of a game and should make it season.

MEATBALL RUSSO

Johnny (Meatball) Russo, the butcher who led the Hqs. quintet to its two most important victories, is nothing short of a wizard on following up the ball with a tally. He spelled the difference between first and second place for Headquarters team, which was hotly pursued by Companies A and H. Herb Somerson, Company A star, not only does everything well on a basketball court but is a fine leader and clean cut fighting player who serves as an inspiration to his teammates.

"Sully" Sullivan, of Company H, is a newcomer to the Regiment. "Sully" has a nice one-hand shot that leaves the net zinging. Troy Ricks, one of the best players on the post, showed the fans how an All-American is supposed to play. His superb demonstration accounted for 92 points (second high score in the tournament) as he led the Hqs. Co. to its second championship.

WORLD CHAMPS

Prasse was good enough for the Oshkosh World's champs, and, By Gosh! he's good enough for the Committee. Perhaps the headiest player ever to cavort on a Benning floor, he is a specialist in taking the ball off a backboard. McCrary, a fine defensive player who scored 61 points to end up number eight in the high-score race, finished the season with H Company, but played all the other games with B Company.

Harpe, H Company's elongated center, bagged 65 points and ended in the sixth spot in the scoring parade. He has a keen eye for the basket and insists on flinging them with one hand from mid-court. Ross Fenno of Company C, was a sizzling fireball in tournament play, netting 68 points as the fourth high scorer, although playing on a second division club.

Last year the Recreational and Social Service Department of the Red Cross prepared Christmas celebrations for the patients of the Main Post (No. 1) hospital only, but the newly completed Station Hospital at Harmony Church (No. 2) makes a double setup necessary for this year.

MORE GIFTS

Twenty-two hundred gifts, all packaged and prepared, are being made ready for donation by three outside cities of the state. Two hundred of these are coming from LaGrange, a thousand from West Point, and a thousand from the United Garden Clubs of Columbus. In addition to this are 2,500 oranges provided by a Florida grower through Catholic Chaplain Wm. H. Hunt.

Money for the purchase of Christmas candy for the stockings have been authorized by Col. Wm. L. Starnes. Additional oranges and individual small gifts are to be provided by the chaplains' fund and the Red Cross respectively.

The shopping assistance for the men in the hospital is to be directly handled by the Grey Ladies of whom Mrs. Hugh G. Elliott is general chairman and Mrs. Charles C. Finnegan assistant, with Mrs. Edgar Bullock co-chairman of the Columbus group. Transportation will be provided for soldiers to get to Columbus to shop before Christmas.

The more seriously ill patients unable to leave their beds are being provided with a method of sending their voice messages to their loved ones. A portable recording set is now being brought to their bedsides for the occasion, a service secured through the efforts of Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, director of personnel. After the recordings are completed each disc will be dispatched at once to the soldier's home, planned to reach there on Christmas Day with its "Merry Christmas" message.

That no one misses the opportunity of being given the American Christmas dinner, the last feature for the day will be a Christmas meal delux provided by the Army for every mess hall on the Post. Following is the menu as announced by Lt. Col. A. H. Veazy, food service supervisor:

Fruit Cocktail—Cream of Celery Soup
Roast Turkey—Sage Dressing
Mashed Potatoes—Giblet Gravy
Steamed Rice
Cranberry Sauce—Mixed Pickles
Celery Hearts
Creamed Corn—Green Peas
Tomato and Lettuc Salad with Mayonnaise
Pumpkin Pie—Ice Cream—Cookies
Hot Rolls—Butter—Crackers
Lemonade—Coffee

CHAPEL–

and then to the Main Chapel for the midnight services.

On Christmas Day the Children's Choir will don vestments and sing in the Station Hospital at 10 a. m.

Mrs. Methvin expressed her delight that the choir includes on its roster two such artists as Mrs. Putt and Pvt. Dix.

Mrs. Putt is known to the concert and opera world as Hazel Hayes, the dramatic soprano. She has appeared in "Tosca," "Lohengrin," "Tannhauser," "Aida" and many other operas. She has also been soloist with the Boston and Philadelphia Symphony orchestras. She will sing Adams' "O Holy Night" and other numbers in the Cantata.

Pvt. Dix, now stationed in the Harmony Church area, came to the Army from a film career. He took leading roles in several pictures including his latest "Best Foot Forward." Pvt. Dix is also considered a fine musician having held a scholarship in the High School of Music and Arts in New York and later the John Charles Thomas fellowship at Julliard.

While in Hollywood he continued vocal work under top-knotch masters. He will sing the beautiful solo "So Appears Thy Natal Day" in the Bach cantata.

Mrs. Methvin again extend an invitation to experienced singers on the post to sing with the choirs. Rehearsals for the senior choir are held at the chapel at 8 p. m. EWT Fridays.

Office of the Assistant Commandant, The Infantry School; Emory M. Shipley, Automotive Section, The Infantry School; Mrs. Marie G. Lemon, 3rd Student Training Regiment, The Infantry School, and Miss Mattie Bagley, The Parachute School.

Army Service Forces personnel representatives were Fred Whitaker, superintendent of the Fort Benning Railroad Roundhouse, who made a speech of acceptance on behalf of all civilian employees; William J. Blair, Quartermaster Corps; Miss Minnie Powell, Medical Department; Miss Jennie M. Robinson, Adjutant General Department; Miss Mary E. Reynolds, Fiscal Department; Mrs. Clara M. Zehrbach, Ordnance Department (Automotive); Ray S. Miller, Ordnance Department (Armament); W. A. Ford, Post Engineer, and Elbert O. Martin, Area Engineer.

Air Force personnel cited were Mrs. Mildred Bellman, Army Air Service Forces; C. A. Parker, Army Air Service Forces, and Miss Esther Feinberg, Lawson Field.

General Bonesteel recalled "the long and honorable' history of civil service in this country and its increasing importance today in the functioning of the United States Government.

"Today we are gathered here to recognize in a fitting and public manner your essential part in the winning of the war," General Bonesteel said.

He expressed regret that he could not decorate each Army Ground Forces employee individually.

Colonel Hobson hailed the close cooperation of civilians and army personnel in the Army Service Forces' work of serving the other branches of the army at Fort Benning. He pointed out that although the Emblem of Civilian Service denotes at least six months "faithful and continued employment with the War Department," the average employment by the 2,500 Army Service Forces cited for the award was in excess of two years each, and that 93 of them have served the War Department more than 10 years.

Major Christner emphasized that in total war, every citizen has a job to perform.

The colorful ceremonies were opened when an army airplane dropped the emblems by parachute into the stadium, while the 300th Infantry Band played. Then in a demonstration of the "man behind the man behind the gun," a group of soldiers marched across the field, with representative civilians in the garb of railroad engineer, telephone lineman and laboratory technicians, moving behind them.

After mass singing of "God Bless America" and music from the Lawson Field Band and the Reception Center Band, the Master of Ceremonies, Col. Jack L. Meyer, Director of the Supply and Service Division at Fort Benning, introduced Con Frank M. Thompson, Chief, Chaplains Branch, who spoke the invocation.

Following presentation of the Emblems of Civilian Merit, several hundred troops and WACs passed in review before the "soldiers in mufti," tendering them the army salute of "eyes right" as they passed the reviewing stand.

The program concluded with the singing of "America" by the entire group.

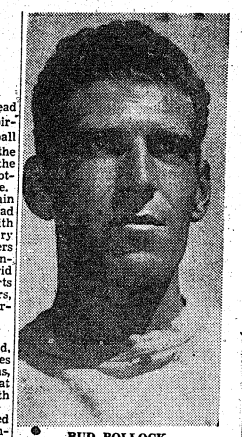
The Brown Bomber has fought 56 battles, winning 47 of them by knockouts and seven on decisions. One other he won by a disqualification and the final bout was his lone defeat at the hands of Max Schmeling via a 12th round knockdown on June 19, 1936.

Pollock Names 3 Sabers On All-Opponent Eleven

Simmons, Routt And Allen Are Honored

Captain Bud Pollock, head coach of the 176th Infantry Spirits, 1943 Infantry School football champions, was impressed by the showing of his club during the year and thinks that Army football was a big factor in morale.

As a parting note, the captain picked an all-opponent grid squad that he considered an equal with any in the nation. The honorary eleven was dominated by players from Southwestern Louisiana Institute's great undefeated grid machine, augmented by stalwarts from the 300th Infantry Sabers, the 124th Gators and Miami Hurricanes.



PICKS SIMMONS

"As ends, I think Saxon Judd, SLI and former Tulsa star, rates at the top with Al Simmons, 300th flankman, who caught that final pass in our last game with the Sabers.

There were a lot of rugged tackles, but SLI's Henry Armstrong and Jack McKewan from the 124th get my vote. Joe Routt of the Sabers and Weldon Humble, SLI, rate as the guards, with Bill Blackburn of SLI as my center.

ALLEN AGAIN

"The backs are a lot harder to choose, but I think four of the best were Al Dark and Virgil Eikenberg, two of SLI's real stars and a couple that I hope we never face again. Surely Ermal Allen proved himself in the last Saber game and Miami's Arnold Tucker is one of the reasons for that defeat a couple of weeks ago."

Ex-Spanish Loyalist Says Nazis Are No Supermen

One year after the United States entered the war, a sea-battered freighter dropped her rusty anchor in Baltimore's jets-filled harbor. Leaning on the port rail, gazing at the jagged outline of the city's skyline, Luis Jose Garcia made a pledge. "Never will I return to Spain, this country I look upon now, she will be my home."

Today, at 24 years, already an "old" soldier, Luis Garcia is again in uniform, this time one of his own choosing, that of a United States parachutist—a far cry from his previous military duty's with the Spanish Republican Army, and "enforced" duty with Franco's legions.

Luis Garcia was born in Oviedo, not far from Gijon, bastion of the Republicans early in the war. He was one of four brothers. His mother and father were both factory workers in Gijon, and Luis attended schools in Oviedo and Gijon until 1936 when Spain flamed into revolt against a decadent monarchy 500 years old.

When hostilities broke out, Luis, just 17, wanted to fight, but his older brother would not allow it. Undismayed by this rebuke, Luis sneaked aboard the troop train, and slid under his brother's chair and in this style arrived at the gathering place of the Republicans. When found, instead of being shipped back to Gijon, Luis was given a uniform of sorts and made a messenger for the commanding officer, under whom Luis's brother served as a lieutenant.

LOYALISTS WITHDREW

One assault on the area of Guernica had been beaten off, but in April, Franco renewed the attack, and this time utilizing the Germans and Italians to a greater extent drove the Republicans from Guernica.

"It was in this battle that 'Stukas' were used by the Fascists," Luis said. "We had nothing to combat such tactics with, the city was ruined, and our forces were put to flight. Driven from Guernica, the Republicans, as Luis described with typical latin gestures was "Retreat, retreat, driven back, always back, finally we are driven into Gijon. I try to escape by boat, but, there are no boats." After the fall of Gijon Luis was taken prisoner by the Francoites, and thrown in prison.

"In this concentration camp I saw old men, men who have not many years to live, men who could be of no harm to the Fascists, die of starvation. I was young, and soon I was 'free' but freedom was nonexistent now. Every day I had to report to the police. Not long after this I was summoned for military training. I was sent to Leon, and after a month of cleaning officers' boots, German and Italian mostly, I shipped to Teruel."

TERUEL LOST

There a vigorous drive by the "Republican New Army" gained them the capital of Teruel. But with spring Franco utilized his foreign allies and battled his way to victory in Teruel.

"Just before this battle," Luis said, "my commanding officer called me out of ranks, and told me 'You are a Republican, but you will fight for El Caudillo—or your people will be shot.' There was nothing I could do, except possibly be a poor marksman."

Going with the victorious Fascist forces Louis saw the country laid waste before the weight of the German and Italian mechanized onslaught; Catalonia and Leriday fell and finally Spain was cut in two by the capture of Castellone and Tortesa. In 1939 Luis saw all the hopes of the Republicans slip away, when, after a bitter struggle, Barcelona fell.

Luis Garcia was kept in Franco's army until 1941, at which time he was demobilized with thousands of others. His country was in ruins, there was no work, no food. Luis wished to leave Spain. Going to the Canary Islands, he found that the same conditions prevailed.

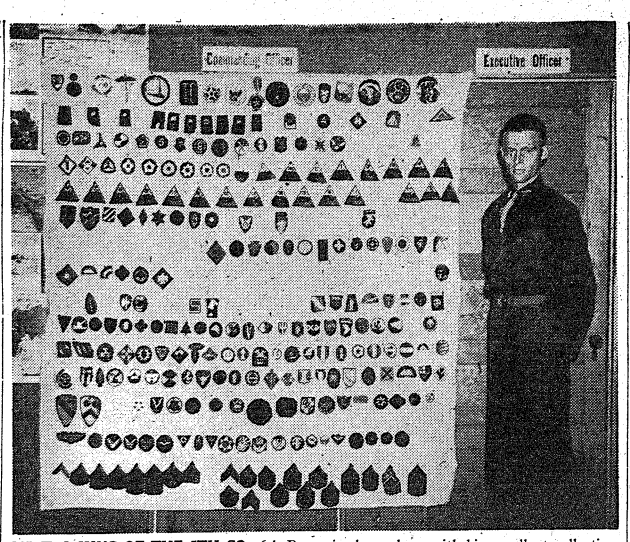
"For three months, I ate once every three days", Luis remarked ruefully. Returning to Gijon, where his father and brother were still living, his mother and another brother having been killed in the factory, Luis prevailed upon a friend of the family to give a job on a ship sailing for America.

ENTERS USA

Coming to America in the spring of 1942, Luis found that he was not allowed to enter the United States because of immigration laws. However, undaunted by his first failure, Luis returned in November 1942 and this time was allowed to come into the country.

"I remember how I felt when I walked up the streets of Baltimore for the first time. It was like lifting great weights from my body. I smile now when I think how I reacted to the first American policeman I saw. Force of habit made me cringe when he walked by me, I pressed myself against a building hoping he wouldn't see me. He saw me alright, but smiled and passed on by—whistling!

Knowing what was coming in Europe, and sensing this country would be in it soon, Luis tried to get back into a uniform, succeeding only when the law against aliens was lifted in 1942. He received his basic training at Fort McClellan, Ala., and then asked for a transfer to the paratroops immediately on completing his basic training.



TAKES UP TORCH AGAIN

"I cannot express myself in your language to tell you just what this opportunity means to me," Pvt. Garcia said. "I did not come to the paratroops for adventure. I came to get into the fight which I had to leave in 1937 when I was a prisoner of the Fascists." Pvt. Garcia said he appreciated this country, this army "where officers speak and smile at you, instead of beating you with a whip, or cursing you."

"As for your training, simply it is the best. I fought with and against the Fascist. He is no superman. At Guadalajara I watched Italians cringe with fear at handfuls of "Internationales". I've known German tank crews to surrender quickly when they saw companion tanks attacked with 'Molotoff Cocktails'. At the Ebro I've seen what men with ideals and desire for the right can do against all the power of dictators."

"Our path is clear, we will eradicate those master men. And who knows, maybe someday Spain will become a country of which people will be proud to be a part. Before that can happen of course, Fascism must go."

Pvt. Luis Garcia will be a qualified parachutist in two weeks. He will have taken a big step towards renewing his fight for the freedom that all Americans cherish.

Shoulder-Patch Collection Is ASTP Officer's Hobby

Collecting shoulder patches is a most disarming hobby, according to 1st Lt. Thomas J. King, of the 5th Co., 6th Regt., who has been building his fine collection for over a year. The bulk of his insignia was gathered from incoming OCs but he has come into possession of many emblems from various other sources by writing to the organizations and to GIs in faraway places.

The collection encompasses all branches of service, armies, corps, service commands, activated Infantry divisions, and defense commands. Also included are the Armored corps and divisions, Cavalry, Marines and several ROTC insignias.

Another section exhibits the emblems of foreign nations—France, Panama, Hawaii, Philippines, and the Persian Gulf Command. In addition the collection contains some World War I patches, the collection is considered one of the most complete assemblies of insignia to be found in the country. In fact, we fact, we have yet to see a better one.

Lt. King has by no means finished, and is very much interested in adding to his collection. To any GI with something in the line of insignia that could be used to supplement the exhibit, we suggest that Lt. King be contacted at 2nd Bn. Headquarters, 6th Regt.

WHO DONE IT?

Big question in the 2nd Company, 6th Regiment, is "who dun it?"

Trying to curb the famed Georgia erosion problem, they set up some nice logs along the walks' . . . only to wake up one morning this week to find that some so and so had bowled over half of the project.

Major Beale Named TIS JA

Headquarters of The Infantry School today announced the assignment of Maj. Edward B. Beale of Rockville, Md., as Judge Advocate of the School, an office which was recently activated.

Major Beale was commissioned in the Officer Reserve Corps in 1922 and remained in it for ten years. He was re-commissioned as a captain and returned to active duty in 1942 in the JAGD. He was graduated from the JAG School in Ann Arbor and has served as Assistant Staff Judge Advocate and Acting Staff Judge Advocate of the 28th Infantry Division and in the JAGD of the Army Service Forces in Washington.

Major Beale is also a graduate of Lehigh University, from whose ROTC he was commissioned and where he earned his Ch.E. degree. He took his LL.B. at George Washington University. In civilian life, he was a member of a Washington law firm and also owned and operated a 350 acre stock farm near Rockville, Md., where his wife now resides. His mother resides in Berkley Springs, West Virginia.

Deadline Nigh For Yule Mail

Better get those Christmas packages into the mail by Friday if you want them to be sure of delivery, Capt. William O'Connell, postal officer at Fort Benning, warned today as he prepared to handle the annual rush of incoming mail at the post.

Preparations included taking over the old 29th Infantry gunshed on Harris circle where parcel post and papers and insured mail will be handled.

Organizations through the post have already assigned a total of 76 extra men to help handle the incoming mail and another 75 probably will be added before Christmas. The men are working on two shifts of 12 hours in order to handle the Christmas mail.

HOME DELIVERY

Next week the Army post office and the Fort Benning branch of the Columbus post office will begin house to house deliveries for officers quartered on the post, Capt. O'Connell announced.

The Army post office also will furnish nine trucks for the Columbus post office this year, and another 17 trucks will be used for hauling mail from Columbus to the post.

This year full cars of mail for the post will be routed directly to the Fort, in order to speed up delivery, he stated. This also will save on gasoline and tires, it was pointed out.

INTER-STATE MAIL

Postal authorities all through the country have campaigned to get inter-state mail sent out by December 10 this year, and the early mailing from all over the country to Fort Benning personnel already is being felt. Personnel also are asked to send out their packages by the 10th in order to assure their delivery by Christmas.

Ex-Officers Club's Famous Chef Now At Plaza Cafe

"Primo," as he is most generally called, became known by thousands of officers during his stay on the post. A native of Switzerland, he learned cooking in the foreign manner, by going through years of study and apprenticeship.

Several of his own recipes have won prizes in the national chef's association, and he frequently won praise from visiting dignitaries for his special menus. He left Fort Benning a few weeks ago.

GATELY COMMANDS

Capt. Thomas C. Gately has been named commanding officer of the 13th Company of The Infantry School's Third Student Training Regiment, succeeding Capt. Louis R. Moore Jr., who has been transferred to the school's Academic Department. In his new duties, Captain Moore will continue in his work of training officer candidates. However his next appearance before the 13th Company will be as instructor rather than the CO.

Have a Coca-Cola = Welcome home

. . . a way to revive old times

He's delighted to find his own room unchanged—everything just as he left it. He's pleased, too, to discover other familiar things, such as, the pause that refreshes with ice-cold Coca-Cola. This happy custom is part of American home life. Yes, for friendly refreshment nothing takes the place of Coca-Cola. Have a "Coke" is the universal invitation to relax and be yourself. For around the world Coca-Cola stands for the pause that refreshes,—has become the familiar greeting of friendly folks.

Coca-Cola
-the global high-sign

It's natural for popular names to acquire friendly abbreviations. That's why you hear Coca-Cola called "Coke".

Modern Warrant Officer Is Child of World War 1

In the last war, the grade most nearly corresponding to our present warrant officer was the field clerk. In 1916, with an eye to the impending increased Army, Congress authorized two types of field clerks, the general administrative for headquarters officers, to be known as Army field clerks, and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps. These field clerks, most of whom had been civilian employees of the War Department in administrative capacities, were put into officers' uniforms with distinctive field clerk grade insignia.

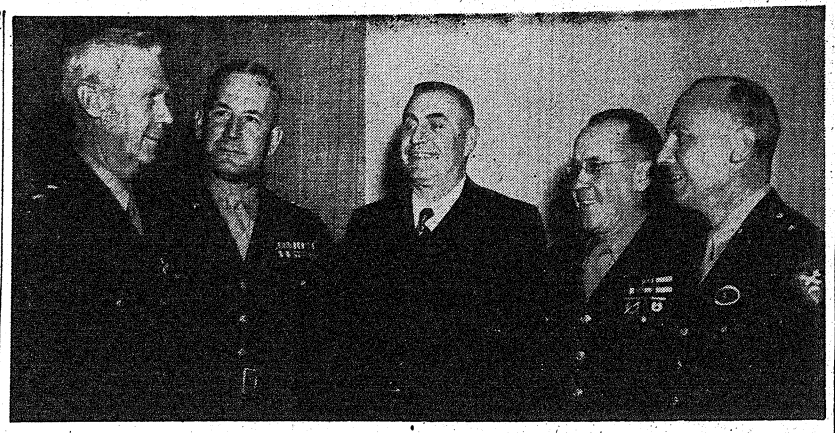
Warrant officers were first created by a congressional law in 1920. The primary purpose of the grade was to reward those veterans of World War I who had held temporary commissions expiring with the end of hostilities. The same law also ended the appointment of additional field clerks.

In 1939 and 1940, the War Department General Staff surveyed the entire warrant officer problem afresh, to determine their place in the new army. This study showed a vital need for expert administrators and technicians, assigned on a permanent, full-time basis to specific positions, who would not be available for additional, extraneous activities.

On the basis of these recommendations, Public Law 230 of the 77th Congress was enacted, authorizing the appointment of warrant officers up to one per cent of the Regular Army's enlisted strength. The bill also authorized the appointment of temporary warrant officers up to one half of one per cent of the strength of the Army of the United States.

1,500 APPOINTED

On the basis of examinations given through the Army in March 1942, 1500 Regular Army appointments were made, the equivalent of the one per cent allowed by law. All vacancies occurring in this group of 1500 will be filled from the current eligible lists in each classification, under the provisions of AR 610-10. This list now contains all who passed the 1942 examination, although it originally carried only the top-ranking men. Those on the former list, originally designated as eligibles and so notified by the War Department, will be the first appointed. No future examinations for Regular Army Warrant Officer appointments are planned, as enough eligibles are available to meet all demands expected during the war.



In addition to the permanent appointments as warrant officer, Regular Army, made as a result of the March 1942 examinations, temporary appointments were made by the War Department to the grade of warrant officer, AUS. Field units are now authorized to give warrant officer examinations for temporary appointments under the provisions of AR 610-15, February 27, 1943.

These examinations are to be oral and practical until the distribution, in the near future, of written, objective-type examinations which the War Department is preparing for each of the 35 warrant officer classifications. In the designing of these new examinations, special attention has been given to the problem of administering and marking them at field units. They will consist of multiple-choice questions, to be answered on a separate sheet which can be machine scored and manually marked. The examinations are planned for a test period of one and three quarters hour, and, when necessary, all 35 examinations can be given in the same room at the same time.

W. O. INSIGNIA

The most recent regulations of interest to warrant officers are C18 to AR 600-35, and C16 to AR 600-40, which direct warrant officers to wear the insignia of the arm or branch to which they are assigned on the service coat or shirt (when worn without coat) instead of the warrant officer wreath formerly authorized. A warrant officer on duty with an Infantry regiment, for example, will wear the Infantry insignia in the same manner as a commissioned officer, except that he will wear the warrant officer emblem on his service cap. The insignia of grade will be worn as heretofore.

Under Tables or Organization now in effect for an Infantry Regiment, there are six warrant officers authorized: assistant adjutant, assistant personnel adjutant, assistant supply officer, assistant munitions officer, assistant maintenance officer, (and if a band is authorized) a warrant officer band leader.

Columbus Men Honor Benning High Officers

Seventy Columbus men, all members of the Chamber of Commerce, participated in a testimonial dinner last week at the Hotel Ralston honoring the commanding officers of Fort Benning, T. G. Reeves, Chamber of Commerce president, presided.

The distinguished guests included Maj. Gen. Charles H. Bonesteel, commandant of the Infantry school; Maj. Gen. Lindsay McD. Silvester, commanding general of the Seventh Armored division; Brig. Gen. Ridgeley Gaither, commandant of the Parachute school; and Col. William H. Hobson, commanding officer at Fort Benning. Lt. Col. John E. Albert, commanding officer of Lawson field, was unable to attend the dinner.

GENERALS SPEAK

A brief address of welcome to the officers was given by Attorney J. Q. Davidson, to which Col. Hobson responded on behalf of the army guests. He paid special tribute to Brig. Gen. Walter Scott Fulton, now retired, whom he succeeded as commanding officer of Fort Benning.

General Bonesteel, General Silvester, and General Gaither also spoke briefly.

It was pointed out by Mr. Reeves that, although the dinner was not given by the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, all the Columbus men present were members of that organization. The purpose of the dinner, he stated, was to give Columbus and Fort Benning men the opportunity of becoming better acquainted with each other.

OFFICERS PRESENTED

In addition to the honored guests the following officers were present, and were introduced by Col. J. P. Edgerly, executive officer at Fort Benning; Brig. Gen. George H. Weems, assistant commandant of the Infantry school; Col. George E. Jacobs, Col. Harold E. Potter, Col. George H. Mooney, Col. Jack L. Meyer, Col. Wilson M. Spann, Lt. Col. J. D. Rosenberger, Jr., Lt. Col. James W. Coutts, Maj. Russell J. Hammargren, and Maj. Frank G. Lumpkin, Jr., member of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, and son of Frank G. Lumpkin, well-known Columbus insurance man.

LADY FEARED JOB WOULDN'T LAST; FORD'S SON GERM AN WAR PRISONER

When Miss Emma Ray Price, secretary to the assistant commandant of The Infantry School, started to work at Camp Benning on May 1, 1919, she was afraid her job wouldn't last long.

Periodically rumors would start that the camp was to be abandoned, and the civilian workers never felt secure about their jobs. These scares continued until the camp was made a permanent post in 1922 and redesignated Fort Benning.

EMMA PRICE

What Miss Price then feared would be only temporary has turned out to be the longest term job on the post. Though there are several other employees who have longer civil service records, they were first employed at other camps and came to Fort Benning after Miss Price did.

At the time of Miss Price's employment, the camp was located about 3 miles from Columbus on the Macon road. Shortly afterwards, it was moved to its present location.

Offices of the post and of the contractors who were building the camp's installations were located in an old wooden building on the site of the present post headquarters. Offices of The Infantry School also were housed in an old wooden building, and troops stationed here were living in tents.

Miss Price was first employed in the office of the constructing quartermaster. She later held jobs with the post inspector and in the Academic Department of The Infantry School. She has held her present position since the fall of 1941.

She lives with her sister, Mrs. L. J. Cumbaa, at 510 20th street, Columbus.

William A. Ford, administrative officer for the Post Engineer at Fort Benning, has gotten used to hard work in more than 27 years of government service, first as a soldier and then as a civil service employee.

But he and his family are working even harder these days, and for a special reason. It is their personal contribution to the war on behalf of 23-year-old William A. Ford, Jr., a prisoner of war in Germany.

WM. FORD

Mr. Ford, in a special ceremony at Fort Benning on September 25, received the Air Medal awarded to his son, a staff sergeant with the 8th Bomber Command, for completion of 10 combat flights over Germany. The order awarding the medal to young Ford had been published on February 7, and he was shot down on February 26, before the medal could be presented to him. He is now a prisoner in Stalag Luft III (Fliers' Prison No. 3), 90 miles southeast of Berlin. The last letter his family received from him was written in June.

Mr. Ford has another son, 17, who is a naval aviation cadet at the University of North Carolina, and a daughter who is a clerk in the Quartermaster's Office at Fort Benning.

A native of Knoxville, Tenn., Mr. Ford's first army service came in June 1916, when he was sent to the Mexican border with the Tennessee National Guard. His service in the first World War began in 1917, and he spent 10 months overseas with the 30th Division, as first sergeant of the 120th Ambulance Company.

He was discharged from the army at Camp Jackson, S. C., in April, 1919, and on the 20th of that month started his civil service career as a clerk in the quartermaster's office at Camp Jackson. The quartermaster there was the man who had been his first sergeant on the Mexican border.

Mr. Ford came to Fort Benning from Jackson in May, 1922, working first in the property section of the quartermaster office. In 1923 he was moved to the transportation section and in 1926 was made principal clerk of utilities. He has been with that section, now designated as the post engineer, ever since.

The Fords live at 2439 Wynnton Road, Columbus.

Flashlight Saves Day – Or Night For Paratroopers

A flashlight saved the day—or night, for men of the Parachute school's communication section. On a tactical jump the other night, a group of parachutists bailed-out into the pitch black of an Alabama night; they also dropped with them their radio sets—or so they thought.

Upon landing in a field, the group proceeded to hunt up their equipment which, it soon became evident, just wasn't to be found.

The lieutenant in charge, knowing the success of the operation depended on establishing communication with other units, as well as feeding his men, broke up his group and began a systematic search of the area.

As the troopers were stumbling off in the darkness of the wild back country, the roar of engines filled the sky. The lieutenant, doing some fast thinking, grabbed the two men in his group who had flashlights with them, and in perfect code he began to signal the plane which, the lieutenant surmised, was the one scheduled to drop the equipment. His hopes waned as the plane seemed to miss the signal, but at that moment, the big cargo plane made another sweep of the field, and this time from its door came tumbling the much sought-after radio equipment, and to the relief of the men, a long-desired hot meal.

Setting up the equipment and establishing connections with the other groups on the problem was no trouble at all, and without much further ado—outside of time out for the "chow" the men were able to write "mission completed" to a job well done—with flashlights.

Wac Det. I Takes Mess 'E' Flag For November

Award of the "E" flag for Fort Benning messes went to WAC Detachment, Section I, for the month of November, it was announced today by Lt. Col. Alexander H. Veazey, mess officer of the post.

Awards are made each month on the basis of conservation of food, good messing, eliminating waste and general excellence. Since the award was instituted four months ago, it has been won by one or the other of the two Bakers and Cooks school messes, but these have now withdrawn from the competition because their mess officers felt that since these messes were more or less "professional."

Think, act, be American!

AER Question Box

Printed below are some of the many letters received by the Army Emergency Relief office on the Main Post at Fort Benning. The questions and the answers are published in this column, a regular weekly feature of this newspaper, because they are believed to be of general interest to dependents of those in the military service. It is suggested that readers clip this column and send it to their wives. Send your questions to Army Emergency Relief office, Fort Benning, Ga.

Q. My husband is a master sergeant overseas and has been sending me a Class E allotment of $75 each month. The last check, however, is several weeks overdue. This has put me behind in the rent, food and other bills. Am I eligible for aid from Army Emergency Relief?—Mrs. J. T. M.

A. Yes. A. E. R. can make you a loan pending receipt of your allotment. Come to the office on the Main Post, bringing with you proof that your husband is in the military service.

Q. My husband, a private at Fort Benning, believes that he will be transferred soon and we think that it would be best if I and the children returned home to Chicago. We haven't the money right now, however, and would like to make a loan. Can this be done?—Mrs. E. L.

A. Have your husband obtain application papers from his commanding officer, approved by the latter, and A. E. R. can make the loan if it can be shown that the money is to be used for the purpose stated. Loans cannot be made to enable a soldier's dependents to follow him from one camp to another.

Q. My son made a loan of $25 at Fort Benning some months ago. He has since transferred to another camp and has been unable to repay the loan. This week he wrote me that his army pay was held up, but didn't say why. Was this because he had not repaid the A. E. R. loan?—Mrs. R. T.

A. No. If his Army pay was held up it must have been for some other reason. A soldier's pay cannot be stopped, nor any deductions made from it, to repay loans made from the A. E. R. It is strictly the moral obligation of any person receiving a loan to make repayment. When loans are repaid it means that other deserving cases can benefit through use of this money.

Q. My husband is stationed at Fort Benning and we have been getting along quite nicely. We have a chance to purchase an automobile but need about $500 more. Can we borrow this from A. E. R.? We can put up excellent security.—Mrs. James E.

A. The matter of putting up security for loans doesn't enter into A. E. R. policy as all. No security is ever asked. Loans are made strictly upon need. The purchase of a car is not considered as being an emergency, hence cannot be made for that purpose.

Don't scatter
Idle chatter.

Gen. Summers Inspects TIS

Brig. Gen. Owen Summers who on a short time ago completed a tour of duty as assistant sector commander of the Trinidad sector and commanding general of the Trinidad Mobile Force, has completed a two weeks' inspection tour of The Infantry School and departed to join the 80th Division.

Outside of his inspection tour, the General was concerned about the problem of supply, the supply, that is, of extra flannel underwear.

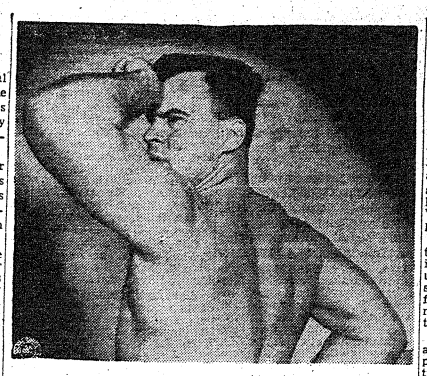
"After 31 months in Trinidad, which, by the way, was very interesting," the General said, "I come back to the States and find I almost have to have some extra red flannels."

The General's itinerary included problems and demonstrations, early and late, one of them a night problem.

Concerning The Infantry School, he said, "My two weeks of inspection here at The Infantry School have been the highlight of my Army experience for the last ten years.

"I have been tremendously impressed with the school and have gotten much of value from my visit. The demonstrations and problems are excellent and it seems that the men are getting just what they need in the training."

Pigeon Officer Goes To Philly



Lt. Arthur M. Lehman, Signal Corps officer who developed the Fort Benning pigeon lofts, has been transferred to the Army Pigeon Service Agency in Philadelphia.

A pigeon breeder and fancier in civilian life, Lt. Lehman was selected to head the pigeon lofts at Fort Benning when an expansion program was decided upon a little more than a year ago.

The lofts are used as one of the three large breeding places for pigeons that are then trained as messengers for various Army units. Many of the birds raised on the Post now are in service overseas. The lofts now house more than a thousand birds.

"MAKE WITH THE MUSCLES, SIBLEY," might be the title of this study in light and shadow. It comes under the next in our list of pictures-we-get-and-wonder-why selection. Careful research among our confidential files fails to reveal the who, what, and why of the story behind the picture. A poll of the Public Relations Office has it a cross between the "Lo! The brave, brave Indian" type of picture and the shy G. I. preparing for shot number 2 of the typhoid series. We found it in our file of Parachute School pictures, so perhaps it's the "after" of one of the troopers who just completed the "A" stage of training. There's even some doubt about that, since Bubbles, our subject, is obviously on his feet. We don't know Bubbles' real identity, but any resemblance between this picture and anyone living or dead makes us wonder why. If this is a picture of anyone on the post who has such muscles, we're only fooling.

Army, Navy to Use Films In Attack On 'Clip Joints'

The Army and Navy, disturbed over mounting reports of the manner in which soldiers and sailors are being taken in by clip joints throughout the country, are going to teach the boys, via a series of "indoctrination' films, how to thwart gyp artists' plans, Variety, theatrical weekly, reports.

Because various resorts seem to take particular pleasure preying on those youths who are on unfamiliar ground, the training shorts on how to avoid the pitfalls of a big city will likewise be made available for the asking to the navies of the other nations.

Behind the program is the realization that no amount of pamphleteering or lecturing in the training classes can achieve the same results as utilization of the movie medium to get across the message. The War Department has found that to apply to other related problems such as combatting the social disease evil, etc., and feels that a visual demonstration of how easy it is to get rolled, and what to do about it, will go a lot further than any amount of chinning on the subject.

The Navy Department last week completed a short on the clip-joint menace, which will go into all the training schools. Told in story form, it's a composite study based on factual case histories of what can happen when a sailor's off guard and falls into the hands of the clippers. Film was produced in New York by Herbert Kerkow, who's under contract to the Navy Department for the filming of such subjects with Lee Strasberg associated with him in the production.

Similarly, the Signal Corps is readying an 'indoctrination' film cautioning the men in the service against the card sharks who have been preying on the boys in uniform and detailing the various tricks up the gypper's sleeves. It's an elaborate explanation of how crooked dealing is accomplished and, as such, sets forth specific underhanded methods. Idea stems from exhaustive research which the Signal Corps has already distributed to the men in book form. Film will be adaptation of the research contained between covers.

LT. COL. MEREDITH
new inspector general for The Infantry School.

Stanford University. He was commissioned in the Officer Reserve Corps in November, 1917, and has been in the Army since. His assignments have included a tour of duty in Hawaii from 1922 to 1925 with the 27th Infantry; ROTC duty at the University of Washington, Salt Lake City and Fulton County, Georgia; duty as athletic officer at the Headquarters Ninth Corps Area at the Presidio, San Francisco, California, and as assistant inspector general, Ninth Service Command at Fort Douglas, Utah. He came to this station from Fort Douglas.

Prior to entering the Army, he was a high school teacher, football, track and baseball coach, and an architect. He still is keenly interested in sports and rifle marksmanship.

Army Postal Service In All Out Yule Rush

Mail call is a big event in a soldier's day, any place, any season. But approaching Christmas makes boys in o.d. rush their mail orderly with yet greater anticipation. They won't be disappointed, if the Army postal service can help it.

One of the busiest spots around The Infantry School's great 1st Student Training Regiment these pre-Christmas days is the regimental post office. Its crew of G.I. experts have gone on a seven-day week to speed holiday mail to and from the 1st S.T.R.'s officers and men.

Skilled clerks who deftly sort incoming parcel post among 30 large mail bags—one for each company and headquarters unit in the regiment—have their hands full 11 months of the year. Now they've shifted into double time so that the Yule rush won't keep their fellow soldiers waiting overlong for newspapers and packages from home.

MORE SORTING CASES

For the first class mail that brings word from home or tidings of buddies scattered on every front, two vertical sorting cases, each containing 50 boxes, serve the same purpose as do the big sacks of bulkier matter. With one clerk standing before each case and another helper between them slipping letters into as many pigeonholes as he can reach, three men—or women, since the WAC's are indispensable here—can sort incoming mail at one time.

To cope with the flood of letters and Christmas cards, two more sorting cases have been set up, letting five sorters work simultaneously. Even with these added facilities, mail must be legibly addressed by company and regiment if recipients aren't to be kept waiting, mail room workers point out.

A complete file helps keep the flow of mail on an unerring, uninterrupted course. Recorded are the names and addresses of every soldier now a members of the 1st S.T.R., as well as every officer and enlisted man, student or permanent party, who has ever belonged to the regiment. Forwarding addresses direct mail to those who have already left.

Despite all precautions, some letters and packages are delayed a few days—and it's usually the senders' fault. Through ignorance or carelessness, the folks back home sometimes mail correspondence with an incomplete, incorrect, or illegible address.

Gifts from Santa usually come in registered or insured packages. To accommodate them, the mail room has temporarily taken over an entire mess hall in the 1st Regiment's 13th Company area. In bays along the walls, incoming parcels are neatly stacked according to their registry numbers.

EX-TWO-NINER

For nearly two years, Sergeant Pettis soldiered with the 29th Infantry. His service with the 1st S. T. R. dates back to September 1940, when he went to work for The Infantry School Detachment, forerunner of the present regiment.

His crew of assistants includes Sergeants Francis J. Estopinal and Watt W. Holloway; Corporals James K. Lafavor, Omer J. Hatmaker, Arthur F. Barney and John DiFusco; and Privates First Class Thaddeus W. Dyko, John J. Kahman, Arthur B. Pendley, and Kajor Stewart.

Five WAC's—Privates Thressa Adkins, Elinor Curtis, Leota Hancock, Martina Trujillo, and Madge Wright — complete the staff.

While each task is specialized, all 15 have a working knowledge of every job there, so that the entire mail room personnel functions interchangeably.

Next door to the mail room, but operated separately, is the United States Post Office branch, which sells stamps and money orders, registers and insures mail. Normally insuring 60 to 75 pieces of outgoing mail daily, the Post Office accelerates to a peak of 1,500 letters and packages insur-

MOTHERS' CLUB MEETING

The Nursery School Mothers' Club will meet in the Recreation Room on Friday morning, December 10, at 10:30 (E.W.T.). The purpose of this meeting is to make plans for the children's Christmas party and also for the benefit bridge. Every mother is urged to be present at this meeting.

GIRL SCOUTS

The Girl Scouts and Brownies are practising Christmas carols under the direction of Mrs. Schwartz. They will go to the Post on Sunday, Dec. 19, with the Columbus and Fort Benning Scouts to sing in the Station Hospital and Red Cross Recreation Rooms. All girls are requested to be in uniform if possible. They should meet at the Auditorium at 2:30 (E.W.T.) to get the bus that has been chartered by the Columbus council. Parents' permission blanks must be filled in and turned back to the leaders in order to go with the group. Be sure and get these blanks from your leader and turn it in not later than Dec. 13 so that we can tell the Columbus Council how many girls we have going from out here.

The Nursery School Mothers' Club is sponsoring a benefit bridge on Wednesday, Dec. 15, at 1:30 (E.W.T.) in the Auditorium. The following people may be contacted in order to make up a table or get tickets (tickets are 50 cents each): Mrs. Simpson, 3-2028; Mrs. Cox 2-0280, and Mrs. Ralls, 3-1630.

All residents of the community are invited and urged to attend. It is hoped that the newcomers to the community will take advantage of this and come out and get acquainted with other members in this way. We would like to see every table in the auditorium filled.

TEEN-AGE GET-TOGETHER

Friday, Dec. 10, from 8 o'clock until 10, the Auditorium will be open for all the teen-age people of the community. Dancing to the juke box, games of various kinds and singing will make up the fun for the evening. It is hoped that a turn-out will be large enough to warrant opening the Auditorium each week for this group. This activity is for all 'teen-agers, not solely for those who dance.

COMMUNITY CHRISTMAS CAROLLING

All boys and girls as well as adults are invited to join in the community Christmas Caroling during Christmas week. Mrs. Schwartz would like to see a large turn-out for this. All ages are urged to make up the group. She will be on hand at the Auditorium on Monday and Thursday after school for practises. She would like to have a large group of adults show an interest in this and is setting aside a practise night for adults in the Auditorium on Tuesday, December 14, at 8 o'clock. Let's really get together and enter into the spirit of Christmas by joining the group of Carollers.

CHRISTMAS PARTIES

Christmas parties are being planned for Christmas week in the Auditorium on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, December 21-22-23. Girls and boys of each group as shown on the bulletin passed out to each home will have the parties together as follows:

Junior group—ages 5-6-7-8.
Intermediates—ages 9-10-11-12.
Seniors—ages 13 and up.

Decide to which group you belong and keep the date of your party in mind.

NEW YEAR'S EVE DANCE

Plans are under way for a Baker Village Community Dance for New Year's Eve so mark this date on your calendar and prepare to come out for a gala evening.

TALENT WANTED

Mrs. Schwartz is eager to learn community with the idea of preabout any and all talent in the senting talent and amateur shows as frequently as possible. Singers, dancers, instrumentalists, magicians, monologuists and the like are urged to report to Mrs. Schwartz or Mrs. Lutz at the Recreation Department or call 2-3381.

NEW PASTOR

We are happy to welcome Dr. Reed who has recently moved into the Community at 52A and who is the pastor of the Benning Park Baptist Church. He comes to us from the First Church at Fort Valley, Georgia.

A cordial invitation is extended to everyone to attend the Benning Park Baptist Church.

TENANT COUNCIL

The Tenant Council meets every Friday night in the Recreation room at 8:30. All residents are invited to meet with this group at any time.

CLINIC

Part of the equipment for the Clinic has arrived and Dr. Thrash states that possibly a part of the Clinic will start operating next week. More information will be sent out to residents concerning this.

Newcomers to the Community during the past week include: Lt. and Mrs. George G. Kellum, Jr., 6 Court; Lt. and Mrs. Herbert M. Kay, 2 Court; Lt and Mrs. Ervin W. Haase, 20 Marry; Lt. and Mrs. Michail J. Kilty, 47 Court; Lt. and Mrs. C. D. Van Hommelling, 9 Roper; Sgt. and Mrs. Ralph Tobakin, 112B; Sgt. and Mrs. Toy Kemp, 65A; Sgt. and Mrs. Ralph B. Gardner, 102G; Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Reed, Sr., 52A; Sgt. and Mrs. Charles E. Mitchell, 31A; Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Rankhorn, 153D.

OFFICERS' DANCE

Christmas festivities for officers will begin in Columbus, when the Mu and Beta Chapters of the Beta Sigma Phi Sorority entertain with a formal dance, Friday, December 17, in the Mirror Room of the Ralston Hotel. Dancing will be from 9 to 1 E. W. T., and the music will be furnished by the 48th Armored Regiment Orchestra. All officers are invited. Bring your wife, girl friend, or come stag, as there will be a large number of young ladies present. Script will be $1.20 stag, and $2.20 per couple, tax included.

The MONTGOMERY WARD COMPANY has one of the best ideas for Christmas gifts I've found out about in some time. They suggest records of every type for you or your friends who get many hours of pleasure listening to the top tunes of the day played by the first ranking band leaders. Many of these Decca, Columbia, and Victor records star the more popular vocalists such as Frank Sinatra, Lena Horne, Dinah Shore, Bee Wain, Dick Haymes; the list in fact, is endless. Indeed a grand gift might be an album of tunes featured on The Hit Parade or musical comedy selections by Andre Kostelanetz. Whether your fancy turns lightly to Boogie Woogie or tunes a bit more on the sedate side you'll find a most complete array of records which will certainly add a note of cheer to your Christmas and the celebrations of friends for whom you play Santa Claus.

The quality shop of KAYSER - LILIENTHAL INC., long noted in Columbus for its chic displays and full value selections, has this Christmas shopping time, an array of costumes and accessories certain to delight the hearts of you women who love fine things with a bit of cash to bring out your best points. Wool-tweed or gabardine suits, sleek dinner dresses, dashing evening wraps, luxurious furs and fur jackets, appealing housecoats, scintillating and smartly designed costume jewelry, filmy lingerie by Miss Swank, evening gloves of finest suede in a variety of lengths, exquisite handbags of soft, durable leathers or smoky suedes will all so intrigue you that you'd like to have them all for yourself. Whether you're shopping for yourself or for acquaintances, you'll have a delightful time if you visit the renowned shop of Kayser-Lilienthal.

—V—

That celebrated day of thanksgiving and rejoicing draws nearer and nearer. When December 25th finally dawns will you be satisfied with all the results of your Christmas shopping? And important, too, will your friends be pleased with gifts you've given them? You need have no fears regarding satisfaction if you do your shopping at the J. A. KIRVEN COMPANY. In this recently redecorated department store are attractively arranged displays bound to appeal to you and many other shoppers. Fine soft fur coats, exciting perfumes, dainty wash dresses for tiny girls, warm pastel wool blankets for wee babies, regulation styled shirts, ties, hosiery and other accessories for men in the services, cunning trinkets and other costume jewelry, smart writing papers, comfy and becoming housecoats, smart negligees, fine net or rayon hose in popular costume shades, cuddly, fuzzy, stuffed animals, lifelike dressed dolls, cosmetics, bath salts and countless other articles, too numerous to mention are outstanding Christmas values. For a Merry Christmas, shop soon and shop at Kirven's.

—V—

Do thoughts of what to give for Christmas have your brain all tied up in knots? Are you trying to think of a gift to convey special meaning and yet not be too expensive? Then give a thought or two to having a portrait photograph made of yourself. A gift of that sort could be a source of much enjoyment to your loved ones. Naturally you'll want to give the best type photograph and in Columbus the best means the AIME DUPONT STUDIO. Here you'll delight in the eagerness of skilled photographers and technicians to please you. You'll not only like the charming cooperation so evident, but you'll like the excellent photographs you're shown after your posing for "shots." Not only do they look like you, but they really show you at your very best. If you phone for your appointment now, by Christmas day your loved ones will be truly thrilled with lifelike photographs of you which are a lasting token of your esteem.

—V—

Outstanding indeed in a display filled with outstanding things are the handbags at the MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY. The ever-popular shoulder strap style is only one of the many types to suit each change of costume. Boxy envelope styles in a variety of materials are certain to please the most exacting tastes. Perfect for wear with alligator shoes and a tailored outfit are the smartly fashioned handbags of genuine alligator leather included in this Christmas showing. A good looking substitute are the bags made of alligator calf leather with nicely lined insides, complete with hand mirror and change purse. In fact all the hangbags have attractive linings and hand mirror and change purse. Whether you seek a handbag of fine suede, leather or fabric, you'll find what you want with a wide price range at Miller-Taylor's.

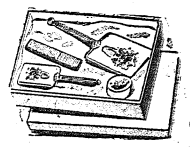
ASTP Sarge Drove For General Marshall

Mr.-Sgt. Edward J. Lemon, transportation chief of ASTP Motor Pool, can really boast of having travelled in big company. Not too long before he was assigned to his present station, he held the signal honor of being a driver for the chief of staff, General G. C. Marshall.

Sgt. Lemon's army history is indeed a colorful one. Enlisting in the Old Grind in 1927, he has already seen almost 17 years of service. The first three years of his army career were spent in Honolulu, as a transportation corporal in the Engineers garage. In 1930 he was transferred to No. 1 garage, in Washington, D. C. It was here that he became acquainted with the personal angles on all the brass hats.

During his tour of service, he has at one time driven for Generals Pershing, Patton, Wainwright, and Fredendahl, and former Secretary of War G. H. Dern.

For four years his permanent job was that of driver for General Croft, chief of infantry, and in the following four years, after General Croft's retirement, he had the post as driver for his successor, General Lynch.



Asking for combat duty, he was assigned to the Infantry School, in the capacity of assistant instructor in the Automotive Section. He remained in this position until July, 1942, when he was assigned to his present post.

Sgt. Lemon hails from Lancaster, Pa., is married, and has three sons—all of whom he hopes will some day be West Point graduates. A family that's certainly GI.

'Lucky 7th' Demonstrates Its Fire-Power

For the second time since its activation the "Lucky 7th" Armored Division was treated to a major firepower demonstration recently of every type weapon in the division from the 77mm gun down to the carbine.

Staged by Combat Command "A", the demonstration was scheduled to lead off with an air corps exercise consisting of a smoke screen, glide and medium-level bombing, and strafing of a truck column, but inclement weather kept planes grounded and an infantry exercise was first on the program.

Illustrating the firepower of an individual, squad, platoon, and finally a company with carbines, rifles, and machine guns, the infantry fired on easily visible targets a concentration of fire showing the devastating effect of only a fraction of potential power.

SAME PROCEDURE

The same procedure was followed with 75mm and 57mm guns, 60 and 81mm mortars, and "bazookas" or anti-tank rocket launchers. Both tank and ground firing were shown. Direct and indirect fire with quick and delayed fuses was illustrated with the 75mm gun.

After a brief discussion of artillery fire by Col. Orville W. Martin, division artillery commander and veteran of the North African campaign, three artillery batteries fired demonstrating with a shell air burst, smoke shell, and time shell.

Climax of the program came at the end and consisted of a coordinated attack and counter-attack with artillery, tanks and infantry taking part.

The artillery began the demonstration with three battalions firing timedfire on an outlined enemy position. Just a moment later a medium tank battalion moved out under cover of artillery toward a hill occupied by a theoretical enemy.

Then the infantry began covering the "enemy" positions with small arms and mortar fire to follow the last wave of tanks and take over the first objective.

Suddenly light tanks moved out of concealment to meet a simulated enemy threat on the right flank. Calling on the artillery to cover their further advance, the tanks prevented a successful counter-attack while one artillery battalion laid a concentration on hostile forces as well as a smoke screen against enemy observation.

The problem ended when the medium tanks moved forward to the second objective and rallied in nearby woods while the infantry remained on the first objective.

Maj. Gen. Charles H. Bonesteel, commandant of The Infantry School, and guest of Division Commander Lindsay McDonald Silvester at the demonstration remarked that its was the best he had ever seen of armored weapons.

Snipers Inherit Gators' Gators

It looked like a mud patch along Tobacco Road. But to Adam Lazonga and his mate, Eve, pet alligators given the 131st Infantry by the 124th, a former unit of The Infantry School Troops Brigade, this 10 by 10-foot fenced-in swamp hole was Miami Beach or whatever else is the alligator equivalent of a winter heaven.

With winter on its way, the concrete pond where Adam and Eve were wont to splash around in their baby 'gator glee would be too cold a place for them to continue their frolicking. The misfortune in not removing their alligators from the pond sufficiently early to keep two of them from freezing to death wasn't going to be repeated.

John A. Dilbeck who, as superintendent of the Grant Park Zoo, Atlanta, Georgia, takes care of 16 various sized alligators, was explaining their care to Lt. Col. James W. Hilton.

"The 'gators hibernate from October to April, much as does the bear. They must have a muddy, leaf-filled pool to rest in during this time so that the food they gulp down the remainder of the year has a chance to digest. Alligators don't chew their food. They swallow it whole. Their teeth are used mostly for defense. In April the warm sunshine brings them to life and out of their 'gator holes."

Without the help of the FHA, a model swamp was built for them in the woods behind the Regimental athletic field. Drainage from the wash rack of the Motor Pool makes sure that they're provided with a steady seeping of dirty water.

When the alligators were placed into their new winter quarters they slithered around like every good alligator should do. After a few trial submersions into the slimy bottom they came forth with hearty grunts of ecstasy.

"Did you ever hear an alligator hiss?" Col. Hilton asked. "They did that to me the other day. That's what I call insubordination."

With a wiggle of the delight they felt in their alligator souls they were off to explore their new environs. Col. Hilton threw raw meat to them. With majestic disdain they swished their tails and dug deeper into the mud, which was a very ignoble thing for an alligator to do in these days of ration points. But Adam and Eve were too happy in their winter home to be bothered by mere food.

Woman's Club

By KATHERINE HAMMARGREN

The Book Reviews group of the Fort Benning Woman's Club has arranged an outstanding program of its next meeting, to be held Monday, December 13, at 2:30 p.m. in the ladies' lounge of the Officers' Club.

A review of Harnett Kane's "Bayous in Louisiana" will be given by Mrs. Gordon D. Johnston, group chairman. Mrs. Johnston, a member of the faculty of Louisiana State University for the past five years, has lived in the Cajun country much of her life, and is well acquainted with the types of persons and the customs with which Harnett Kane deals in his latest book. The author will also be remembered for the popular "Louisiana Hayride."

An unusual exhibit of Acadian handicraft has been secured from L. S. U., and will be shown at the meeting. In addition, there will be silent motion pictures on the Acadians of the Teche, in the lower part of Louisiana. The film, a production of the Columbia Motion Picture Company, has been secured through the extension service of L. S. U., which has tried to keep alive the folk songs and customs of the Cajuns.

Interest in the informative and entertaining program is marked, and a capacity audience is expected. All members of the Women's Club are invited to attend.

Gremlins Snarl Up Phone Lines

Gremlins attacked the command post in a field problem held by an Officers' Communication Course in the 1st Student Training Regiment, The Infantry School, last week—or so suspects the student who operated the telephone switchboard. Every time any party rang the telephone connected to the switchboard, all the shutters on the face of the board dropped so that the baffled operator had no indication which unit was signalling him.

In normal operation, when a signal telephone rings central, a small shutter on the switchboard drops, signalling the operator. When the shutters on all units fell simultaneously yet only one circuit was in use, it was something none of the instructors on the problem had witnessed before. The switchboard had been tested and none of the parts were defective.

After a lengthy investigation instructors discovered that wire-laying parties had spliced into several lines leading to the same regiment during displacement. The lines followed different routes and were not identified by the wire layers. So when the regimental operator signalled division, all units on the division switchboard went into action.

Girl Scouts

THE DOGWOOD TROOP

Last year's Girl Scout Troop, of Fort Benning, has started afresh.

Members are made up of high school students only. They are Anne Ambrose, Margaret Andes, Margaret Blair, Jane Buettner, Marie Colston, Patty Cook, Suzanne Foley, Connie Freund, Gwen Hammersley, Katherine Helfer, Anne Heraty, Mary McGinnes, Nancy McKinney, Pat Moore, Rosemary Palumbo, Mary Strain, and Bootsie Taylor.

Officers include Captain Marie Colston, Lieutenant Connie Freund, Sergeant Anne Heraty, Corporal Anne Ambrose.

At the last meeting of the troop it was moved and carried that members absent without excuse for three meetings be dropped from the troop. Dues were set at five cents a week. It was also agreed that meetings be conducted according to parliamentary procedure.

THE BAYONET

VOLUME 2, NUMBER 14 — Published by The Ledger-Enquirer Co. — FORT BENNING, GA., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1943 — For America's Most Complete Post — PRICE FIVE CENTS

Ft. Benning To Be On Air Seven Hours Christmas

GYPSY ROSE LEE, ACTRESS, AUTHORESS

Gypsy Rose Lee Appears At Benning on January 1

Gypsy Rose Lee, the girl who made strip teasing a million dollar stage profession, will appear at the Main Theatre in two performances on January 1, according to an announcement by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, post special service officer.

Miss Lee will give a one-hour performance for post personnel at 7 o'clock and again at 9, Colonel Finnegan stated.

NEE LOUISE HOVICK

Gypsy Rose, whose real name is Louise Hovick, rose to nation-wide fame as queen of burlesque's strip teasers. Later she "went legitimate," appearing on Broadway in the production, "Star and Garter" among other successful hits. She also went to the coast where she appeared in the movies.

Not content with that Gypsy Rose Lee turned authoress in her spare time, writing the best selling mystery, "The G-String Murders."

Her present stop at Benning is one of several as she travels west to Hollywood again.

G. I.'s TO HELP

According to Colonel Finnegan, Miss Lee will appear in some of her old routines as star of a show enhanced by some of the Fort's GI entertainers. Performers from "Holiday Time," the special service musical, will also be at the Main Theatre with the star. Music will be by the ASTP band under the direction of Warrant Officer Julian B. Goodstein.

One of the famous sketches, from the days when she reigned in burlesque, "I Don't Get It," and her equally well remembered "Give Me a Little Kiss," will be included in Gypsy Rose Lee's program.

Civilian Laws Also Apply To Soldiers

Military personnel at Fort Benning are being warned again that they are subject to all civilian laws when they are in any community and that they are liable to arrest by civilian law enforcement agencies.

Although this has been called to the attention of army personnel repeatedly, the warning was made again this week in strong language by Col. William H. Hobson, commanding officer of the post, in a post memorandum.

"Military personnel visiting in civilian communities are subject to all of the local criminal laws and ordinances in force in such communities to the same extent as civilians residing or visiting in those communities," the memorandum states, and goes on to point out that "for violation of such laws and ordinances military personnel are liable to arrest and detention by civil police to the same extent as civilians."

The memorandum reminds military personnel that civil courts have concurrent jurisdiction with military courts for offenses committed in a civilian community and that although, in time of war, it is the policy of the War Department to request the surrender of military personnel, military authorities may not demand the surrender nor are civilian authorities compelled to comply with the request.

"The surrender to the military authorities for trial of military personnel who have committed such violations is affected through mutual agreements between the civil and military authorities," the memorandum states.

Big Things Ahead For First G. I. Baby Of 1944

The merchants of Columbus and THE BAYONET have big things planned for the first G. I. baby born in Fort Benning's Station Hospital in 1944, yes, sir!

To begin with, the babe will become owner of a beautiful crisp $25 war saving bond. In addition a series of surprise packages is being arranged for the lucky young man or miss. But this is getting a bit ahead of the story which will break at the December 30 issue of THE BAYONET.

There's nothing to buy and nothing to sign to win these prizes. All the fortunate child has to do is to be the offspring of an enlisted man and show up first in Station Hospital bright and early next year. In truth the "early bird will get the worm."

In addition to these prizes, THE BAYONET is offering $7.56 in war saving stamps to the runner-up.

The desk sergeant in Station Hospital's maternity ward has given us the green light for the contest, the stork race is on. The only question remaining is: WHO WILL BE THE WINNER?

Civilians To Dine Soldiers Dec. 26

Hundreds of soldiers from Fort Benning will be the dinner guests of residents of Columbus and Phenix City on Sunday, December 26, Major Victor Tidman, director of publicity of the USO committee in charge of plans for this hospitality, has announced.

Registrations are beginning to be listed at the various USO Clubs in Columbus and Phenix City for the Christmas holiday home hospitality program, said Major Tidman, who is also director of the Salvation Army USO in Phenix City.

Personnel of the Post are urged to register at any USO in town if they desire to avail themselves of the hospitality of the citizens of Columbus and Phenix City. The card, which Fort Benning women and men will fill out, should give their mailing address on the Post in order that notification can be sent, giving the name and address of the host, as well as the time at which to appear at the home.

2,000 LAST YEAR

Last year, Major Tidman stated, approximately 2,000 members of the Post were entertained in Columbus and Phenix City homes, with almost half of them being placed through the home hospitality committee of the USO.

The main principle behind the program, it was explained, is not just to invite the WAC or Soldier into a home for a meal, but to give him a typical afternoon or evening at home such as he had as a civilian.

Some of the families will entertain personnel during the afternoon, while others will be hosts in the evening.

CANCELLATIONS ASKED

One the basis of registrations to date, it seems certain that all military personnel registering with the USO will be taken care of on Dec. 26. However WACs or soldiers who find, after a date has been set, and a home notified, that duties prevent an appearance are urged to contact Miss Ann Pridmore, USO representative in this area at 2-2752, or give the invitation to an acquaintance so that the family does not prepare to entertain a soldier and not have him appear.

Plans for the home hospitality program on December 26 were drawn up last Friday at a meeting of the USO hospitality committee and representatives of civic and church groups.

OCS Graduates Over 300 Classes

Fort Benning's famed Infantry School has graduated more than 300 officer candidate classes since the war started, it was disclosed today by Maj. Gen. Charles F. Bonesteel, commandant of the school, in an article appearing in the Army and Navy Journal's edition, "United States At War."

The 158-page anniversary edition of the Journal includes scores of articles by high ranking Army, Navy and Marine Corps commanders of the roles played by the various armed forces in the war.

General Bonesteel said, "The program for instruction for every one of more than 700 officer candidate classes which have been graduated from the school during the present emergency has been different."

"Such changes for successive classes were often minor," he continued, "but the cumulative effect has been great. Despite this rapid and continuing change of instruction, however, the teaching of fundamentals has remained unchanged with the result that a graduate of the first officer candidate class should still be able to fight side by side with the graduate of the 300th class with mutual understanding and perfect coordination."

"Holiday Time" To Repeat Tonight

"Holiday Time," the gay, little musical revue which opened last night at the Children's School Auditorium, will play a repeat performance tonight at 8:30.

The Belles of Ft. Benning . . . . . Chime One

MISS SUE WOODALL

. . . How sweet her (ap)peal . . . she's following in mother's footsteps.

Herewith the Bayonet proudly presents the first in a series of Benning Beauties, a winterized version of pin-up girls—a feature designed to keep the home fires burning and make the party round the hearth real warm and cozy. Of necessity, the bathing suit gave way to the evening gown, but we hope you don't mind too much. Miss Woodall, more properly known as Suzanne, has portrayed a Southern belle who makes it easy to understand the meaning of "cherchez la femme." Born in Charlotte, N. C., she's spent most of her life in Atlanta until "joining" the Army about a year and a half ago. Since then she's been a cryptographer for the Air Corps both in Atlanta and Macon and now for the Signal Corps at Benning. Her presence at this post was requested because of her special skill—and are we mad. Prior to government days, lovely Sue was educated at Young Harris Jr. College and U. of Ga. Evening Schcool. She's been a high school drum majorette, a basketball player and a mighty popular girl. She likes dancing, fishing, riding and art. Draws very cleverly and also does a little pastel painting. She isn't the first Woodall to be noticed for her rare beauty, Sue's lovely mother reigned as "Miss Atlanta" a couple decades back, and daughter is justly proud of mater's beauty, as well as her brother, a Navy ensign stationed in Macon. WOODALL ON MEN: "I prefer men in service, but have no ideas about marriage until war's end, and then perhaps I'd like a career possibly as a commercial artist or in fashion designing." VITAL STATISTICS: Age—19. Height—5'5." Weight — 117. Bust—35 1-2. Waist—24. Hips—35 1-2. Eyes —Blue - gray - green. Hair — Dark blonde. Complexion—Fair as morning dew. All in all, a classic example of Southern beauty who'd look equally well in evening gown, sweater, swim suit, or artist's smock. Yeah, verily, she'd be be "so nice to come home to." TIS To Dedicate Memorial Shrine

Colorful dedication of The Infantry School's Memorial Shrine will be held Sunday, 19 December 1943, at 11:30. The shrine is located in a wooded glade through which the bridle path winds and is accessible by automobile and foot from the Main Post. It is a mile and a half north of the TIS stables on Lowland Trail.

Plans for the ceremony will include dedication rites by Chaplain Roderick MacEachen and a short talk by Colonel Thomas Taylor, director of training for the ASTP. A choir will sing at the dedication and members of the post, civilians, and their friends, are invited.

Yule Declared Holiday

Christmas Day has officially been declared a holiday for station complement troops and 4th Service Command civilian workers, post authorities announced Wednesday, January 1 will not be observed as an official holiday.

A skeleton staff will be on duty on Christmas to transact necessary and urgent business.

WRBL Offers Facilities To Show Radio Audience How G. I. Celebrates

From early morning until late at night, Christmas Day activities at Fort Benning will be broadcast for more than seven hours, it was announced today as radio station WRBL offered to turn over all of its available time during the day that is not taken up by the big CBS programs.

The offer of the time on the air to show the public just how soldiers at Fort Benning will be celebrating Christmas was made by James Woodruff, Jr., owner of the station, to Major Russell J. Hammagren, post Public Relations Officer, and work immediately was begun on the project.

Broadcasting will begin actually on Christmas Eve with a pick-up from the Prisoner of War Camp of a special Midnight Mass and then on Christmas Day itself, will begin at 7 a. m. and continue intermittently through the remainder of the day until 11 p. m., with pickups from service clubs, hospitals, mess halls and other places.

As soon as the offer was made and a tentative time schedule presented, bands were contacted, special service of various units were consulted, service club hostesses were interviewed, and the many and varied activities that will go on all through Christmas Day were chanted. After that, the activities were fitted into the time table and a schedule of broadcasting was outlined.

After plans were drawn up, Col. Alexander W. Young, commanding officer of the Signal Service division at Fort Benning was consulted on necessity of hookup of telephone lines to carry the broadcasts from various spots on the post. A crew of men will handle the wire detail and probably will be on duty all day Christmas to keep the wires cleared for the series of broadcasts.

SPECIAL MASS

As now drawn up, the tentative schedule calls for pickup of a special mass with additional music from the Station Hospital from 7 to 8 a. m. EWT. This will be celebrated by Father Rodney MacEachen for Italian Prisoners of War, and special music will be supplied.

Then, from 8:15 to 9 a. m., EWT, the Reception Center Chorus will present a Christmas program of ancient carols, hymns, and modern numbers from Service Club No. 1. From 9:15 a. m. to 10:30 a. m., EWT, the Chorus will join with the Reception Center Military Band in singing the Hallelujah Chorus from the "Messiah," and there will be more music by the Band. During the last half of this period, the 300th Infantry Dance Orchestra will move in to the Service Club to play a program of music from "Holiday Time," the post show which is to be presented at Children's School Auditorium Dec. 15 and 16. The 300th band also will play other music on the broadcast.

At 11:30 a. m. the traditional practice of the 131st Infantry of playing for various mess halls in its area will be picked up and broadcast. Interviews with the men at their Christmas Day meal also will be made part of the program for this period, which will extend from 11:30 a. m. to 12 noon, EWT.

At 12:30 p. m., the scene will shift back to Service Club No. 1, where a lighter touch will be injected as the Barbershop Quartets

Chapel Choirs Offer Christmas Music Sunday

A program of Christmas music including traditional airs from many countries will be rendered by the morning and evening choirs of the Main Post chapel at a Candlelight program Sunday at 7 p. m.

Chaplain Frank M. Thompson will give the call to worship and read the Scriptures between each of the musical selections. The chapel will be decorated for the occasion and the choir will wear for the first time red satin stoles which will be used on later festive occasions.

The children's evening choir will sing with the senior choir on this program, it was announced. This organization will sing "Break Forth, O Beauteous Heavenly Light," "Away in a Manger," "Sleep, My Little Boy," and "O, Nightingale, Awake."

The program will also include an organ prelude, "Hark the Herald Angels Sing;" Willousky's Ukranian "Carol of the Bells;" "O Little Town of Bethlehem," "There Were Shepherds Abiding in the Field" by Vincent with Mrs. Anthony Putt, opera singer, as soloist; Pergolesi's "Glory to God in the Highest" with Mrs. Putt, Mrs. B. F. Wills, and the choirs; Kountz's "Carol of the Sheep Bells;" "O Holy Night" by Adam, sung by Mrs. Putt.

BACH CANTATA

The Bach cantata scheduled also for Sunday will feature Mrs. Putt and Pvt. Thomas Dix of the films. He will sing "Now Appears Thy Natal Day" in the Cantata.

Another featured soloist in the Cantata will be Mrs. Wills, mezzo soprano, who has been with the choir for some time. A graduate of numerous conservatories of music, Mrs. Wills will sing "Immanuel: O Give Me in Thy Great Mercy" and the aria "Lord, I Sing Thy Name" from Bach's cantata.

Altos: Cpl. Elizabeth Anderson, Mrs. W. W. Collicott, Cpl. Corine Goudsward, Mrs. M. A. Goff, Mildred Guthrie, Edith Joyner, Helen McClaflin, Mrs. A. L. Pollack, and Mrs. Evelyn Tarr.

Basses: Capt. Freaborn Coggishall, Lt. W. W. Collicott, Lt. Wal-

Hospital Patients Set for Two Full Weeks of Joyous Christmas Cheer

Two weeks of Yuletide events that will bring Christmas cheer to the 2500 patients in the Fort Benning Main Post and Harmony Church Station hospitals were announced this week by Mrs. Pauline McKinley, director of the program.

Scheduled events for the Main Post branch begin Sunday afternoon, Dec. 19, at 3 o'clock when the Girl Scouts from Columbus will sing Christmas carols in the wards, followed immediately by "Holiday Time," a musical review, presented in the recreation hall by the special service officer.

Daily events will begin Thursday, Dec. 23, with the USO show in the recreation hall in the afternoon and will run through the New Year's Eve dance on the following Friday, Dec. 31.

Friday's events include a Christmas tree and program in recreation hall at 6:30, and Christmas carols in the wards beginning at 9:30.

YULE MOVIES

Christmas morning the wards will have their Christmas tree festivities, and movies will be shown at the stage door canteen starting at 5:00 and again at 7:00 o'clock in the evening.

The next week events begin Sunday with with a Christmas concert by a man's chorus at 3:30 in the afternoon; then Monday evening the Post children's choir

YWCA-USO Supplies Kitchen For G. I. Joe's Moms To Cook In

"What I wouldn't give for a home-cooked meal like Mom used to make!"

Fort Benning GI's who have repeated that phrase on innumerable occasions can now have the wish fulfilled, complete with Mom and all, according to a new feature of the YWCA-USO announced this week by the club at 1425 3rd Ave.

The announcement from the YWCA-USO states that military personnel whose wives, mothers, or relatives are visiting them for any period of time, may make use of the building's kitchen facilities and have the adjoining dining room, silverware, dishes, and all the trimmings that go with a real family dinner. All that is required from the soldiers is that they supply the ingredients of the meal, or have their family do that.

Anticipating a flood of requests from Fort Benning personnel who would like to have a private meal with their visitors in town, the club urges that reservations be made and confirmed for the particular date and meal desired, in order that there be no conflict in appointments. On the date set, Mom, wife, or whoever is to cook the meal can go to the building and the kitchen and dining room, which is fitted the same as the average home, will be turned over to them for preparation of the feed. For the rest of that period, to all intensive purposes, GI Joe from Fort Benning, is having a home cooked meal in his own (simulated) home with the folks.

Yep, Thas All He Could Do—Aneedidit

"TimbeRRRR." The lumberjacks' old yell now rings out as the latest battle cry of student officers in the 8th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School.

Formerly this group, commanded by Captain E. F. Brarmann, responded with shrieks of joy when "bangalore" was mentioned. That was in honor of a classmate who chose a bangalore torpedo as his weapon to clean out a "Japanese" slit trench.

How this "Timber" business came about bears retelling. The class was a guest of the Defense Tactics Committee recently and was busy trying to keep ahead of the instructor as he developed a situation. Things rapidly looked blacker and blacker for the defenders represented by the incorrigible youth of the 8th Company.

The "Japs" attacked. They had busted into our lines, silenced our weapons, and killed our platoon leader. The situation was desperate enough to call for writing a letter to the editor, when as a crowning insult, the Nips captured one of our anti-tank guns and slapped a 57 mm slug into a big tree. It hit in front of the platoon sergeant who had just taken command of the shot-up, disorganized, and practically white-washed platoon.

"What would you do next?" the instructor shot at student Lieutenant (name censored for security reasons).

Up rose the serious young timber wold and said, "There isn't much I can do, except watch which way that tree falls so it won't hit my third platoon."

The bangalore is forgotten as "Timber-r-r" rings down the quiet, shady streets of the 8th Company area.

Kinkennon Was His Name And He Won Silver Star

The story of Kinkennon is one frequently told Officer Candidate classes by Capt. Gordon H. Sympson, former University of Kentucky football star, now assigned to The Infantry School as an instructor.

Holder of the Silver Star and Purple Heart for service in North Africa, Captain Sympson has a deep appreciation for the courage of Kinkennon and all the other Kinkennons in this war.

He never knew his first name. The boy, a gawky, seemingly irresponsible selectee from the hills of Tennessee, was a member of the captain's company at Fort Bragg. He was always in the doghouse for some infraction of regulations which included carelessness in his appearance. Before his outfit shipped overseas, Kinkennon was transferred from Captain Sympson's company to another unit in the division.

NEAT THIS TIME

Kinkennon next made his appearance at a command post in North Africa. He surprised Captain Sympson by his neat appearance. Kinkennon proudly informed the captain he was a messenger assigned to that command post. At that moment, it was necessary to send a messenger to an advanced position and Captain Sympson, with some misgiving, dispatched Kinkennon with directions to proceed up a narrow wadi, taking advantage of what cover was available.

Kinkennon started off whistling. A short time later, Captain Sympson and a driver took off in a jeep toward the advanced position but enemy fire pinned them against a bank. Minutes passed and Kinkennon came whistling back down the wadi. He saw the captain and shouted:

"Hey captain, I gotta message for ya," he said.

"Take cover behind that rock," the captain yelled at him.

There was only one rick within 20 yards of him. Kinkennon looked around.

"Which rock?" he drawled.

Finally he got behind the rock and read the message to the captain.

KEEPS ON KEEPING ON

The captain gave him an answer and Kinkennon painstakingly wrote it down. Then he stood up and started for the rear. The message fell from his pocket and he stooped to retrieve it. By that time, the enemy had spotted him and was firing. But Kinkennon didn't budge until he had the message tucked safely in his pocket. Then he started off on a lope to the rear . . .

Three times during that afternoon, Kinkennon made the trip up and down the wadi, cheerily waving to the captain each time he passed. Finally relief came, the fire, which pinned the captain and his driver to the bank, ceased . . .

Kinkennon got the Silver Star for that afternoon's work.

And Captain Sympson got this lasting impression of Kinkennon—and the Kinkennons like him. It isn't the parade ground dandy that always makes the best soldier.

Post P.-T. A. Views Christmas Books For Children

The December meeting of the Parent-Teachers Association was full of Christmas suggestions for children's books, with Mrs. A. B. Claus speaking and displaying them. Her talk covered religious books, books about America, of people of other lands. The children of the 6 and 7th grades sang Christmas carols. The tea table was banked with holly with a centerpiece of Christmas tree balls and red candles and was presided over by Mrs. W. H. Hobson and Mrs. A. M. McCarthy.

Benning Civilian Designs Device To Launch Grenades From Garand

Despite the fact that most experts considered it utterly impossible, Ray S. Miller, civilian armament foreman at Fort Benning's post ordnance shop, designed and assisted in perfecting a means of launching grenades from the Garand semi-automatic, M1, rifle in collaboration with Colonel Charles H. Coates, member of the Infantry Board at Fort Benning, thereby eliminating the need for "03" rifles for this purpose in infantry units.

This outstanding achievement of Mr. Miller and Colonel Coates has resulted in change of tables of equipment for combat units, and will materially affect the war effort, according to Colonel Myron Leedy, Chief of the Ordnance Branch at Fort Benning and member of The Infantry Board.

In the course of his experiments in grenade launching, Mr. Miller, who has been a civil service employee with the Army since 1919, suffered a severe flesh wound, but carried on in spite of this occurrence and in face of repeated advice that launching of grenades from an M1 rifle presented insurmountable difficulties. The War Department has adopted the launcher and a patent is being sought in the name of Mr. Miller and Colonel Coates.

Invention of the launcher for the M1 rifle was at the repeated requests of the Army Ground Forces, although the ordnance department has been unable to find a satisfactory method of doing this without damage to the delicate automatic features of the rifle, according to Colonel Leedy. Prior to this invention, it was necessary to use both the 1903 and the M1 rifle in order to have adequate fire power and grenade launcher as well. Under this design the M1 can be used at will by an individual soldier as either a grenade launcher or a semi-automatic rifle, and eliminates much equipment formerly necessary for the soldier to carry.

Grenades which can be launched from the M1 with the launcher include the anti-tank grenade, hand fragmentation grenade, the old time pineapple hand grenade and approximately 30 signal grenades.

But the designing of the launching in cooperation with Colonel Coates is merely the most recent achievement of the inventive genius of Mr. Miller, who has given the Army the benefits of his talents for a quarter of a century.

In 1918, as a member of the 352nd Aero Squadron which he joined in January of that year, he designed and patented a throttling device for Gnome Monosoupape Engines in aircraft which enabled the Army to put back into service 500 new aircraft engines which had been condemned because they could not be "throttled down." For this he received high commendation from ranking Army officials and was assigned to the technical section of the air service at Dayton Field, Ohio. In August, 1918, he had been put in charge of the experimental section of Roosevelt Field, New York.

In the summer of 1919 he was called to Fort Meade, Md., which was attempting to build a 50-ton tank, the Mark VIII, which had a Liberty Airplane engine in it. Miller worked on these, correcting troubles, re-designing the driver control systems and making numerous drive improvements, and doing all sorts of experimental and inventive work.

In 1921 he was sent from Camp Meade, Md., to the Aberdeen Proving Grounds to see what could be done in adapting a Sperry gyro compass to a heavy tank. In this work he designed a suitable mounting and made numerous improvements in the compass enabling the Army to use it in the tank. For this, he was highly commended by Major General L. H. Campbell (then a major) of the Ordnance Department in a letter expressing "highest commendation of (his) work in connection with the test of the Sperry Gyroscopic Compass"; the ordnance officer at Camp Meade wrote him that his "good work reflected credit to the entire organization."

In 1922, he built the first high speed tank, capable of going 48 miles per hour, using largely salvage material. A 1921 pilot model 22-ton medium tank which had been built by the Ordnance Department and had a speed of 14 miles per hour was turned over to him to re-design. By re-designing the drive and installing a 12-cylinder Liberty aircraft engine, the tank attained a speed of 48 miles per hour. For this work he was highly commended by General Farnsworth, Chief of Infantry at that time and by the Ordnance Department. All nations interested in military developments had representatives to watch the tests by this tank.

In 1938, he re-designed the compressor and throttle for the Guiberson Diesel tank engine, which was incorporated in all new tanks and resulted in the modification of all old model tanks. For this he also received highest commendation.

In addition to these outstanding contributions to Army weapons and equipment for which he has been highly commended by the Infantry board and others, he also has patents on a special device which enables a moving train to pick up mail bags, a patent on a special joint for connecting railroad ties and a tin plate which forms a support under the rail joint—and which is being used today. He was only ten years old at the time he invented the latter item.

In 1932 he worked out a new type gas engine whereby the piston rings were installed in the cyliner block instead of on the piston which was looked upon favorably by the Ordnance Department. He also built one of these engines and carried on a long test which proved that the life of an internal combustion engine was materially increased by its use.

The Infantry Board at Fort Benning has been assisted in the development of many new items by Mr. Miller.

Mr. Miller, who has been at Fort Benning since October 31, 1938, and who lives at 1190 Tate Drive in Columbus, Ga., is a native of Red Sulphur Springs, W. Va., where he was born Oct. 5, 1891. He was graduated from Massanutten Military Academy in Woodstock, Va., in 1913, and latter studied at Carnegie Tech in Pittsburgh, Pa. From 1918 on, his initiative, meritorious service and inventive genius have unceasingly been devoted to the service of the Army and have resulted in many of the developments which makes American Ordnance the envy of the world. Mr. Miler has been a member of the Society of Automotive Engineers for the past 15 years.

Meyer to Award 'E' Emblems To Lummus Men

Col. Jack L. Meyer, director of the supply and service division at Fort Benning, will present "E" award emblems to employees of the Lummus Cotton Gin company in special ceremonies at the Columbus plant on Saturday morning.

The Army-Navy "E" for excellence in war production is being presented to the Columbus firm for its outstanding record in providing material for the armed forces.

The large "E" pennant will be presented by Commander Eugene E. Paro, a representative of the Navy's Bureau of Ships, who will come here for the ceremony.

Although the award is a joint presentation by the army and the navy, the pennant is always awarded by the representative of which ever branch the company serves predominantly. In this case, the Lummus concern serves the navy primarily which means that Commander Paro will present the flag, and Colonel Meyer will award the pins to the individual workers.

The Saturday services will be broadcast over radio station WRBL, from 12:30 to 1 p. m., Eastern War Time. The Lawson Field band, directed by Warrant Officer Armand B. Coutoure, will provide music for the event.

If you plan to talk to the folks back home at Christmas time, it's a good idea to call them from camp rather than have them place the call. You'll usually save time by placing the call yourself, because the folks have a fixed location and can be reac?hed more quickly.

For Goodness Snakes Better Watch Out!!!

Harken to the tale of a tree-climbing communication student who failed to reconnoiter for reptiles—and profit by his neglect.

On a recent field problem, an officers communication class in the 13th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment of the Infantry school, were busy wiring a command post. Having just passed their pole climbing test and mastered the difficult art of tying overheads and culvert crossings, all were anxious to try their hands at actual operations.

One bright-eyed lad who must be descended from a long line of eager beavers, volunteered to don a pair of "silver spurs." He made all necessary adjustments, secured his equipment, and was about to scramble up a selected tree.

DO'S AND DON'TS

But our student became deeply engrossed in local conversation. Arguments flew thick as to the do's and don'ts of wire laying. nonchalantly, he leaned against the tree and proceeded to offer two-pence worth of advice.

The argument subsided and once again, he assumed the approach stance of an expert climber. Wrapping both hands about the tree and casually glancing from truck to tree-top in search of any peculiarities, he came face to face with a rapidly descending creature of the reptile family. One word, "snake," brought the entire command post personnel to their feet.

FATAL BLOW

With presence of mind, a nearby officer struck the snake a fatal blow and brought him to the ground. Many ringside observers suggested poisonous or non-poisonous species to identify the unwelcome guest.

Prying its jaws apart, the communicators managed to extract some venom from the two protruding fangs. A copperhead, was the verdict.

Take heed, tree-climbers and wire-splicers. Scout for snakes Or someday you too may have the unenviable experience of staring down—or up—a serpent's throat.

Have a "Coke" = Merry Christmas

. . . spreading American holiday spirit overseas

Your American fighting man loves his lighter moments. He takes his home ways with him where he goes . . . makes friends easily. Have a "Coke", he says to stranger or friend, and he spreads the spirit of good will throughout the year. And throughout the world Coca-Cola stands for the pause that refreshes,—has become the high-sign of the friendly-hearted.

Coca-Cola

Ex-Cowboy Is Well Qualified To Serve As TIS Bird-dog

Lt. Clarence R. Wilsey, who recently succeeded Lt. John L. Fellows, as Guide Officer for the 18th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School, has an excellent background for the job of herding reluctant officers from class to class and back again.

Prior to his entry into the service, Lt. Wilsey was a professional cowboy who hails from Bella Vista, Calif. He owned and operated a livestock ranch before he came into the Army. It was while engaged in ranching that he entered the professional cowboy events in the rodeo circuit, competing successfully from 1936 until 1940.

Lt. Wilsey's top achievement in the rodeo field was earned when he became one of the few men to ride the famous bucking horse "Five-Minutes-To-Midnight". He won the all-around championships at rodeos at Anderson, Reading, Van Nuys and McArthur, California, in 1938-39.

The Lieutenant who holds the Pacific Coast record for stake-racing, set at Red Bluff, Calif. in 1938, has competed in calf and steer roping, as well as bronco riding, in most of the larger western shows including Seattle, Reno, Salinas, Red Bluff, Pendleton, Phoenix, and San Francisco where he rode in the Fair show on Treasure Island.

Officers' Club Inaugurates New Cafeteria

A new cafeteria, designed to speed up service for officers and their families eating there, has been opened at the Officers' Mess on the Main Post, it has been announced by Capt. James K. Guthrie, secretary of the Officers' Mess at Fort Benning.

Located adjacent to the main dining room of the Officers' Club, the cafeteria-style service will take the place of the Grill which previously occupied the room. Breakfasts will be served from 6:30 until 11; luncheons from 11:30 until 2; and dinners from 5:30 until 8 o'clock in the evening.

HOURS ANNOUNCED

Between these hours a la carte menus will be in effect, Capt. Guthrie states. There will be no change in the hours of closing for the Grill. From Mondays through Fridays service will cease at 10:30 in the evening, while on Saturday nights the room will close at midnight. On Sundays service will be continued until 11:30 at night.

According to Captain Guthrie, three factors motivated changing the service in the Grill to that of cafeteria style. With the new self-service method, he said, it is estimated that there will be an increase in the number of officers and their guests who can use this room for dining.

WARMER FOOD

Another factor is that the food served to the diners can be carried directly from the counter to the table, consequently being warmer when it is eaten. A third point brought out by the captain is that there will be a reduction in the cost of food, both to the Officers' Mess and to the members as a result of the new method.

A recent series of inspections of installations around the Post by Col. William H. Hobson, commanding officer of Fort Benning, has revealed that the Officers' Mess is maintaining the highest of standards expected of dining rooms, restaurants and other eating places.

Peace is not the absence of conflict in life but the ability to cope with it.

RC PO Averages 7,000 Pieces of Mail Each Day

Mail bags, bulging with a daily average of 7,000 pieces of mail for service men in the Reception Center, indicate the close ties budding soldiers maintain with folks back home, shortly after donning military uniforms at Fort Benning, Ga. Thrust, as they are, into a new world of experience in which they face the future with anxiety, Reception Center boys ease their tense emotions by getting word back home as quickly as possible.

"So writing becomes the first order of the day," Sergeant G. F. Somer, chief mail clerk of the Reception Center Mail Room asserted, and added,

"Aside from the great volume of letters we handle each day, our staff also distributes on an average of 125 special deliveries every day, and probably more registered mail than any mail room on the post."

On the Double

Mail call always brings service men to company streets on the double. Many expect replies almost before their letters have been received back home. Others insist that there must be that package "my wife promised she's sent," and plead with the company clerk to dig into his bag for another look. All are hopeful that the old mail sack will yield one little message to give them new hope and boster up their courage.

The Christmas season has added tremendously to the work of the Reception Center Mail Room personnel. This year home folks have responded to pleas over the radio and through the newspapers to mail early, and company mail clerks have been packing increasingly heavy bags since Thanksgiving.

There are frequent and many transfers made in the Reception Center among the more than 10,000 soldiers. Men are being constantly shipped, either to new military posts, or to other companies within the Center. Yet the Reception Center Mail Room has satisfactorily coped with the situation. Staff members and company clerks are imbued with the traditional slogan of the postal service, "The Mail must get through." They have succeeded in getting practically all mail to the men — wherever they have gone.

The Chief Clerk

Chief Clerk Comer, prior to his induction into the service, was a letter carrier in Atlanta, Ga. He was immediately assigned to the Reception Center Mail Room as assistant clerk, and for about a year has served as chief clerk. He attended college at Tuskegee institute. Other members of his staff are: Cpl. Russell D. Leonard, Chattanooga, Tenn., assistant chief clerk; T.-5 James Francis, Whiteville, N. C.; T.-5 Harvey S. Moore, Atlanta, Ga.; Pvts. Nellie Harmon and Ollie Johnson, Atlanta, Ga., and Pvt. Rosa Murray, Raleigh, N. C. The latter three are members of the Women's Army Corps at the post.

Sgt. Comer advises soldiers to take due care to properly address their letters, including in the return address their full names, army serial numbers, company or organization and post office. Soldiers must also remember that after their letters are sealed they become first class and cannot be opened by anyone in his office, Sgt. Comer said. He mentioned the case of a soldier who had written letters to two girl friends. Through a mix-up, he put the letter written to one frien din the envelope addressed to the other. It was not until his letters had been mailed that he realized the mistake he had made. "We sympathized with him, but couldn't do a thing to help him out of the situation," Sgt. Comer said.

COMPANY CLERKS OK

Company clerks responsible for the distribution of mail to individual soldiers are due much of the credit for the efficiency of operation of the Reception Center mail room. Typical of the company clerks is Sgt. Michael (Mike) Cheatham, backfield star with the Reception Center Tigers and head clerk for Company C. Mike Cheatham "bucks the mail sack" for his men of Company C, approximately 1,400 of them, with the impact and efficiency of his drives on the gridiron. When Mike calls mail, the boys really "get on the ball."

Mail is called two times a day, usually right after mess. Company C is believed to lead in the number of company letters that pass through the Reception Center mail room, but Chief Clerk Comer said that no exact estimte has been made. Chief clerks of other companies in the Reception Center are: Cpl. Aharte Carter, Co. A; T-5 Cleavant Derrick, Hq. Co.; Charles Wright, Co. D; Cpl. Earnest Street, Co. E; Cpl. James Bettes, 1st Co.; T-5 Oscar Burton, 2nd Co.; Pvt. Thomas Ballentine, 3d Co.; Pvt. Occie J. Gillis, 4th Co.; Pvt. Vivian Henderson, 9th Co.; T-5 Joseph H. Hercutt, 10th Co.; T-5 Alexander A. Hall, 11th Co.; Cpl. Robert R. Gibson, 12th Co.; Cpl. James Franklin, 15th Co.; Cpl. Willie Hudson, 16th Co.; William J. Cawthon, 17th Co.; and clerk for the entire 3d Battalion; Pvt. John H. Bramlett, 18th Co.; T-5 Henry Cooksye, 19th Co.; Pvt. John T. Hood, 20th Co.; Pvt. Oscar Stanback, 21st Co.; and Cpl. Antoine Henningberg, 22nd. Co.

FD To Inspect All Decorations

To protect soldiers from fire hazards from Christmas decorations, military authorities at Fort Benning will inspect civilian establishments used by military personnel, and those which refuse to comply with the Army safety regulations may be placed "off limits," post headquarters announced yesterday. Every effort will be made to safeguard against the possibility of fire which could take a tragic toll of life, post authorities, said.

Restrictions have been placed on the type of materials used for decorating barracks, quarters, offices and other buildings on the post, and organization commanders must obtain the approval of the fire chief or the fire marshal for their scheme of decoration.

MUST BE FIREPROOF

Only fireproof decorations may be used, and purchasers were warned that materials, even though marked "fireproof," should be tested with a match for inflammability, since fireproofed paper of an old stock frequently burns as rapidly as though never treated.

Post authorities will note the type of decorations put up by civilians in establishments off the post used by soldiers to be sure that they conform to safety regulation. In places where decorations appear to constitute a serious fire hazard, the owner or operator will be asked to remove the hazard. If he fails to comply, his establishment may be placed "off limits" to military personnel.

SPRAY SOLUTION

Post Fire Chief Joseph L. Hogan said yesterday that trees, wreaths, and similar decorations could be made fireproof by spraying them with a solution of four fluid ounces of boric acid and nine ounces of boric to a gallon of water.

Untreated paper streamers or other light and easily inflammable decorations must not be used.

Freedom has not failed except where we have.

'Hold Tight' To Play Post For Six Days

Fort Benning will present, in addition to the many other attractions scheduled for the holiday season, a new USO show entitled "Hold Tight," it was announced by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, chief, Special Service Branch.

"Hold Tight" is a novel vaudeville type revue filled to the brim with all-star talent and the cream of the stage and night clubs. This USO-CAMP SHOWS production offers as much novelty as any unit yet seen.

Clever songs, the latest in sweet and rhythm numbers are rightfully featured in this revue. In addition to musical numbers, "Hold Tight" also affords three novelty acts that put it in a class by itself. It is doubtful that these marvelous and breath-taking acts will be forgotten by the men who see them. To top it all, the show is introduced and guided by a globe-trotting singing comedian Bobby (Uke) Henshaw, who acts as M. C.

Don Baker's Rhythemettes head the star-studded cast. Here are five beauteous and talented girls who have appeared in all the leading theatres in the country.

Helen Wall, a delightfully modest youngster with a charming personality performs the most difficult feats of balance, never once losing her grace.

Johnny Hayman, the blackboard marvel, completes the cast of his gay revue.

Schedule of performances:

Tuesday, December 21 — Main Theatre—7 and 9 p. m.

Columbus Papers Keep Luckies In Field Informed On World News

Hot from the newsroom of the Columbus (Ga.) Ledger & Enquirer comes the news in capsule form once daily to 7th Armored division men living in the field, through their division special service office.

Arrangements made with the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer enable the "Lucky 7th" to bring late war news to men in the field by means of a mimeographed bulletin called "Newscast." This is written and edited daily by Lt. Harold Swan and Cpl. John J. Sheehan of Division Special Services.

Every morning at 6:30 a. m. Cpl. Sheehan goes to town where he makes notes on what is happening. Then he returns to camp where with Lt. Swan he picks out the day's highlights an dstencils maps of the "front" with the day's heaviest fighting.

This done, news and maps are mimeographed in sufficient number to cover the division. Then the one-page "Newscast" printed on both sides is taken to message center which distributes it to the men in the field.

LUCKIES ON AIR

Starting Tuesday evenings right for many a musician-hungry G.I. in the 7th Armored division is a new radio program called "Rambles In Rhythm," broadcast weekly at 1830 over WRBL from downtown Columbus. Under the supervision of the division special office, the 15 minutes of dance music contain tunes taken from requests made throughout the division during the week.

'Off-Limits'—Exactly What The Word Means

One of the most widely of misinterpreted phrases in use in the Army today, or for that matter in the entire armed service, is that of "Off Limits." Mere mention of those two words immediately conjure up all sorts of fantastic ideas concerning the reputation, character, or what have you of the location in question. Actually, nothing could be further from the truth in most cases.

As the FORT BLISS NEWS puts it, the reason that the beer parlor down on the corner is off limits is not because the Army wants you to drink milk and nothing else. And it isn't because MP's have nothing better to do than stick their noses in other people's business.

The FORT BLISS NEWS sums it up this way: "Why do they ban this or that place to military personnel? The answer's easy, bud. It's for your own good. And that doesn't mean the Army doesn't think you can look out for yourself, either."

In those dim, distant days when we were civilians, most of us, in the course of our everyday business encountered some kind of an inspector. There were fire inspectors, building inspectors, health inspectors, and so on through the entire list. Their jobs were to look over the buildings, restaurants, theatres, and the like to assure the local governments that the safety and well being of the civilian were being protected. If some theatre did not have sufficient fire exits, it was notified of the fact and the violation had to be rectified before hundreds of persons were permitted to enter it again. If faulty construction material or methods were being used to erect a building, building inspectors would condemn the work—in some cases the entire building—until corrections had been made.

We're at war now—a total war for the life of our country and the principles upon which it was founded. We aren't civilians any more. We're under military regulations and laws. So instead of local authorities doing the inspecting of locations, it's the Army that does it—often in co-operation with local authorities. And the Army wants to be sure that its men and women are taken care of properly. It is responsible for your health, and it means to see that when you eat in town, or drop in for a beer or two, you won't have to worry about unsanitary conditions, or that you are being short changed, or such.

If a place is not clean—morally, or physically; if it does not offer sufficient protection in the way of fire exits or fireproof material or fire-fighting apparatus; if it is more concerned with making money at the expense of the GI who comes into town for a bit of relaxation on a limited budget, and doesn't give the soldier his money's worth, then the place is declared "off limits." That's all there is to it.

An unsanitary place can injure a soldier's physical health. And a sick soldier is no good to the war effort, to say nothing of the additional expense to the taxpayer to give him the excellent care which he gets from the Medical Corps.

A place that is unclean morally can do even worse. Aside from possible disease, there is the question of the moral character of the soldier. And a soldier with a poor character isn't a soldier.

Most of the civilian enterprises around Fort Benning are run by people who probably have children or relatives of their own in the service. They are reputable business people who have made an honest living before we went into the Service, and they are continuing to do it today, despite rationing, shortages, and various other problems that the civilian of today faces.

But as there must be in every organization, civilian or military, one or two are not quite up to the standard, one or two always try to take the easy way of life. It's bound to be that way just by the law of averages.

Those are the ones that are "off limits." Those are the ones that should be passed up. As a matter of fact, places in town are declared "off limits" only after warnings have been given to correct certain conditions or practices. They are told what's wrong. If they do nothing about it, they have no one to blame but themselves. Don't waste any time worrying about them.

—M. L. D.

Waal, just before I got ready to pay a deposit, I saw that funny look in tha baby's eyes. . . . As I had seen it sooooo many times on tha train . . . I sez I will not be having no insignias on tha lady's rug, I sez to meself . . . So I just pinches tha baby and tha trouble starts!!! . . . Not only did he yell fer three hours without no ten-minute breaks, ut I might just as well turn a fire extinguisher upside down in tha lady's parlor!!! . . .

Babies is always making yer wifey tired . . . I tried to look at me old bomber like a movie actor tha other day . . . And she just sez to me . . . "Oh, Gaw-urge, stop looking at me with them silly sixty-forty eyes!" . . . She sez "Go change the baby and give him his bottle!!! . . . One time I yam going to put dandruff remover in his durn milk!!!

We also got a boy five years old. . . . He's right at tha "cute age." . . . He's cute alright. . . . Just come over to our house sometime and take a gander at the winter underwear we got stuffed into holes in our winders!!! . . . He throws his bike downstairs and then tells me he thought it was much easier to get downstairs thataway!!! . . . Our landlord came in fer tha rent yesterday, and little Jimmy ups and asks him where is tha lady you live with, Huh? . . . Tha landlord sez—you mean my wife? . . . Jimmy sez no, just tha lady you live with . . . tsk, tsk . . . Of course Jimmy meant his wife, I sez . . . Jimmy sez no, daddy I mean tha lady you and mommy was talkin about last night when mommy took the rent money out of your pay!!

My letter to Santa this year looks like a requisition paper for an ammunition depot!!! . . . I really love 'em tho. . . . Gonna put 'em in a baby contest next year . . . with a special float made out of a garbage can . . . I'm kiddin, honey.

Prickly Heat The Scourge Of Benning Summer Time

Most people think of prickly heat or itchy rash as it is commonly called, as an affliction only occurring in babies. Adults who get it in very hot humid weather, consider it as a trivial, annoying skin irritation. Even in the Tropics, where it occurs more frequently, it is never considered serious.

However, for soldiers fighting in the Tropics, it may be quite dangerous. In some cases even here at Fort Benning, during the summer field problems, some few cases are so covered with heat rash that they are forced to bed in a cool barrack for 24 hours and in exceptional cases even 48 hours are lost from duty.

The cause of prickly heat has been debated among scientists. The fundamental etiological cause is usually excessive sweating, with accumulation of dust into the sweat glands.

It seems that the sweat glands get out of order as a result of excessive activity, and their ducts are blocked with conjestion and retained secretions. The complications of the skin condition are infection, boils, ulcers, and sometimes fungus infections.

The treatment of heat rash is simple. Cleanliness, avoidance of sweating, and the immediate drying of sweat with a clean cloth as it forms. Medical officers usually advise frequent bathing and dusting powders, or sponging the skin with 50 per cent alcohol and then applying a powder to the skin. Underclothes should be clean and changed often by people who sweat easily and profusely.

Two Ears, Only One Mouth; Stop, Listen, Keep Mum

SAFEGUARD MILITARY INFORMATION. That, in itself, is a logical statement and all soldiers know its meaning and intent. But, there still continues a vast amount of idle talk concerning military matters which, in these days of war, have come to be classed as military information of a vital nature and, as such, should not be discussed.

In 1938 foreign powers operated more than 100 missions of secret service in America. Although clandestine intruders, these were merely known as missions; they came to America as operatives of Fascist countries—Italy, Germany, and Japan. One's imagination need not be too greatly taxed for him to appreciate the possibility of an even larger number of espionage and sabotage missions in America today. This corps of foreign agents is composed of uncommonly skilled, well-equipped fifth columnists, embodying long experience and training, and functioning with high efficiency. The primary work of these agents is calculated destruction and the collection of information for almost instantaneous transmission to their secret service masters abroad, or at an intermediate point.

Too much stress cannot be placed upon the necessity for refraining from discussing subjects appertaining to our country's war efforts, no matter how insignificant the subject may appear. Too often what may appear meaningless to us is most significant and of vital importance to our enemies. Already we have been cautioned a great many times regarding safeguarding military information.

At this moment, a campaign against idle talk is under way, at Fort Benning, sponsored by the Security Educational Advisor Section of the Military Intelligence Branch, Post Headquarters.

Our enemies have BIG EARS. Let's give them nothing to listen to. Keep 'em guessing. ZIP THE LIP!

This time it must be "hands across the sea" which grasp nothing except each other.

When public office is just looked on as a "plum," democracy is no longer a way of life. It is nothing but a way to make a living.

We must live democracy, as well as believe in it, in order to have it.

Let's back America by living like Americans. Americans are honest, unselfish, neighborly, clean, free and united. Are we? All of the time?

If we ourselves dig up "buried hatchets" as soon as the war is over, we can scarcely expect our enemies to forever bury their swords.

Miss Jean Phister of the sales commissary came to work proudly wearing her new Civilian Award medal colors last week after the big presentation in Douthboy stadium. Imagine her surprise to have a Second Looey step up and inform her that there were all sorts of laws against wearing insignia and that she really should not do it. The Looey's face was very very red when Miss Phister sweetly told him about the new award.

Corp. Tabor was planning on donating some of his blood to the mobile blood unit. They looked at him and said "For heaven's sake, how do you expect us to find any?"

In the 300th, they're laughing over Pfc. Fairfax and his missing jeep. Appears that he went out on a problem week or so ago, parked his jeep, left it. Returning, he found the jeep gone. Investigation showed that pair of Colonels or something, from Infantry School, had taken it by mistake.

And then pity poor Company "C" of the 300th. They gave up part of their day-room so the Regimental Guard could have a place to park weary frames. Now they wish some other outfit would donate any extra space so they could have their day-room facilities back again.

How To Live With High Blood Pressure

Fortunately we don't see many cases of high blood pressure in the Army, because these cases are eliminated at the Induction Centers. Occasionally we run into an older officer, who is suffering from this condition who needs medical aid and advice.

Although high blood pressure is not recognized as a disease, yet it kills more people, and it is the greatest single cause of disability. Statistics show that high blood pressure disables nearly one-third more persons than do accidents.

Those afflicted with this condition, can live a long comfortable life if they take the proper precautions like doing everything in moderation. Never run up a flight of stairs. Don't get excessively tired. Eat light meals more often than three times a day.. Avoid competitive sports, but not exercise. Keep your weight within normal bounds. Avoid argument and worry. If you exercise, never go on to a point of fatigue. Sleep about 10 hours a night and try to take a nap in the daytime.

Some people say that too much meat causes high blood pressure but this is disproved, because Eskimos and Arctic Explorers consume large amounts of meat without developing this condition. Salt has also been incriminated as a cause, but there is little evidence to support this claim. Sugars and fats can be taken in ordinary amounts, and water likewise. Alcohol can be taken in small amounts, but not excessively, especially if a patient has taken large quantities for many years.

To avoid high blood pressure just live simply and do everything in moderation, also avoid excesses in everything.

WHAT'S YOUR HURRY?

Chaplain F. M. Thompson

We are surely stepping on the gas these days. Records in almost every line of endeavor are being broken. Even a glacier up in Alaska is doing an all-time marathon, making better time than any known ice mountain.

No doubt some things need speeding up. The fight waged for safe highways, against poverty, disease, crime, ought to take on increased activity and devotion.

Likewise we could do with a little more moral and spiritual momentum. Our lives viewed from that position seem to stand still. If there be any improvement it is very meager, hardly noticeable. The old selfishness, prejudice, ill temper, viciousness, cling to us like barnacles on a ship.

The same holds true for the whole earth. We get nowhere fast. Down the ages these words echo and reecho. "Man's inhumanity to man, makes countless thousands mourn."

This phase of life is very disturbing, especially to those who would remake the world over night. And yet it is very certain that—

Step by step, since Time began,
We see the steady gain of man.

It is also quite evident the Almight does not run the universe with a stop watch in his hand. He is in no hurry.

A thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday When it is past, and as a watch in the night.

A mushroom springs up in few hours, but years pass, yea centuries, in growing a giant sequoia.

In your patience ye shall win your souls.

Kay Says—

IT WILL TAKE ALL HER INGENUITY TO GET PROPER YULE DECORATIONS

Deliberate attempts of some unknown person or persons in the army to thwart my efforts at Christmas decorations are beginning to annoy me. The efforts must be deliberate. No one could evolve so many ways of upsetting plans by mere chance.

For two Christmases, now, I've had designs on a few of the innumerable greens and holiday berries which grow so luxuriantly at Fort Benning. For two years I've attended lectures on how to decorate quarters with such greens and berries, and have come away from the lectures with enthusiastic plans. But for two years the army, in some cunning and devious manner, has stepped in to throw my plans awry.

Last year the method was very direct. At the opportune moment one of those mysterious orders appeared in the Daily Bulletin. It said, in no uncertain terms, that bushes and trees around quarters were not to be touched. I'm a law-abiding citizen, most of the time. At any rate, Christmas came and went without a magnolia leaf or a hawthorne berry to brighten mantel or table.

This year the approach was much more subtle. I had scanned the Bulletin minutely, on those rare occasions when my husband remembered to bring it home. There was no order, as far as I could see, barring housewives from snipping a branch of holly or a spray of laurel. My faith momentarily restored, I even went so far as to ask innumerable questions as to ways of gilding or silvering greens to give an effect that would make this Christmas one long to be remembered.

And then I looked out of my window to discover a crew of men industriously pruning. Away went the ligustrum, those black berries I'd counted on to glister in silvered splendor on the mantel. Down came the hawthorne berries, which were to have been reflected in all their ruddy glory. The same fate befell the holly, the laurel, the magnolia leaves as high up as I could reach. Just too late to confront the pruners with an impassioned plea of "woodmen, spare that tree," I was balked even in my attempts to snatch a few withered branches from the pile of debris before it was hauled away.

To add insult to injury, our beautifully tidy yard once more has to be raked and cleaned. In addition, windows which looked fairly passable when shrouded by a mass of shrubbry are shown in all their nakedness, and a window-washing spree is in order. Preparations for Christmas and a last-minute frantic search for suitable presents must stop while an unexpected clean-up week gets underway.

I've partially foiled the army's attempts to make mine a Christmas without decorations, however. I've snatched up as many pine cones as I could find, before someone decides they're essential to the war effort. I've hoarded a few red and green candles. And I have two beautiful red paper bells that will swing gallantly from chandeliers. Come Christmas morning and we'll be just as gay as we've ever been. But I'd like to find the man who contrives those fiendish ideas about denuding my bushes. Me must have been disillusioned about Santa Claus when he was very, very young.

THE COLONEL CUT QUITE A FIGGER WITH THE LADIES IN HIS YOUTH

By S-SGT. TOM McDONALD

"In my earlier days," began Colonel Swampwater, "I was what is commonly known as a general favorite with the young ladies of my community."

No sooner had these words been spoken—than the three young officers in the ol' boy's office leaned slightly forward and cocked their ears. It was evident that the "lord of the regiment" was going into a spiel, that might, with proper prompting, develop into a first-class bull session, a factor that took much of time, but nevertheless enabled a young man to sit in a warm place and listen. Both Lt. Jericho and Lt. Bawlson surmised that this was better than going around their platoons to look at everybody's dirty feet. Foot inspection by chance arriving on the day when social visits to my leader's lair were more agreeable.

"Yes," continued the ol' boy, "feminine hearts fluttered with anticipation whenever I set foot upon a threshold. If we had of had movies back in those times I would have undoubtedly been the 'Tyrone Power' of my day."

"You're quite handsome now, sir!" added Lt. Shylock, at the same time wondering if there was any chance of being recommended for a captaincy.

"Just well preserved, my boy," grinned my leader. "I owe my enduring beauty to Bawlson.

"Mine, too!" rejoined Lt. Shylock.

"Well, then," the ol' boy assumed, "you won't mind my having a look at 'em, then. I haven't pulled a foot inspection since I was in Mexico."

Is this necessary, sir?" asked Lt. Jericho.

"It is," replied the colonel. "In cadence, REMOVE SHOES! 1! 2! REMOVE SOCKS, 7, 2, BY THE NUMBERS, PRESENT TOES! 1—2—3—4—5!

"There! a motley crew of toes if I ever saw any," the ol' boy cackled, "and tell me, Jericho, why do you have so many holes in your socks?"

"I've been in the doghouse at home during the past month, sir. I forget to sign out one night and my wife restricted me to the area and put me on K. P."

"Fortunes of war, gentlemen. But now that this little inspection is over, put your socks on and go inspect all the feet in your platoons! You can't use this 'bull session' trick to fool ol' G.P. I uta do it myself when I was a shavetail!"

Three long-faced lieutenants filed barefooted out of the colonel's office as he smacked down on a stick of Evergreen mint gum and

G. I. Joe Salutes Soldier In Mufti

The past 21 years have brought many revolutionary changes to Fort Benning, but Henry B. Hug, chief clerk of the Supply and Service Division and longtime civil service employee at the post, remembers only too well that one of today's biggest problems — the transportation of troops in and out of the post and the billeting of army personnel and their families —was just as big a headache in Benning's early days.

When Mr. Hug first came to the post on Dec. 22, 1922, he was principal clerk for the transportation branch of the post quartermaster, handling rail, motor and animal transportation, and in charge of the billeting branch.

E. E. HUG

There were virtually no quarters on the post at that time, and student officers attending courses at The Infantry School had to live in Columbus and commute to classes. The school term ended each year on May 28, and the students all wanted to leave before June 1 to avoid paying another month's rent. Moving out 500 to 750 families at once was an annual scramble that taxed the facilities and ingenuity of the transportation branch.

Mr. Hug's civil service career started on May 16, 1919, the day after he was discharged from the army. From August of 1917 to May 15, 1919, he had been in service with the Expeditionary Quartermaster, at Newport News and Norfolk, Va. He started as a private, was promoted to sergeant, and was then commissioned a first lieutenant.

Mr. Hug served for a time at Newport News under a major who had been wounded in France and sent back for temporary duty as port transportation officer. The officer is now Maj. Gen. Charles H. Bonesteel, commandant of The Infantry School.

Mr. Hug's first civilian service for the War Department was at the army supply base at Norfolk, where he worked until coming to Benning in 1922. He held the position of chief clerk of the transportation branch until 1934, when he was made chief clerk for the quartermaster. From July 1, 1939, to December 31, 1941, he was also chief clerk for the construction quartermaster, during the period when much of the present vast installations of the post were being built.

When the War Department organized the Supply and Service Division about a year ago, he became chief clerk for that division.

Mr. Hug is married and has three children. The family lives at 200 Lumpkin Road on the road.

Two men whose job in the first World War was to "keep 'em rolling" are still at it in the Post Ordnance Shop, Sand Hill. The difference is that in this war their uniform is the overalls of the civilian worker.

They are Evert H. Blair, assistant armored foreman, and Thomas C. Joiner, assistant shop foreman and inspector. They did maintenance work on army vehicles in the last war, filled the gap between wars in the same type of work, and now service tanks for the various armored divisions which have been stationed at Sand Hill.

Mr. Blair, a native of Williamsport, Pa., was in service with a motor transport outfit from June 15, 1918, to May 26, 1919. He was stationed first at Camp Johnston, Fla., and was sent to Fort Meade, Md., in January, 1919. After his discharge from the army, he worked as a civilian mechanic with the motor transport branch at Meade, but due to some clerical error, he was not entered on civil service records until March 7, 1920, when he started work in the automotive shops at Fort Meade.

E. E. BLAIR

Mr. Blair came to Fort Benning in 1932 and was assigned to tank maintenance in the Post Ordnance shop.

Mr. Blair, who is married and has two children, lives at 3618 Buena Vista Road, Columbus.

Mr. Joiner served in the 336th Tank Battalion from July 26, 1918, to June 19, 1919.

On June 30, 1919, he was employed in the ordnance department at Fort Meade, where he worked until 1923. At that time he went to Panama to do experimental work with tanks, and returned to Meade in 1924.

T. C. JOINER

He remained there until he was transferred to the Post Ordnance shop at Benning in 1926.

When he was a recruit at Camp Colt, Gettysburg, Pa., Mr. Joiner's commanding officer was a major named Dwight D. Eisenhower—now General Eisenhower, Allied commander-in-chief in the Mediterranean theater.

Mr. Joiner is married and has five children. The family lives at 1100 Perkins Street, Fort Benning.

Chaplain Condon Assigned To ASTP Sixth Regiment

Chaplain John Paul Condon has reported to the ASTP Basic Training Center and has been assigned to the 6th Training Regiment, according to an announcement by Colonel Wilson M. Spann, commanding officer of the Center.

Chaplain Condon attended the Woonsocket, R. I., Public schools and Mt. St. Charles Academy of the same city. Also Providence College, Providence, R. I., Grand Seminary, St. Brieve, France and St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, Maryland.

He received his commission as 1st lieutenant in the Chaplains Corps on November 30 of this year and shortly thereafter received his assignment to Fort Benning.

CHUTE MAKERS INSPECT HANDIWORK

Chute Makers See Products In Action Here

Ten representatives of various parachute - manufacturing concerns recently visited the Parachute School here on an invitation from school officials to allow them to see their products in action. The men came to Fort Benning on the invitation of Major Richard C. Alverson, chief of the Maintenance Section.

Guests included Edward Bolen of the National Automotive Fibres, Inc., Detroit, Mich.; O. J. Mink of the Reliance Manufactring Co., Chicago, Ill.

Also included were R. Switlik and Milton St. Clair, representing the Switlik Manufacturing Co. of New Jersey, both of whom were instrumental in the development of the towers now such an integral part of parachute training at Fort Benning.

These men received their inspiration for the first towers at Hightstown, N. J., from Amelia Earhart, who brought the idea back from her trip to Russia, where the use of towers for novice parachutists had been in vogue for quite some time. The towers used at the New York World's Fair in 1939 were based on the experiments of the Switlik Company, and the Fair's towers were the forerunner of the ones in use here today.

MATERIEL DROPPED

Another part of parachuting was keenly observed by J. J. Maskey, of Materiel Command, Wright Field, Dayton, O. He observed the ways in which materiel can be dropped to troops, and the various arrangements on the big cargo planes for carrying supplies on the outside of the fuselage.

Joe Crane, representing the Atlantic Parachute Mfg. Co., smiled when the pilot, prior to taking the visitors up to watch some Paratroopers jump, came back and gave him instructions on how to use a chute—Mr. Crane has 641 jumps to his credit.

ALL IMPRESSED

The visitors, many of whom had never been here before, were amazed at the size and completeness of the school. Watching the care with which the men were handled and inspected through each stage to minimize injury, they were all of the opinion that little else could be added by them.

Major Alverson in describing the school to the industrialists, said " . . . through refinements in instruction and the improved equipment supplied by your respective companies, injuries have been reduced to such a degree that today's Paratrooper stands less than one per cent chance of being injured while making a parachute jump.

Are you planning to telephone the folks back home during the holiday season The telephone company suggests you avoid the 7 to 10 p. m. busy time, and you'll have a better chance of getting your call through. This is a good suggestion any time but is a particularly good point to keep in mind at Christmas time.

653rd TD Bn. Awards 27 Conduct Medals

The Good Conduct Medal has been awarded to 24 enlisted men of the 653rd Tank Destroyer Battalion located in the Sand Hill area.

Coming to this station in September from Camp Hood, Texas, home of the famous battle-conditioning course, the 653rd is the only Tank Destroyer outfit in Fort Benning.

Those awarded the Good Conduct Medal by Major Joseph Sill, Jr., commanding officer, are:

Headquarters Company: T. Sgt. Joseph L. Clark, S. Sgt. Leonard F. Sharp, Sgt. Albert N. Erion, T-4 Allen Premey, T-4 Stephen G. Rendulic, Cpl. Danny Scarletto, Cpl. Charles F. Connell and T-5 Oscar Kehrer; Reconnaissance Company: S. Sgt. George Aycob, S. Sgt. Jack F. Ertmann, S. Sgt. Robert B. Proper, T-4 Elwyn C. Scheiber, Cpl. Frank E. Mitchell, Pvt. Robert L. Dorrick and Pvt. Hollis D. Kitelinger; Company A: T-4 Hamilton J. Allen, T-4 Ralph F. Hoover, and T-4 John L. Pettis; Company B: 1st Sgt. Virgil F. Becker, S. Sgt. Harry Brechtel, T-4 James D. Summers and T-4 Thomas M. Snellings; and Company C: T-4 George J. Helbert and T-5 George A. Thuernau.

If you can't get home for Christmas and expect to call instead, the telephone company suggests you let your family or girl friend know approximately when you will call. Plan your conversation, too. This will keep your call brief and enable others to get a line sooner.

Frequently a telephone call takes quite a while to complete. This will be especially true at Christmas, so if you encounter a delay, please be patient—the telephone company will do everything possible to get your call through.

Parachute Paragraphs

By Sgt. Fountain Meadows

THERE ISN'T MUCH PARACHUTE IN THESE PARAGRAPHS. There won't be any flashy P-38's, or tanks or destroyers or any of the headline hoopla that newspapers relish so ecstatically. I'm warning you now that if you're looking for thrills or dash or glamour today you'd better droy this right now and search out SUPERMAN. There wouldn't seem to be very much super about the men I am going to write about. Maybe there is though—let's look and see.

Every war has had it's heroes. The headine-hawkers. Fortunately or not, very few of us get the official nod of "HERO." We get our share of public and parental approval. We get along. But there are other men who do jobs in the service that may not be too pleasant and that offer very little chance for the old glory road. They do things that have to be done. They do things without which there could be no winning peace. They are essential.

TAKE PFC. WILBUR T. JONES AND PFC. COLA MAC CARDIE up at the First Academic company at the Parachute School. These two men are the company firemen. Yes, they don't do anything but keep steaming hot water at faucets' touch 24 hours a day in all the barracks of the company. On top of that they keep all the buildings warm and healthful in this humidly cold climate. Now the point is THEY DO THEIR JOB. Sure we could get along without heat and water, maybe. Maybe we could get along without ice cream or USO or a lot of things that together spell WIN. Maybe we could. These two men are not doing a job that could be called exciting. They are not learning a vital trade. They are not getting rich at it. All they are doing is serving their country in a way that is directly contributing to Victory.

Theirs is a job which is so unobtrusive and quiet that no one would ever notice it except maybe to register not too much approval of a man who diesn't jump out of airplanes or drive a tank or 'plane. Day after day they do their job 100 per cent.

Now look yourself in the eye and say the same thing.

This Is The Stage in which everything taught the student (we fervently hope) is put to the acidest of reality—the real live thing. This is the event towards which the student has been gunning since the day he put his application through channels to volunteer for service with the Parachute Infantry. This, brother, is IT!

Two Strong 8-Club Leagues Ready for Court Season

Star-Studded TIS Loop Gets Under Way Tonight

Twin Bills Slated for Post Gym, Sports Arena Starting at 7:30

A galaxy of court stars that would do justice even to the famed hardwood of Madison Square Garden will swing into action tonight in the opening games of the Infantry School League, a circuit that is expected to be the strongest in post history.

Collegians and pros from almost every sector of the country are listed on the rosters of the eight clubs. So great is the collection of cord-rippling talent that no one team rates as an outstanding favorite. Critics generally concede that at least six of the eight star-studded entries rate a chance to come through as first-half champions.

The opening games of the league on Thursday night at the Main Post Gym slate the Academic Profs against the 6th Training Regiment Eagles and in the nightcap, the 176th Spirits will renew their athletic rivalry with the 300th Sabers. Out in Harmony Church Sports Arena, the 3rd Student Training Regiment Eagles will open the show Thursday against the 4th Training Regiment Spartans. The nightcap game will pit the ASTP Headquarters Leaders and the 131st Infantry Snipers.

OUTLINE OF TEAMS

176th Infantry Spirits—coached by Lt. Kirk Gebert, an All-America from Washington State, captain of its 1942 team. The team has plenty of height from Jim Weir, six-foot five center from Wyoming University, winner of the National Collegiate tournament last year. (Weir was picked on Grantland Rice's All-America last year); Leo Mogus, six foot four, from Youngstown University; Leo Phillips, six foot three, from Colo Springs, Minnesota; Marv Lee, six foot three, with two years of UCLA varsity ball; Bob Waterfield, six foot one, also from UCLA; Sparky Suchara, six foot even, Spirit baseball catcher who handles himself well on the court. Others include John Sweeney, E. Pittsburgh; Walt Poland, Pittsburgh; John Hamlin, Murray State Teachers; Bernal Konopasek, Griffith, Ind. High; Joe Novocal, Farrell, Pa.; George Petriska, Conemaugh, Pa.; and Roy Stout, Anderson, Ind., High.

300th Infantry Sabers, coached by Lt. Frank Hebenstreit, a three year varsity man from Creighton University. He's six foot two. Bob Halliday, six foot even played three years on Yale's varsity. Tom Wahlen, a five foot eight shorty, played three years at Wesleyan. Leon Mai played freshman ball at Oklahoma and Kansas Universities. John "Jiggs" Stuart has varsity experience from Oklahoma A. and M. Andy Marsch played freshman ball at Michigan. Burnell Fischner was an all-state guard from Houston, Texas. Lefty Francis played with the 2nd STR Leaders last year and previously with the Profs. Gail Bass played professional ball with the Bearcleed Wizards. Ray Dobler is a product of the University of North Dakota where he played freshman basketball. The squad also includes John Manuel, Keewatin City, Minn.; Bernard Rabe, Chester Oak, Iowa; and Lefty Grate, of North Hollywood, Calif.

LT. PAWLINA COACH

131st Infantry Snipers coached by Lt. A. B. Pawlina, non-playing coach from Duquesne University. The Snipers have four six-footers who should provide plenty of opposition. Eugene Hussey a six foot four is the giant of the team. He's from the University of Maine. Bob Normal, six foot three, played varsity ball at the University of California. Leslie Peden played four years at Texas A. and M., and Bob Brenner, another six footer, has a year and a half of varsity ball at the University of Pennsylvania under his belt. Then there are Bob Burke, who set a scoring high in the USO league with 24 points recently; Johnny O'Reilly who played three years at St. Benedict's Prep in Detroit; Danny Gower from Stockton, Cal.; James Cuddy, University of Connecticut; and Willie Taylor, the only player left from the team which represented the 131st at Fort Brady last year.

Academic Profs, coached by Lt. Troy Ricks, an All-America from Delta State Teachers college. He moves up to six foot one. Benny Zientara, Cincy Reds second baseman, is a holdover from last year's team. Wilson Harpe, six foot three, and Leon McCrary, six foot two, played on the Georgia state champions in 1940. Erwin Prasse, six foot two, is the All-America of the league. He was picked on the All-America football and basketball teams in the same year while playing at Iowa. He also played on the world champion Oshkosh All-Stars. Tony Pirrello, a newcomer from Montclair, N. J., shows plenty of promise. Elmer Niebler, another baseballer, played pro ball in New York City. Herb Somersom is a product of the University of Wisconsin; Johnny Ossi, a deadly shot, played at Queens college, and De Sullivan comes from St. Ambrose college in Iowa. John Barrett, from Girard college, and Fred De Cicoo, from Brooklyn, round out the squad.

Sixth Training Regiment Eagles, coached by Capt. Frank Shannon, an All-America from Wittenberg college. He is well known to league fans as one of the outstanding players in the league. He has Bernard Mehen, a six foot one center from the University of Tennessee, and Milton Ticco, a newcomer, who played for the University of Kentucky. Jim Dooley is a six foot two guard from John Marshall college. Tommy Ryan, a league veteran; William Stevens, Lambert Ferriter, Charlie Bamberger, Sam Genet, and Dan Gabblanelli have had high school experience.

Third Student Training Regiment Rifles, coached by Lt. Edward "The Mole" Moeller from Ohio State. All except two of this club have had college experience. Bud Milliken played at Oklahoma A. and M.; Ray Sundquist is from Washington State; Carl Ott from the University of Ohio; Frank Thomas from the University of California; Ray Maggard from U. S. L. A.; Harold Rembold from Nebraska State Teachers; Ewelt Blackwell from LaVerne college; Sid Silverman from Warrensburg State Teachers, and Harry Clingenpeel from Kanawha college. Lonnie Bland and Ted Cook played varsity high school ball.

Fourth Training Regiment Spartans coached by Capt. Frank Cronin, from the University of Maryland. The team has been handicapped by lack of experience and may get away to a slow start. Cronin played two years of semi-pro ball around Washington. The Spartans have John Hartman, who played four years of high school varsity at Weir High, Kan., which won the state regional championship; Everett Trittschuh, high school ball in Lewisburg, Ohio; William Briggs, three years on the Sioux City High team which won the All-Missouri Valley conference title and two years at Morningside college; Bob Cope, six foot four center from Mount Union college; Keith Leech from Ziobenton High of Illinois; Harry Dansterman, three years of high school ball at Claremont, N. H., and intra-mural ball at the University of Maryland where he was picked as the most valuable player in the league; Sidney Berkowitz, Brooklyn college; John O'Dell, Plymouth, Indiana, High school and Buford Maddox, three years at Texas A. and M.

LEADERS ENTER LATE

The ASTP Leaders, coached by Lt. Fred A. Taylor who, incidentally, is the only officer on the team. The Leaders came into the league late, replacing the Fifth Training Regiment. Lieutenant Taylor is a product of the University of Missouri. Maynard Youngstead played ball at the University

Nehi Bottlers Upset Profs In Annual Battle

Academics Trail Most Of Way In 45-37 Tilt

By SGT. WALTER MILLER

In sad, sad need of practice, the Academic Regiment Profs got it the hard way by losing a hot pre-season contest to the Nehi Red five at the post gym last Friday night, 45-37. Although the Bottlers were leading at each quarter's end, they were sure of victory only in the last few minutes, when they racked up a safe six-point margin over the suddenly deflated Professors.

TRYOUT GAME

Frankly using the pre-season match as a tryout for his squad, Coach Ricks sat out most of the game to observe as he sent in frequent substitutions and observed different combinations at work. The Profs got off to a flashy start after Harpe sank the first double-decker of the night, but the offensive passed quickly to the Bottlers, Logan and Chase Riddle accounting for their team's lead of 10 to 6 at the end of the first stanza.

The teams squared off evenly in the second quarter, Ricks going on to spark some beautiful interludes of precision passwork, but the half ended 16-12 with Nehi still ahead.

During the last half the lead see-sawed frequently to the joy of a large and responsive crowd, but the Nehi squad had the wind to make the final sprint while the Profs were plainly tired near the close.

LOGAN SPARKLES

Bob Logan, Nehi's pivot man from the University of Tennessee, looped in six field goals and converted twice to lead the night's scoring with 14 points.

Ricks, outfoxed by Logan repeatedly on the offensive, was also off-form on the scoring, missing frequently but still hitting the hoops for 12 points. Ossi, operating for the Profs from the guard slot, sank five field goals, one of them a beautiful clean shot from mid-court. Niebler sparkled on the defensive, sprinting down the court again and again to intercept long passes. Prasse was perhaps the only Prof who looked ready for league competition, playing smoothly and feeding well.

Veteran Flier Quintet Favorite In Post Loop

Metcalfe, Hall and Crow Return To Bolster Lawson Field Hopes

Eight fast court machines will pry the lid off the 1942-43 Fort Benning League campaign next Monday when they collide in a pair of twin bills at the post gym and the sports arena in Harmony Church.

Entrants in the post league, whose eventual winner will battle the TIS champs for post honors, are Lawson Field, Parachute School, Station Hospital, 335th Ordnance, 25th Field Artillery, 1st STR, 6th Regiment, and 252nd Field Artillery.

Opening night attractions pit the 1st STR Wolves against the paratroopers and Lawson against the Medicos at the post gym. Out in the arena, the 6th Regiment Cardinals will tangle with the 335th, while the Artillery clubs clash in the nightcap.

FLIERS FAVORED

Inasmuch as little is known of the comparative strength of the rival quintets, the race will open with the Lawson Field Fliers rated as slight favorites. The Air Force quintet has several holdover vetrans from last year's crack team which finished a close second in the last-half race of the strong Fort Benning Conference, and was rated one of the best teams at the post.

Bill Metcalfe, an all-post selection last winter; Ace Hall, burly pivot; and Bill Crow, sharpshooting guard, are all back for another year in Flier rainment, and will form the nucleus of the Lawson quintet.

30-POINT MAN

In Van Nieda, former Penn State hoop ace, the Parachute School boasts a strong candidate for loop scoring honors in a practice tilt against the powerful 176th Spirits on Monday night, the willory forward rippled the nets for 30 points in an amezing performance.

Station Hospital will return to the court wars minus its all-post guard, Frank Webster, but will have Ducky Pond, a crack forward from last year's club, as a scoring ace. Otherwise the Medico cagers will all be newcomers.

TWO GREAT LOOPS

Lawson, 1st STR and the Station Hospital all performed last season in the conference along with five Infantry School aggregations. This year, however, an increased number of major teams has permitted the formation of two crack eight-club loops. The Fort Benning League will operate on a single-round-robin schedule, playing every Monday night.

Spartan Five Seeks First- And Last Win

4th T. R. Squad Ends Training After Tonight

When the 4th Basic Training Regiment Spartans tee off against the 3rd Student Training Regiment Rifles in one of the opening games of The Infantry School basketball league tonight, they'll be shooting the works for their first and last victory of the season. Shortly after tonight's game, the players will have completed their cycle in the Baisc Training Center and a new team will have to be recruited to carry on for the balance of the season.

The Spartans are now made up chiefly of men from the Second battalion of the regiment. They were selected to represent the regiment because of their outstanding play in the ASTP league. Capt. Frank Cronin, coach of the team, has been handicapped in his preparation for the league season because not all of his players were available for practice at the same time, some of them being in bivouac. However, he feels he has a bunch of talented boys on the club that will tackle the Rifles tonight and is pretty certain he can dig up some equally as good replacements for the games to come. All of the men on the team, excepting the coach, are privates.

WEIR MISSING

The 176th Infantry will play without the services of Lt. Jim Weir, 1943 All-America from Wyoming who is on leave, but otherwise, the teams in the circuit are in good shape for their opening battles.

New players have bolstered the 131st Infantry Snipers. . . . The 300th Infantry Sabers, about which little was known, played convincing ball in defeating Camp Rucker in a practice game last week. . . . The 176th Spirits, the Rifles and the 6th Regiment Eagles has eeiown well in practice games, as have the ASTP Headquarters Leaders, late comers to the circuit.

The Academic Profs didn't click in their first practice game and were beaten by the Nehi Bottlers of Columbus. But the Profs have too much latent talent on the club to be doormats for any team in the circuit.

They open the Main Post end of the season against the Eagles tonight while the Spirits play the Sabers. The Harmony Church program calls for a clash between the Leaders and Snipers as well as the Spartan-Rifle affair.

Mickey Panovich Of 1st STR Five Ex-Uclan Cager

You mean that fast, new forward playing on the Wolves' quintet? Yep, he's Lieutenant Mickey J. Panovich, UCLA basketball star until Uncle Sam grabbed him early this year.

Assigned to the Officers Replacement Pool of the Infantry School, Mickey and his flashy form make a welcome addition to the 1st Student Training Regiment's rapidly-shaping basketball team.

Spirit Cagemen Hold Their Own In USO Leagues

In the Columbus USO basketball league, the clubs representing the 176th Infantry of the Infantry School are holding their own, with the American League entry, the Ball Bearing Third holding a winning streak of two games. Their latest triumph came on Saturday when they defeated the 653rd Tank Destroyer Battalion in a close, fast contest.

After dropping their first league test to the 3rd STR by a 45 to 27 count, the Ball Bearings came back to take a pair from the 515th Parachute Regiment, 43 to 20 and the TD's 46 to 41. In the first win, the 176th club was led by Andy Stanlus and John Lockamy with twelve points apiece, while Bob Ramazotti was the big gun in the second victory as he slipped 14 points through the hoop.

Lieut. Forrest Russell is coaching the Ball Bearings and has his quintet made up of Stanlus, Ramazotti, Lockamy, Herb Petrello, Gar Verelle, Ed Liebner, Herb Klevan, Bill Klems, Johnny Tillotson, and Leo Sanders.

In the other loop, the Second Battalion club, the Grays, were handed their second loss of the campaign by the 653rd TD Panthers on Saturday afternoon.

Both teams played this week, the Grays facing the Lawson Field Flyers, current pace setters tonight, while the Ball Bearing quintet clashes with the Second Battalion of the 131st Infantry.

Can He Do It Again?

Col. Cox: "Go Get It, Spirit!"

300th Topples Chutists, Rucker in Early Battles

1st STR Wolves Prime For Game With Chutists

Scarlet and white clad basketeers of the 1st Student Training Regiment, the Infantry School, will take the court against the Parachute School for their opening game of the season on December 20, at 7:30 p. m. in the post gym.

The 1st S. T. R.'s Wolves, loaded with ex-high school and college stars, have been working out under the capable direction of Lieutenant Nick Thermos, him-self a former Illinois man.

EX-UCLAN ACE

Sparked by Mickey Panovich, flashy forward at UCLA, last year, Bill Skurdish, three sport man at Pitt, Thomason of the University of Minnesota, Richardson from U of Pennsylvania, Bogard of Indiana, Artie Wright from North Carolina; Freddie Thomas, ex-Roanoke, Va., semi-pro star; Bill Combouzou, Louisiana flash, and a host of others, the Wolves give every indication of being a real headache to the rest of the league.

With four practice sessions behind them and several more scheduled before their debut, Thermos anticipates fielding a smooth, fast, flashy outfit.

FIGHTING TEAM

Enthusiasm throughout the regiment is running high with rooters at practice sessions nightly. Coach Thermos refuses to commit himself concerning the championship but he states that the "Wolves will be the fightin'est team the Regiment has yet seen and any team that licks them will be good, very good!"

More than half a million feet of lumber are needed at the shipyard to construct a Liberty ship.

By PVT. ROLAND POWELL

When the 300th Sabers of the Infantry school meet the Spirits of the 176th in the initial cage clash of the season Thursday night, the boys from the 300th will enter the game with two victories already under their respective belts.

Last Friday their team had its first workout as a unit when it downed the Parachute school 39-30. The game was a close battle until the final minutes when the speed and accurate shooting of the Sabers took its toll and they cinched the game with a couple of fast shots under the basket.

But a better look at the team came last Sunday when it defeated a hard fighting Camp Rucker five by the count of 45-30. Star Forward Lefty Francis was the main gun, dumping in eight points on four field goals and stealing the ball often during the game. He's an aggressive, hard fighting player.

High scorer for the winners; however, was guard Jigg Stuart, who hit the hoop for ten markers. The Sabers led easily at halftime, 24-17, and d then with frequent substitutions, as Coach Hebenstreit looked his squad over, continued to victory.

The fact that the team is short was completely overlooked, as the cagers kept control of the ball the greater part of the contest. Some of the shooting was ragged, but natural improvement with mor experience should help.

Tigers to Meet Unbeaten Camp Forrest Eleven In Title Clash New Year's Day

Reception Center to Battle Service Foes In Victory Bowl Tilt

January 1st Classic Is Slated For Memorial Stadium In City

By PRIVATE LEWIS SWINGLER

Fort Benning's Reception Center gridiron squad, undefeated and untied in their seven-game sweep this fall against some of the strongest teams of the country, will take the field again New Year's Day to meet the only other undefeated, untied colored service eleven in the country, the Camp Forest (Tenn.) Tornadoes, for the southeastern grid title, Col. Ulric N. James, commanding officer of the Reception Center, announced this morning.

Designated the "Victory Bowl," the New Year's Day classic is expected to draw one of the largest crowds to turn out to Memorial Stadium, Columbus. Football fans from nearby Alabama, and Georgia will be invited to witness the contest, sponsored by the USO Colored Army-Navy YMCA, E. E. Farley, director, for the purpose of establishing a USO Troops-in - Transit Lounge for colored soldiers in Columbus.

SPECIAL RATES

Mr. Farley, veteran promoter of some of the most successful football games staged in this vicinity, said that special rates are being offered to Fort Benning service men. Tickets, available at headquarters of each company, will sell for fifty cents to soldiers and their wives and girl companions will be given the same rate. Regular admission, however, will be $1.00 in advance, and $1.25 at the gate, Mr. Farley stated. Tickets in Columbus can be purchased at the USO Colored Army-Navy YMCA, 841 Fifth Avenue, and Hugh Bentley's Sports Store, 1305 Broadway.

Captain Charles R. Houghland, coach of the Reception Center unbeaten eleven, asserted that his boys are ready to accept the challenge of the Camp Forrest Tornadoes, and except for a few minor injuries are in tip-top shape. Reception Center soldiers will be backed their team to the fullest. The band will be on hand in all its musical glory for the occasion, Captain Houghland continued.

USO Basketball Tourney Winds Up Fourth Week

The 9th St. U. S. O. Basketball Tournament completed its fourth week of play Sunday afternoon before hundreds of basketball fans. Four games were played, two in the American League and two in the National League circuits.

In the first game, the 653rd T. D. Bn. Panthers defeated the 2nd Bn., 16th Inf. "Greys" 36 to 21 in a National League tilt. Marmalejo of the Panthers with 14 points was the game's high scorer.

The Parachute School "B" cagers, of the American League downed the 77th Med. Bn. of the 7th Arm'd Div. in the second contest 34 to 19 with York and Stout of the Jumpers scoring eight points each.

The third, a National League fray, saw the P. T. R. five edge out the 53rd General Hospital 27 to 24. Bass of the 'chutists tallied 11 points to lead both teams.

In the nightcap, an American League encounter, the 653rd Tank Destroyer Bn. won over the 515th Parachute Inf. 38 to 28. Sgt. Gorecki of the Destroyers and Pvt. Maggoner of the losers each had high scores of 10 points.

The 53rd Bn. 176 Inf. "Spirits 3rd" scored its second win in two days, after an earlier setback, by downing the 653rd Tank Destroyers Bn. quintet 46 to 41 Friday night in an American League game. Ramazotti and Kelvan of the Spirits each tallied 14 points for high scoring honors.

The second game saw the "Fighting 13th" cagers of the 3rd Bn., 3rd STR romp over the 17th Tank Bn. of the 7th Arm'd. Div. 47 to 22, thus remaining unbeaten in the National League circuit. Candidates Doherty and Mearius of the O. C.'s were the games high scorers with 12 points each. The Fighting O. C.'s replaced the Sure Shots of Co. D, 300th Inf. who dropped out of the tourney two weeks ago.

3rd STR Man Brings Back Jap Trophies

The 11th Company, Third Student Training Regiment, The Infantry School has a real fighting man in its midst. He is called "Charlie the Jap Killer" by the fellows in the barracks. In reality he is Charles Armstrong from Salisbury, North Carolina. Charlie entered the service in October of 1941, and after training he was one of the first to arrive in Australia. After some months he was sent to Guadalcanal in November of 1942.

From the stories circulating, the Japs won't forget this fighting doughboy, for he is the cause of many of their boys not returning home. While very modest, he still shows his part in the battles from the souvenirs he has.

His stories make one see the serious side of the war, one which it hard to realize when so far away from it. One of his famous stories tells how the soldiers, being big souvenir hunters, would "swap" with Air Corps boys, just coming in on the island, Jap battle flags and other objects.

Another story, not so humorous, is about a wounded lieutenant from Charlie's company, who was bayoneted while being taken back to an aid station. At first, according to Charlie, the boys didn't hate the Japs, but after seeing some of their favorite tricks they realized the ruthlessness of their enemy.

The Jap snipers didn't bother the boys half as much as the conditions the boys had to live under. "The Jap soldier isn't as good as our boys, they are just more used to that type of fighting; but our boys learn fast and believe we are their equal in this type of fighting now," says Charlie.

14 Sabers Join Army Air Force

Trading the good substantial earth for a hunk of the wild blue yonder, men of the 300 Infantry Post last week to become Air Force cadets.

They joined a larger contingent of future airmen leaving from The Infantry School. All went in grade to Gulfport Field, Miss., a basic training field for air crew basic training.

After completing their basic training, the men will move into advanced stages, and graduate pilots, navigators or bombardiers depending upon the amount of proficiency they display in these fields.

The highest ranking enlisted men leaving for the Air Force was 1st Sergeant Wade L. Oxford, who was topkick of Co. C, 300th Infantry.

Five years of service behind him, Sgt. Oxford came to the 300th when it was activated a year ago, from the 124th Infantry. Always air-minded, he finally took, and passed, the qualifying exams of the Air Force and seeks to achieve his lifelong ambition to fly.

Other men included among those leaving were Sgt. Joseph C Bartkowski of Company F; Sgt Frederick Masem of Cannon Company; Cpl. William Brewer of Co. F; Pvt. James Comer of Co. F; Pvt. John E. Dahlstrohm of Co. F; Pvt. Duane Wilkinson of Co. H; Pvt. Charles Fulkerson of Co. F; Pvt. Marvin Gilbertson of Co. F; Pvt. William Lininger of Co. H; Cpl. Robert Mullane of Service Co.; Pvt. Robert Nurse of Service Co.; Pfc. Robert Sanders of Co. M; Cpl. Thomas Tesoriero of Co. E; and T-5 George Thomason of Cannon Co.

Joe Louis Will Box In Wind-Up of 8-Bout Card At Sports Arena During Visit Here December 29

Six Local Matches Will Precede Two Exhibitions by Former Pros

Joe Louis, reigning heavyweight champion of the world, will appear in the wind-up bout of an all-colored ring card in the Harmony Church Sports Arena when he visits the post on Wednesday, December 29, it was announced yesterday by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, post athletic officer.

The Brown Bomber will tangle with his travelling mate, George Nicholson, in what probably will be a three-rounder. The semi-windup will pit Sugar Robinson, welter claimant, against George Wilson, ex-welter champ in another exhibition.

LOCAL TALENT

The remainder of the eight-bout card will consist of local talent with the bouts getting underway at 7 o'clock sharp. Colonel Finnegan is now busy making seating arrangements for the bouts so that the spacious arena can accomodate a maximum throng of ring fans.

Main post fans who cannot make the trek to the Harmony Church Arena will have an opportunity to watch the Brown Bomber in the afternoon at Doughboy Stadium on an outdoor ring. Although, Louis will not box during the stadium, show he will give an exhibition of rope-skipping, bag-punching and shadow-boxing and also a short talk on physical fitness. The afternoon will start at 3. p. m.

HOSPITAL VISIT

Prior to his two shows, the Brown Bomber will tour the station hospital, talking to patients and trying to add a little cheer to their holiday season.

Although no definite pairings have yet been made for the local portion of the eight-bout card at the arena, some of Benning's best-known colored boxers are certain to see action. Eddie Jackson, often termed the "Louis of Benning" will probably appear in a heavyweight feature and is preparing his stable of 3rd STR Panther mittmen for plenty of action. Opposing the Panthers will probably be a combined main post team drawn from fisticuff talent of the Reception Center and 1st STR Service Battalion.

Colonel Finnegan has promised the listing of the complete card as well as definite word on seating arrangements for next week's paper, so watch for it!

GEORGE POSCHNER

Poschner Named On Second Team

One of the outstanding members of the 176th Infantry's Infantry School Championship football team, 2nd Lt. George W. Poschner has been selected as an end on the second string All-Service football team. Previously, Poschner had made the first team on the All-Southeastern selections.

"I was born in Youngstown, Ohio," said Lt. Poschner, "way back in January of 1919. I played football with a sandlot team before becoming the regular left end on my high school team, Cheney High in Youngstown.

DRAFTED BY LIONS

"I stayed out of school for one year and then went to the University of Georgia where I played freshman left end for one year and varsity end the next three years. I was drafted by the Detroit Lions for pro ball, but I entered the Army instead."

While in high school, Lt. Poschner made All-State end his last two years in school and in college made the All-Southeastern Conference team; six first teams and seven second All-America teams.

"I'd like to get into pro ball when this war is all over, and after a few years of ball playing, I'd like to coach some college team; end coach that is. I certainly like the game.

SPIRITS TOPS

"We had a darn swell bunch of men this year with the Spirits. If we could have played together one more year, I feel certain we could have been one of the top teams of the nation.

"Army teams have more experienced men, but a good college team should be able to beat most army teams. It is difficult for an army football player to stay in shape. Conditioning counts much more than the average fan thinks it does. I like the game, and always play for keeps. Sandlot, high school, college, army or professional, I give it all I've got."

They're Demoted Fast When They Go To School

Old soldiers on this post blink in amazement whenever they see an Infantry company commanded by a full colonel, every platoon led by a lieutenant colonel.

Yet that's the set-up in the 17th Company of the 1st Student Training Regiment, where over 190 officers, ranking from 1st lieutenant all the way up to eagle-bearing colonel, have gathered to attend the Officers Advanced Course at the Infantry School. Senior officers, as a rule, have been chosen as student leaders.

Student company commander is Colonel James J. Milligan, a 1st lieutenant in World War I, lawyer and engineer between wars. Recalled to active duty early in 1942, he attended the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth and the Army War College at Washington, D. C., before reporting to the Infantry School.

First Sergeant of the class is Lieutenant Colonel Frank H. Friedeman, also a veteran of the first World War. Lieutenant Colonel Charles A. Gebert commands the first platoon; Lieutenant Colonel William D. Johnston, the second; Lieutenant Colonel Milton J. Binckley, the third; and Lieutenant Colonel Frederick W. Maxwell, the fourth platoon.

Sabers Rate As Dark Horse In TIS Cage Race

By PVT. ROLAND POWELL

A short, but speedy 300th Infantry basketball team of the Infantry School will inaugurate its 1943-44 season Thursday night when it clashes against the strong 176th Spirits at Main Post gymnasium.

The Sabers remain as a possible "Dark Horse" in this year's cage league, for the team lacks headline stars and has never played together as a unit, but is composed of experienced hoopsters.

The tallest man on the club is Lt. Frank Hebenstreit, the blond mentor of the team. He stands 6' 2", which is about average for other teams in the league. He has little to say about his teams prospects, but hinted that it might prove to be the surprise of the league. Lt. Hebenstreit starred at guard for Creighton University's 1941 team that traveled to Madison Squar Garden for the national playoffs.

The starting center has not been decided yet, but will be chosen from either Gail Bass, who played pro ball with the Bearded Wizards, Bob Halliday, who has three years experience on Yale's cage team, or Lefty Grate of North Hollywood, California.

A sure starter at one forward slot will be Lieutenant Lefty Francis, who is well known in league circles around here. He played with the 2nd STR leaders last year and previously with the Profs. He has been the star in practice this year, dumping in eight points and playing a beautiful floor game against Camp Rucker last Sunday.

At the other forward will probably be the short man of the team, Tom Whalen, a five foot eight speedster, who played three years at Wesleyan.

At the guards will be John "Jiggs" Stuart, who has varsity experience at Oklahoma A and M, and either Andy Marsch of Michigan University's freshman team, Burnell Fischner, an all-state guard from Houston, Texas, or Leon Mai, who played freshman ball at Oklahoma and Kansas Universities. Coach Hebenstreit, himguard post, where his height can be put to advantage.

The Spirits are coached by Lt. Kirk Gebert, an All-America from Washington State, captain of the 1942 team. At center may be Jim Weir, who towers six feet five inches, and comes from Wyoming University, winner of the National Collegiate tournament last year. He was picked on Grantland Rice's All-America last year. Other stars of the Spirits are Leo Mogus from Youngstown University, Leo Phillips from Cold Springs, Minnesota, Marv Lee, with three years experience of varsity ball at UCLA, another UCLA great, Bob Waterfield.

TIS Promotes Six Officers

Promotions of one captain and five lieutenants have been announced at headquarters of The Infantry School. Those advanced were:

From captain to major: Donald P. MacArthur of New York, assistant secretary in the Academic Department.

From first lieutenant to captain: James J. Kelly of Hartford, Conn., assigned as Tactical Officers in the 12th Company of the 3rd Student Training Regiment; William J. Strosnider, Pittsburgh, Pa., Battery Commander in the 252nd Field Artillery; Benjamin Franklin Zvolanek of Russell, Kansas, Personnel Officers of the 300th Infantry; William B. Penndorf, Verona, N. J., Intelligence Officer of the 5th Regiment, A.S.T.P.

Nope, They Didn't Know What They Missed

Units of the 176th Regiment from this post had just completed their parade marking the recent opening of the motion picture, "This Is The Army," in nearby Columbus. Leading the column had been a lively portrayal of "The Spirit of 1776," the regimental adaptation of the famous painting.

As the trio stood by the side of the street awaiting transportation, an officer approached and motioned the men into one of the parked trucks. The men vaulted over the tail gate of the vehicle to find themselves in the midst of a truckful of WACs.

A moment of embarrassed silence, and then, from the flag bearer of the trio: "Gosh, George Washington's men didn't know what they missed!"

Soldiers to See World Series Film

CHICAGO, Dec. 15— —A preview of the American league's 10th annual baseball movie was given yesterday and sports writers acting as film critics gave the film unqualified endorsement.

The new film is a departure from previous showings, being confined to action in the 1943 world series with no features demonstrating phases of plays and instructions by the game's stars.

Lew Fonseca, American league movie producer and director, said the movie would be exhibited to millions of service men and also would be distributed to sports and fraternal organizations.

Actor Philip Dorn Arrives Here Today

Philip Dorn, one of Hollywood's fastest rising foreign stars, will arrive at Fort Benning today for a three-day stay during which he will make informal appearances in service clubs, rec halls and messes, according to Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, post special service officer.

Sent out by the Hollywood Victory Committee, Dorn is touring southern Army encampments in the same manner as Brian Aherne, the British-born star, who was at the post over the Thanksgiving week-end.

Dorn is a comparative newcomer ti the Hollywood scene but is well-remembered for his striking character portrayals in "Joan of Paris" and "Random Harvest."

Rooms Needed For Christmas

Response to the appeal of Col. William H. Hobson, post commander, to military personnel with quarters at Fort Benning to open their homes to the wives, mothers, and families of officers and enlisted men during the Christmas Christmas season has been fairly satisfactory, Lt. J. W. Myers, Jr., post billeting officer, announced today.

However, Lt. Myers said, there still is a great demand for additional places for families of both officers and enlisted men to stay, although temporarily there are a few rooms available for use of officer's wives or families during the holiday season.

Officers who desire a place for their family or wife to stay should apply at the post billeting officer, phone No. FB-3505, immediately, the billeting officer said. Enlisted men desirous of bringing their wives, mothers or families to the post should apply to Service Club No. 1 or the Hostess house.

If any charges at all are made, the fee will not exceed 50 cents, to take care of cost of linen and other items.

Pointing out that in one case an officer who is to be away from the post during the holidays is throwing open his entire home for holiday visitors, Lieut. Myers urged that any other residents of the post who can take members of officer's or enlisted men's families during the holiday season contact his office at once.

Third STR Ties Ramblers for Lead

In a doubleheader in the Ninth street USO club basketball league last night, the Hq. Co., 3rd S. T. R. remained unbeaten and tied the Ramblers of Co. D, Academic Reg't for first place honors at four victories in the American League by knocking the 709th Tank Bn. out of the unbeaten ranks 48 to 37 in the first game.

In the second game, the Parachute School "B" cagers downed the 515th Parachute Inf. 49 to 29 in an American League tilt for their third win against one loss.

Only one game will be played tonight. The 17th Tank Bn. of the 7th Arm'd Div. will play the P. T. R. cage team in a National League fray at 9 o'clock EWT.

will sing Christmas carols in the recreation hall; Tuesday evening a floor show and orchestra will entertain in recreation hall; Wednesday evening there will be special movies; Thursday an Italian orchestra will present a concert in recreation hall; and Friday (New Year's Eve) the carefully planned ball.

At the Hramony Church branch the festivities start next Wednesday evening, Dec. 22, with a Christmas program staged by a group of Columbus children, and concludes on the following week Thursday, Dec. 30, with the "Military Maids" dance.

The three "Christmas Day" (Friday, Saturday, Sunday) scheduled events include a movie in the afternoon and a Christmas tree and program Christmas Eve, a "Military Maids" Tea Dance Christmas afternoon and evening, and an open house with music and refreshments on Sunday.

SPECIAL MOVIES

Special movies will be presented Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, ending with the dance on Thursday evening.

Whereas the whole program is the responsibility of the recreational department of the Red Cross and the work is done by the patients in so far as possible, the Grey Ladies, of course, are the "stand-ins" that keep everything going smoothly to reach this climax that will be seen in the next two weeks.

The Craft Shop of the hospital has been a wonderful aid to the patients in making presents for gifts to their friends and relatives, making substantial decorations for inside and outside tree trimming, and for over 3,000 fine hand-made Christmas cards that have been produced there.

One thousand half-pound boxes of candy were prepared for the trees by the ladies the 5th A.S.T.P., at meetings of the group Wednesday and Thursday at the home of the chairman, Mrs. E. G. Whittemore.

The 252nd Field Artillery Battalion wrapped thousands of packages of cigarettes for the Christmas stockings. Mrs. L. M. DeReimer supervised the work and it was finished up Tuesday ....

"Every name of the 2500 patients in the fluctuating population of the hospital has been placed on a gift that all may be remembered," states Mrs. Frances J. Hattaway, assistant field director and in charge of the hospital section of the Red Cross. "And that is some feat, to accomplish at this time with the going and coming that is continuous daily."

COMMITTEES NAMED

Recreation workers, Main Post Hospital: Mrs. Ann Harcourt, chairman; Miss Irene Abplanalp, Miss Helen McCaflin, Miss Ruby Conkin, Mrs. Constance Cone. Social Service Workers: Mrs. Virginia Megowen, Miss Mary Merritt, Miss Ben Avis Adams, Miss Evelyn Schwartz, Miss Helen Loeb, Miss Estelle Barnett, Miss Frances Needles, Miss Pauline Schauss, Miss Mildred Long, Miss Mary McGarvey, Miss Betty Putnam, Miss Ruth Elliott, Miss Alta Hibble, Miss Clara Gates, Miss Jeanette Ogletree, Mrs. Eleanor Powers, Mrs. Leona James, Mrs. Max Douthit.

Recreation workers in Harmony Church Hospital: Miss Hermanie Roe, Miss Mary Nally, and Miss Vera Kirst. The social worker there, Mrs. Eileen Minor.

Wrapping: Mrs. J. G. Hardy, chairman; Mrs. Edgar Bullock, Mrs. Onto Bragan, Mrs. J. D. Rosenberger, Mrs. V. F. Burger, Mrs. Robert Smith, Mrs. Edwin Cox.

Shopping: Mrs. B. W. Venable, chairman; Mrs. Carilee H. Hill, Mrs. W. M. Spann, Mrs. C. D. Overfelt, Mrs. Thorton Chase, Mrs. Gilbert Parker, Mrs. Ridgley Walther, Mrs. Julian Lindsey, Mrs. W. C. Rutherford, Mrs. Virgil A. Ector.

Candy: Mrs. E. G. Whittemore. Oranges: Mrs. Wm. T. Moore, Mrs. Harry McKenney. Carols: Mrs. H. P. Perrine.

Christmas Eve hostesses: Mrs. W. M. Spann, Mrs. Harry McKinney, Mrs. Edgar Bullock, Mrs. A. R. C. Sander, Mrs. B. W. Venable, Mrs. Wm. H. Hobson.

YWH HOSTESSES

Christmas Day hostesses: Mrs. J. D. Rosenberger, Mrs. W. C. Rutherford, Mrs. Grover C. Washabaugh, Mrs. Wm. F. Burr, Mrs. Carilee H. Hill, Mrs. A. R. C. Sander.

"We greatly appreciate the cooperation of all the agencies on the post, with their directors and personnel, in the successful bringing together of the physical materials and the spirit that makes the hospital celebration of the Christmas so promising as a big event this year," states Col. Wm. Starnes, head of the Main Post Hospital. "This will bring cheer and the desire to again live active lives to hundreds of men in the hospitals."

Lt. Col. Wm. C. Kennedy, speaking for the Harmony Church hospital, also extended his thanks to all the agencies on the Main Post and at Harmony Church for their co-operation in making this Christmas outlook very happy for all in or connected with the hospital.

Then, at 1:45 p. m., the broadcasting will shift to Service Club No. 5 in the Harmony Church area where Joseph D. Cole and a chorus will be presenting a program. Fifteen minutes of this will be picked up and at 2 p. m. the Seventh Armored Division will take over from Service Club No. 2 in the Sand Hill area. There Lt. William Karrenbauer, assistant special service officer, will present a dramatic offering and band music for an hour.

At 3 p. m., the tea dance music of the Lawson iField Orchestra will be picked up from Service Club No. 1, and there will be greetings from various commanding officers of the different installations on the Post.

After that, WRBL will begin to pick up the national and international broadcasts that CBS will be carrying for Christmas Day.

Movie Tom Sawyer Is ASTP Student

Among the various ASTP candidates who have trained here at Benning, there have been a few names which are familiar to the public in the world of sport and entertainment. The prize catch of them all, however, has turned up in the 8th Company, 2nd Battalion, of the 4th Training Regiment.

Practically all of us have, at one time or another, read Mark Twain's famous "Tom Sawyer." A few years back, David I. Selznick decided to produce it on the screen. To find a typical boy to play the leading role was a problem. A search was started, which resulted in 25,000 boys being tested for the part.

Finally, selected at random from a schoolroom of St. Raymond's Grammar School in the Bronx, was freckle-face Tommy Kelly. Tommy had had no previous experience whatsoever, but with six months of testing and practice, he started work on the film.

Since "Tom Sawyer," Kelly has appeared in numerous other films, including "Peck's Bad Boy with the Circus," "Irene," "They Shall Have Music," and Andy Hardy Goes to Town." A few months back he was selected to play the part of "Chicken in 'Guadalcanal Diary.'" However, just before work started on the picture, Uncle Sam put in a priority bid for Kelly's services.

Quite naturally, his experiences as a movie star were many. Kelly's greatest thrill came while on a personal appearance tour of the nation in '39, shortly after the release of 'Tom Sawyer." He attended the President's Birthday Ball in Washington, where he had the honor of meeting and talking to President Roosevelt.

The U. S. Department of Labor was created in 1913.

Door-to-Door Mail Delivery

Delivery of Christmas packages to the quarters of military personnel and their families living in assigned quarters on the post, not including bachelor officers, got under way Monday by the Post Army Post Office, it was announced by Captain William O'Connell, post postal officer at Fort Benning.

Officer, warrant officers and enlisted men of the first three grades who have assigned quarters are warned however, that only those who fill in the required information on the reverse side of post memorandum No. 124, giving their name, rank, quarters address, telephone number and names of other persons residing in their quarters, would receive the benefit of Christmas package delivery, Capt. O'Connell stated.

Delivery of the packages, he said, will be made only to those who have filled out the form and returned it to the postal officer, since there is no other sure means of obtaining correct residential addresses of military personnel living in assigned quarters.

'Pearl Harbor' Class Graduates

Two noteworthy specialist classes in the 4th Battalion, 1st Student Training Regiment, were graduated from The Infantry School this week.

In the 24th Company, a "Pearl Harbor" group of enlisted communication experts completed their instruction on December 7. After Captain Charles E. Farmer, commanding officer, lauded student commander Master Sergeant William J. Tinschmidt for the way he had handled the class, its members scattered afar to lend their trained hands to the victory effort.

Its largest Enlisted Motor class was graduated from Captain Dale K. Johnson's 20th Company. Of the 128 to start, 116 students finished the course.

Picture Of The Week!!!

Overseas Red Cross Clubs Plan Yule Observance

Christmas observances of American fighting men in more than 53 commands all around the world, including the isolated islands in all oceans, will be held in all overseas Red Cross clubs, hospital recreation rooms and other Red Cross activities, it was announced today by Ralph J. Mitchell, field director of the American Red Cross at Fort Benning, Georgia.

Aided by special kits of holiday decorations and favors, the Red Cross, which had a staff of 3,566 men and women overseas as of September 30, has made special arrangements to help servicemen overseas capture the Christmas spirit in the traditional American fashion insofar as possible.

Red Cross Chairman Norman H. Davis, who returned September 20 from a month's survey of Red Cross activities in Great Britain, North Africa and Sicily, also reported that top ranking generals in the Army in every area visited were highly satisfied with the magnificent job the Red Cross is doing for the morale of troops and hospitalized men, Mitchell said.

ALL OVER WORLD

Continually expanding, Red Cross overseas operations are going on not only in the major operating theaters such as Great Britain, North Africa, Sicily, Italy, Middle East, China, India, Australia, islands in the Southwest Pacific, Iceland, and Hawaii, but also in many other localities including Panama, Bermuda, Brazil, Curacao, Aruba, Trinidad, Newfoundland, Greenland, and the South Pacific.

Many clubs are operating in the Middle East—in Egypt, Palestine, the Lybian Desert, along the Persian gulf. An innovation in the Persian Gulf Command is a "club-train", where a club-mobile would be inoperative. Expansion in the China, Burma, India theater is rapid to meet arising needs, and supplies have sometimes been dropped by parachute to men in points not readily reached by road.

POW FOOD PARCELS

Mitchell also revealed that 6,225,236 prisoner of war food parcels have been shipped for the United States and Allied prisoners of war and civilian internees by the Red Cross from January 1, 1941, to September 30, 1943.

The long-awaited sailing of the diplomatic exchange ship "Gripsholm" on September 2 provided cargo space for $1,300,000 worth of relief supplies for American military prisoners of war and civilian internees in the Far East. Fifty per cent of the cargo was marked for off-loading in the Philippine Islands, and the American Red Cross sent 3,200 special parcels to those prisoners and internees who had no next of kin or whose next of kin lived outside the United States.

Special Yule Service Planned For Spirits

Special Christmas communion services will be conducted December 25 by Chaplain Arnold Lewis for men of the 176th Infantry, Colonel Frank M. Thompson, chief of chaplains, announced Wednesday. The services will begin at 10:30 a.m. in the Main Chapel, and will be held for those unable to attend other scheduled Yuletide worship.

Benning Seeks To Better Food Saving Record

Not satisfied with having already effected a saving of about half a pound of food per man per day, even greater savings now are contemplated through enlargement of the Food Service Program for troops in the Army Service Forces units at Fort Benning, it was announced today by Lt. Col. Alexander H. Veazey, mess supervision officer at the Post.

The wider program has now been inaugurated with addition of three officers who will act as supervisors for groups of enlisted men's messes, exchanges, service clubs, cafeterias and officer club messes.

First steps in reduction of waste on the post were started last March through a closer supervision of messes, better planning of meals, and an educational program among the personnel aimed against wasting of food.

50,000 LBS. PER MONTH

Results—an average of about 50,000 pounds per month now is saved in food at Fort Benning. And with the new enlarged program, even greater savings are expected. At the same time, quality of meals served has been constantly bettered, Colonel Veazey reports.

"The new food service program will be co-ordinated with the quartermaster, sales officer, post nutrition officer, menu board and Bakers and Cooks School," Col. Veazey said. "Although we have accomplished much, there is still a great deal that can be done. We plan on continuing close supervision of fobds, and to carry on campaigns of education among men in mess halls.

The Post Food Supervisor now is in a position also to co-ordinate the food service program of any other organization outside the Fourth Service Command which has appointed a mess supervisor. We hope that these organizations will take advantage of this program." Colonel Veazey pointed out that if through closer supervision and planning, food waste can be cut down even a tenth of a pound per man per day, the new plan will save about 45,000 pounds of food, valued at about $5,000 each month. If all the organizations on the post can do the same, savings of around 270,000 pounds of food will result.

FOOD EXPERTS NAMED

The three officers appointed today to act with Colonel Veazey are all mess experts. One is the well known Captain Louis Albert, well known throughout the old army as welterweight champion of the Orient, and later known for refereeing boxing matches through the Army. Formerly with the Bakers and Cooks school at Fort Benning, he has been on trouble shooting jobs for the Fourth Service Command for several months, now returns to supervise detachment messes, cafeterias and officers club messes on the Main Post.

Capt. John W. Foster, mess supervisor for Reception Center messes, will take over the new work for all of the messes at the Reception Center, in addition to his regular duties. Lieut. J. C. Townsend, a graduate of the Bakers and Cooks School at Miami, will act as mess supervisor for the Prisoner of War, Station Hospital, cafeterias and officers messes in the Harmony Church area.

CHRISTMAS CAROLLING

Plans for the Christmas Carolling throughout Baker Village and Benning Park are now complete. The Carollers will meet in the Auditorium at 8 o'clock (E.W.T.) Thursday, December 23. From there they will visit various sections of the village in singing carols at each location.

Rehearsals are held several afternoons at 4:30 E.W.T., the last one this week will be Friday, December 17, 4:30 E.W.T. in the auditorium. Enthusiasm is increasing and at each rehearsal there are new faces. Anyone interested in joining the group is urged to be present at Friday's rehearsal or call Mrs. Lutz for information at the Admnistration building. After the practice of Carols is over the Carollers participate in a general open house for games, dancing and singing.

When the carollers have completed their tour of the village on Thursday, December 23, they will return to the auditorium for games and dancing.

Any adults who would like to sing Carols are urged to join the group. Those interested may call Mrs. Lutz at the Administration building. Rehearsals will be arranged at their convenience.

It is suggested that the families of the community have a candle to light and place in the window to greet the carollers as they sing.

Christmas parties are planned for the three different age groups as set up by the Recreation Department and the Commissioner of Recreation.

The intermediate group including those boys and girls ages 9, 10, 11 and 12 will have their game Christmas party on Monday, Dec. 20 in the auditorium at 7:30 E.W.T.

The senior group's party which includes all the teen agers from age 13 up will be on Tuesday, December 21 at 7:30 E.W.T.

The auditorium will be decorated this week for the Christmas season.

Each person attending these parties is requested to bring a ten cent gift to the party for a gift exchange.

CHRISTMAS PARTY NURSERY SCHOOL

The Uursery School Christmas Party is arranged for Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 22, from 2 to 4 in the auditorium.

NEW YEAR'S EVE DANCE

Plans are underway for the Baker Village Community New Year's Eve Dance. A bulletin will be distributed later to each apartment concerning the details. Be sure and reserve this date on your calendar and plan to attend.

BROWNIES AND GIRL SCOUTS

The Brownies and Girl Scouts are selling Christmas tuberculosis seals and have done a grand job of this. To date approximately $15.00 worth of seals have been sold and we expect this figure will be much higher before they are through.

FOUND

In the pound at the Recreation Dept. we have two child's corduroy jackets and one brown leather jacket that have been turned in. Anyone losing such articles can claim them at the Recreation Department.

POST CAROLLING

The Girl Scouts and Brownies will meet atthe Administration building on Sunday, December 19, at 2 o'clock E.W.T. to go to the post to sing Christmas carols. Parent's permission blanks signed are necessary for anyone to go with this group. Girls are requested to be in uniform if possible for this occasion.

WAC Officer Is 1st Lieut.

Cheerful, hard-working Lieutenant Madeleine G. Nelson, W. A. C., assistant personnel of the 1st Student Training Regiment, the Infantry School, was even happier than usual one recent morning. The War Department order promoting her from 2nd to 1st lieutenant had arrived. She is the first WAC officer to be promoted while assigned to a Main Post unit.

Lieutenant Nelson is the lady who sees to it that the 1st S.T.R.'s personnel get paid—and on time. Before donning uniform, she had been an executive in the office of the Chief of Ordnance at Washington, D. C.

She was graduated from Women's Army Corps OCS, Fort Des Moines, Iowa, in April 1943, and served as assistant personnel officer at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., before coming to Benning.

Daughter of Mrs. Gertrude G. Smith, of 131-52 226th Street, Laureiton, Long Island, Lieutenant Nelson's is strictly a service family. She was born on Kauai, one of the Hawaiian Islands. Her husband, deceased in 1932, had risen to chief pay clerk after 20 years in the Navy.

Lieutenant Nelson's son is Tech. Sgt. Robert Nelson, 25, who has been in the Army Air Forces since his 18th birthday. He has just returned to the states from three years duty in Panama and Hrinidad, and is now stationed at Muskogee, Oklahoma.

Air Force Researchist Inspects 'Chute School

Captain Joseph L. Lagow of the Plans and Training Section of the Central Flying Training Command at Randolph Field, Texas, has just completed a ten-day visit at the Parachute School making a thorough and realistic study of the techniques and methods the School employs to produce parachutists who can jump and land without injury.

During his stay, Captain Lagow was under the tutelage of Lieutenant Colonel James Coutts, assistant commandant, and Captain Robert E. Miller of Plans and Training.

The continuous exclusive study of Parachute experience and history at The Parachute School has reaped exceptional results in decreased injuries and refusals. The chances of being hurt while jumping at the School now stand at less than one per cent—a one-third decrease which is directly due to the correction of landing attitude and other refinements in training. The development of the School has attracted nation-wide interest—so much so that the Army Air Force sent Lieutenant Colonel Melbourne W. oynton of The Office of Flying Safety to Fort Benning to undergo the Jump Training and make a study and report on his findings. Colonel Boynton was qualified as a jumper last October and on the basis of his findings, recommended that a further study be made. Captain Lagow's visit was the result.

VETERAN I. G.

Captain Lagow, a veteran Inspector General and research man for the Air Force, lived, breathed and ate parachutes while at the School. Refusing to live at the Air Force Bechelor Officers' Quarters he asked to be given quarters with the Parachute Officers, as he put it "When I'm on Parachute duty I think it's only right to see and talk to everybody I possibly can about them." Much first hand experience-information was thus obtained by the Captain which adds greatly to the reality of his report. And his report actually does involve life and limb for many fliers.

Colonel Coutts and Captain Miller explained the way the schoolk originated and implemented training methods so that they could be incorporated in the Air Force training for fliers. Of especial interest, naturally, was the landing method with both feet together.

INTERVIEWS E. M. S.

Captain Lagow did not confine his investigations to higher echelons. He talked with enlisted men in training—got their reactions and rate of learning for various phases of instruction. He consulted with Major Lord, in charge of the elaborate medical set-up at the School as to the type of injuries incurred and the method found best for treatment.

On the basis of study and talks with officers and enlisted men at the School plus pictures vividly illustrating every part of the parachute jump, Captain Lagow is very optimistic that the results of Colonel Boynton's and his own report will aid the Air Force to better equip their fliers to successfully learn parachute jumping and landing.

Major Carves Human Figures Out of Wood

Wood carving is the hobby of Maj. Dale T. DeVore, Infantry, 15th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, and his colorful exhibit of human figures testify to the skill he has acquired during the last decade.

Major DeVore developed his expertness in "whittling" to such an extent that he won first prize in the wood carving division of the Arts and Crafts Contest sponsored by the Red Cross in Rebkjabiak, Iceland, in December, 1942. Capturing the Blue Ribbon for the major were three figures:

An Icelandic peasant woman carrying a Bible, obviously church-bound, an Indian head, and a "Betty Petty" plaque.

One of Major DeVore's most recent creations is a six - inch reproduction of Yanks' famous character—"The Sad Sack." The major has dubbed him "Sad Sack M 43 A 1."

While Major DeVore was in Iceland from March 1943 to June 1943, he carved over 70 characters, including Indian maidens, soldiers, and Icelandic natives. He has increased his tempo to the rate of nearly one figure a day.

A member of Officers' Advanced Course at The Infantry School, Major DeVore is assigned to the 291st Infantry, Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. Since reporting at The Infantry School, Major DeVore has adopted the "Committee System," enlisting the aid of two of his classmates: Lt. Martin L. Davis, who sketches pictures of the personalities which Major DeVore records in white fine wood; and Lt. Stanton C. Parker, who serves as critic.

CAPTAIN KEENER

Announcement has been made of the promotion of Lee Ray Keener, of Portland, Ore., to the rank of captain. Captain Keener was inducted into the service August 13, 1941, at Dallas, Texas, and received his basic training at Camp Wolters, Texas. At the conclusion of his basic training he was assigned to the 62nd Battalion as a cadre instructor. In May, 1942, he was selected to attend Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning, Ga. He received his commission Aug. 19, 1942 and was attached to the 16th Co. and later assigned to the 10th Co., 3rd Student Training Regiment, The Infantry School, which assignment he still holds.

It is estimated that a 10 per cent saving in home use of electricity would save 2,000,000 tons of coal.

Movies Follow Luckies In Field

When the mountain refused to come to Mohammed he had to go to the mountain, but when the 7th Armored division soldier's can't get to town or garrison to the movies, the movies come to the soldiers.

Although it reverses the old "Mohammed-mountain" tale, the "Lucky 7th" does bring movies nightly to its personnel bivouacked just off the military reservation in the Sand Hill area.

Operating under the supervision of Division Special Services, set up machines nightly on the 10 projectionists, all enlisted men, back of a jeep to show Hollywood feature pictures, comedies, cartoons, and short subjects.

In accordance with a recent division order movie-loving GIs are also shown brief training films before each feature picture.

Training films, short and pithy, are almost invaluavle as training aids because of the high efficiency of visuual education, according to the Chief of Staff.

Luckies to Get Holiday Passes

Approximately one-tenth of 7th Armored Division personnel currently present for duty will be granted holiday passes over Christmas and New Year's to points beyond Columbus and environs, according to an official notice from division headquarters.

For the convenience of those unable to obtain holiday weekend passes beyond Columbus, 24-hour passes may be granted to about 40 per cent of remaining personnel to Columbus and Phenix City (Ala.) under the present War Department policy.

The 24-hour passes will enable married personnel to spend the holidays with their wives and families, while work goes on as usual within the division.

Some "lucky" members of Maj. Gen. Lindsay McDonald Silvester's 7th Armored will get Christmas furloughs of one week plus travel time, in accordance with a recent administrative memorandum.

Leaves and furloughs however, may not be granted to more than seven per cent of assigned strength at any one time. They will be granted in a continuous cycle except when units are engaged in certain training designated by 7th A. D. HQ as a non-leave period.

Officials Extend Yule Curfew Hour

Military personnel at Fort Benning will be permitted to attend church services ending after curfew in Columbus on Christmas Eve, it was announced at Post headquarters Monday.

However, church services or mass on that date must be attended in supervised groups in charge of an officer or non-commissioned officer, post authorities added. Such groups will be in charge of personnel detailed for this duty until they are dismissed in their areas on the reservation.

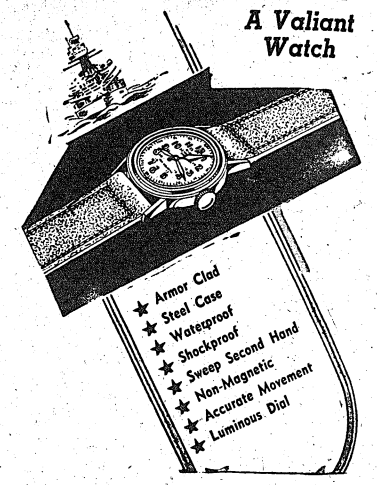
Sergeant Beck Post Old-Timer

Old-timer 1st Sgt. Lawrance A. Beck of the 18th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, has been at the infantry school since 'way back when.

A native of Akron, Ohio, Sergeant Beck came to Fort Benning a few days after he enlisted at Pittsburgh in December, 1920. In those early days, on what is now the main post, were then corn stalk and cotton fields. It was either a cloud of dust or, in the rainy season, a muddy lake.

Since then, Beck has seen changes aplenty, especially the many buildings that have gone up. He remembers when the main officers club was started in 1930. A civilian contractor started on it but later quit. Then a detail of G. I.'s was put on the job, and worked for quite some time until another builder was hired.

Most of his 23 years in uniform, Sergeant Beck spent with the old 29th Infantry, long the demonstration regiment of The Infantry School. He was a member of an early demonstration element, "The Musketry Platoon," which consisted of one officer and 53 enlisted men.



He joined the infantry school training detachment, forerunner of the 1st S. T. R., in September, 1940. After barracks of the 3rd Battalion were erected where previously cotton had grown, he came to his present organization.

Early day Mexicans indicated their wealth by the amount of decorations on their sombreros.

W. D. Clarifies Discharged Soldiers' Rights, Duties

In furtherance of its policy to facilitate the return of the discharged soldier to his proper place in civilian life, the War Department announced today it has adopted a single document which not only clearly informs him of his rights, duties and privileges, but also is designed to give adequate information to those governmental agencies which can help him.

The new form, called "Report of Separation," replaces seven forms and five letters hitherto required. The soldier receives one copy while others go to the Veterans' Administration, the state director of selective service for his state for the information of his local board, the reemployment committeeman of that local board, the veterans' employment representative in the local office of the United States Employment Service and the adjutant general's office of the Army.

The soldier's copy is certification of his status as a veteran. It informs him that if he is registered under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, he must report to his local board that he has been separated from the armed forces, and that if he has not registered he must do so. He is reminded that as a civilian he has the same obligations under the act as any other.

The soldier is advised that if he desires his former employment and is entitled to it under the provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act, he must apply to his former employe within 40 days after his discharge. The certificate also points out that if he saw active military service on and after December 7, 1941, and has been honorably discharged, he has the right to apply to the Veterans' Administration for hospitalization and domiciliary care, disability pension or vocational rehabilitation, if entitled to them under the law.

REEMPLOYMENT

For his assistance and advice the following information is given:

"There is a reemployment committeeman attached to every Local Selective Service Board who will act as your personal representative in your home community and aid you in reestablishing yourself after discharge. He will assist you either in getting your old job back or in getting your a new job if your old job is not available. He will act in your behalf with the other Government agencies concerned.

WAR ASSISTANCE

"Army Emergency Relief has been established by the War Department to furnish temporary emergency financial aid and other services to soldiers and their dependents. Assistance is extended to all eligible military personnel, including persons discharged since September 16, 1940, regardless of arm, grade, branch, or component and to their dependents, irrespective of relationship. A. E. R. officers are located at posts, camps, air fields and in most principal cities. You may apply by mail or in person, to the A. E. R. officer at any of these places.

"The United States Employment Service maintains contacts with employers and will assist you in securing work if you have had no previous job, or if for any valid reason your old job is not available. In each local U. S. E. S. office, you will find a Veterans' Administration Employment Representative.

"The Veterans' Administration maintains hospitals for the care of veterans incapable of rehabilitating themselves to reivil life. They handle your pension claims and your service connected vocational rehabilitation.

"The Vocational Rehabilitation and Training Division of the Federal Security Agency, which operates under the State Department of Education in each individual state, will assist you in your training and education if it is necessary for you to learn a new trade or profession before returning to civil life.

"You may obtain information concerning Federal employment at any Post Office or any Civil Service Office.

RED CROSS

"The American Red Cross is the official medium of communication between the people of the United States and the Army. Its field directors at Army camps and hospitals and chapters in every home community will assist you and your family in solving your personal and family problems. They will arrange temporary financial assistance when you require it and will help you in filing and presenting claims for pensions or other Government benefits.

USAF INSTITUTE

"On your request the U. S. Armed Forces Institute will undertake to provide records of courses taken by you while in the service for submission to civilian educational institutions, employers, and other properly interested agencies. In addition, the Armed Forces Institute will give you, on application, special examinations which will serve as a basis for the granting of academic credit by civilian schools and colleges, and will provide reports of the results of these examinations. For either or both of these services you are required to pay the Institute's regular membership fee of $2. No other payment is required. Inquiries should be addressed to the Commandant, U. S. Armed Forces Institute, Madison, Wisconsin."

INSURANCE

The discharged soldier is advised to keep in force all of his Government insurance which he can, as one of his most valuable assets. Full instructions are given to him on the subject.

The report of separation gives pertinent information about the individual. It includes considerable personal data, his character at discharge, his military and civilian occupations, the cause of his separation from the service and the type of his discharge.

The present procedure was arrived at through experience during the present war and in the World War. It is recognized that modifications in procedure may be necessary from time to time in the light of changing circumstances.

TRI-DELTA LUNCHEON

The Columbus Tri Delta Alumnae club will have its December luncheon meeting on Tuesday, December 21, at the Country club of Columbus at 12:30 (CWT), 1:30 (EWT). All Columbus and Fort Benning Tri Delta alumnae are cordially invited to attend. For reservations, please call Mrs. Lyle Schill, 6105, or Mrs. Henry McMurria, 7902.

Rail Expert Is Post's New TO

Major John R. Pearson, who cordinated and planned the movement of all U. S. troops in Great Britain for a year and a half, has just arrived at Fort Benning where he has been assigned as Rail Transportation Officer.

Major Pearson, a native of Nashville, Tenn., terminated his tour of duty overseas after he had been stricken with a head infection which necessitated an operation. Since returning to this country a short while ago, he convalesced at Tilton General Hospital at Fort Dix, N. J., and served at Camp Davis, N. C., from December 3 until he came to Benning to serve as Transportation Officer under Colonel Jack L. Meyer, Director of Supply and Service Division.

EXPERIENCED

Formerly chief clerk of the Tennessee Central Railroad in Nashville in civilian life, Major Pearson also had served with two other rail lines, the Nashville, Charlotte and St. Louis R. R., and the Atlantic Coast Line. A reserve officer, he was called to active duty on October 15, 1940.

Major Pearson's first assignment was as Rail Transportation officer at Camp Beauregard, La., until he was assigned as assistant transportation officer at Fourth Corps Area headquarters in Atlanta on May 27, 1942.

SERVED OVERSEAS

In July last year, Major Pearson went overseas where he served as chief of Passenger traffic branch in the Office of the Chief of Transportation. In his assignment Major Pearson planned the movements of troops from ports of debarkation to their final destinations within the interior of Great Britain.

He similarly planned the return movements to this country of troops, rescued seamen, civilians, and prisoners of war.

Col. D. S. McConnaughy, Chief of Transportation in the European Theater of Operations Headquarters in London commended Major Pearson's wor kwhen the latter was obliged to terminate his assignment overseas.

Chutist Devises Brand New Use For War Bonds

You'll have to give this Fort Benning paratrooper "A" for initiative to say the least.

Finding himself on top of the 250-foot jump tower in "C" stage training, the trooper was instructed to release the piece of scrap paper given him so his instructors could determine the drift of the wind and thus be able to direct him in the manipulation of his chute on its journey earthward.

After some delay which brought him a series of impatient growls from below, a piece of paper was wafted out in the wind. Down came the jumper dangling from his chute, but when he struck the earth, he released himself from the harness of his chute and began running toward the jumping area.

"Where do you think you're going?" his tutors demanded.

"Why, out to retrieve my $50 War Bond!" he answered. "I thought I had my "drift" paper with me, but when the time came to let it go, the bond was the only thing I could find. Hell, I didn't want to be gigged!"

Communications Men To Study Theory Of Radio

Communication officers graduated from the Infantry school in the future will know why radio performs its miracles along with how to operate field sets.

From now on, student officers in the 13th Co., 1st S. T. R. will devote ten hours of radio studies to the theory of radio under the general title of "Electricity and Magnetism," yet actually consisting of conferences on the magical and mysterious vacuum tube.

In the three months communication course, the school has accented practical work, endeavoring to teach the student the duties their enlisted men will accomplish later. Thus the radio section conducts most of its instruction in the la band field where officers work with the sets.

With the additional theoretical background students are introduced to the mechanical intricacies of radio with an understanding of the principles of radio reception and transmission which revolve about the vacuum tube. In previous classes only four hours were provided for these fundamentals.

Warrant Officer Insignia Explained

This is in explanation of a story concerning warrant officers which appeared in last week's Bayonet, particularly in that portion of the story which had reference to the insignia to be worn.

Two changes have been made in the regulations concerning the insignia, the latest of which apparently had not been entered into the authority which the story was taken. To begin with, regulations once stated that warrant officers would wear "An eagle rising with wings displayed standing on a bunch of arrows, all inclosed in a wreath," this to be worn on the service coat or shirt (when worn without coat).

In April, this regulation was rescinded and the new regulation read, "Officers and Warrant Officers not members of and not on duty with an arm of service will wear the coat of arms of the United States." This regulation prescribed that W. O.s on duty with an arm or branch would wear the insignia of the branch of service of which they were members.

A short time ago, another change was made and this one directed the wearing of "An eagle rising with wings displayed standing on a bunch of two arrows, all inclosed in a wreath." This in effect reinstated the original regulation, the April change (concerning the wearing of the U. S. coat of arms) being rescinded.

THAT M-1 RIFLE EXACTS LIP SERVICE!

Who Has Greater Right To Pin-Up Queen Than Papa Himself, Huh?

Sgt. Don Kortemeier, lens ace of the post photo signal lab, has gained quite a reputation around Fort Benning for his series of home-grown pin-up girls that have appeared in the Bayonet. As a matter ofdact, the pics have even earned him the title of "Hurrell of Benning", but little did Kortemeier ever realize that his fame would spread to the Southwest Pacific war area.

This week, however, the signal lab photog received a letter from that area, requesting a copy of one of his Bayonet pin-ups based on the premise that the writer felt he was entitled to have a "pin-up" in his billet.

The writer was Colonel C. H. Bragg, a general staff corps officer in the Southwest Pacific, who was once stationed at Benning. The pin-up pic he requested was that of Marie Bragg, his lovely daughter, who posed as the "Ordnance Bombshell" in the September 30 issue of the Bayonet.

Kortemeier hastened to comply with proud papa's request, and as matter of fact, "reckoned" he'd also send along a couple other poses of gorgeous Marie, because as he sees it(the Bayonet "pin-up editor" doesn't always select the "best" picture of his models.

Col. Jablonsky New TPS DST

Lieutenant Colonel Harvey J. Jablonsky, famous West Point athlete and paratrooper, has been appointed director of Specialist Training at the Parachute School succeeding Major Richard C. Alverson, it was announced Tuesday.

Col. Jablonsky qualified as a parachutist July 3 after successfully completing the rigorous jump course at the school. Upon graduation he was assigned to the 515th Parachute Infantry Regiment as executive officer in which capacity he has served until his new assignment.

The colonel is well known for his athletic prowess; besides being an all-American football player, he lettered and starred on the baseball, basketball and track teams at West Point.

In assuming charge of the Specialist Schools at the Parachute School, Col. Jablonsky is taking over a working organization of the Army Service Schools devoted exclusively to the advanced training of qualified parachutists. There are five Specialist Schools: Communications, both basic and advanced, Camouflage, Demolition, Rigging (Parachute Repair and Supply) and Sewing Machine Maintenance. Each school has its own specially trained staff of commissioned and enlisted instructors and the courses range from one to nine weeks in length of time.

Col. Jablonsky graduated from West Point in 1934. He was born January 10, 1909. Before entering the Military Academy he received the degree of B. S. in business and public administration in 1930 at Washington University.

Life, Yank, Readers Digest In G. I. Favor

GI readers voted YANK a close second to LIFE Magazine in a recent survey conducted by Special Services in Hawaii.

Answering the question "What are your three favorite publications?" 28 per cent of all servicemen interviewed placed YANK second from the top of the list, with LIFE receiving only 4 per cent more votes. The "big three" publications, as far as men in the Islands are concerned, are rated as follows:

32%—LIFE
28%—YANK
23%—READERS DIGEST

Other publications regarded as soldier-favorites were listed in this order: TIME, fourth; LIBERTY, fifth. After these came COLLIERS, SATURDAY EVENING POST, ESQUIRE, COSMOPOLITAN. Scattered votes were registered for various comic books and pulp detective and westerns.

Ad in Daily Bulletin says: "An O. D. blouse, bearing a garrison belt and an Airborne shoulder patch has been lost. The blouse pockets contained an alarm-clock and one O. D. garrison cap, also with parachute insignia on it. Finder is requested to contact Private Delmar H. Guinn, Headquarters and Service Company, the Parachute School at FB 2180."

Say, brother, anybody who can corral an alarm clock these days oughta stay up nights guarding the doggoned thing.

Blue Smoke Signal Unexpectedly Stops Nazi Guns

Col. Raymond C. Hamilton, former Chief of the Weapons Section of The Infantry School, tells this story that he heard during his recent trip to the African theater of war as the President of the Army Ground Force Board:

"German artillery was shelling an American position with considerable effect when an infantryman, seeking better cover, leaped into a shell crater. As he did a bullet pierced his canteen, creased his back and touched off a color smoke signal which he carried. A dense blue smoke arose immediately and the German artillery stopped firing.

Blue was the color signal of that day for the German artillery to cease firing.

Isaac Baker Made Major

Col. Edwin Cox of the 176th Infantry of the Infantry school, has announced the promotion of Isaac M. Baker, regimental plans and training officer, to the rank of major. Major Baker, a veteran of twelve years' military service, joined the Virginia National Guard in 1931 and with the exception of two years' Regular army service, has been a member of the 176th since that date.

In August 1938, he was commissioned a second lieutenant and received his silver bars on February 3, 1941, upon induction into Federal service. At that time, the major was assigned to Company K and later attended the basic course for officers at the Infantry school. He then commanded Company I, during which time he was promoted to the rank of captain.

Another promotion announced was that of Second Lieutenant Edward C. Abajian of Company G to first lieutenant. Lt. Abajian, a New Yorker, entered the military service in the spring of 1942 and received basic training at Camp Croft, where he also served on company cadre.

He was selected to attend OCS in September of that year and was commissioned last December from the Infantry school. Since that time, he has served as weapons platoon leader of Company F and Company G.

Sabers Observe First Birthday

Last Friday, December 10, marked the first anniversary of the 300th Infantry. This organization was organized as a school troop unit on December 10, 1942 and early in 1943 began its present work as a demonstration regiment for classes at the Infantry School.

Words of praise and congratulation for the men and officers of the 300th came last week from Major General C. H. Bonesteel, commandant of the Infantry School, and Brigadier General H. P. Perrine, commanding general of the School Troops Brigade of the Infantry School.

Major General Bonesteel in a letter to Col. Henry J. Hunt, Jr., commanding officer of the 300th Infantry wrote: "We, at the Infantry School, have reason to take an especial pride and interest in the 300th Infantry Regiment. Of all the demonstration regiments that have served the school, you are the only one whose entire military history has been identified with the school."

The Infantry School Commandant then pointed out that "In this eventful year you have grown from activation to a point of being an efficient-working, hard-hitting Infantry unit."

He concluded by writing "Our best wishes will go with you always."

PROGRESS MADE

Brigadier General Perrine pointed out in his letter to Colonel Hunt that since activation, the 300th has functioned under his headquarters. He briefly sketched the progress of the organization and mentioned that "almost since its first day as a regiment, your organigation has had a part in spreading the infantry doctrine to our troops throughout the world."

He concluded, "I extend my best wishes and congratulations to you, your officers and men. You have done a splendid job. I shall watch with interest and pride the future accomplishments of the first regiment activated and trained at the Infantry School."

In a message to the officers and men of the 300th, Colonel Hunt said that in this war the regiment is on the side of justice and decency, against inhumanity and indecency.

He said that the common happy-go-lucky attitude makes for a good, fighting outfit, and asked the men to maintain a feeling of loyalty to their country and regiment, and a seriousness about the job at hand.

In conclusion Colonel Hunt said, "The best advice that I can offer is that you take note of, and abide by, the motto of the United States Military Academy at West Point: 'Duty, Honor, Country'."

Phone Co. Hopes To Clear Lines For G. I. Yule Calls

Although the telephone company will make every effort to get all long distance holiday calls from Fort Benning completed without delay, some delays are likely to be encountered by service men who call home during the holiday season.

Civilians are being requested to keep the lines clear for the calls of service men and the calls of war production. Radio, newspapers and other forms of advertising are being used extensively to carry this message to civilians.

But with so many service men in the South who may want to call home, together with so many war plants which rely on long distance telephone service, there will probably be more calls than the busy wires can handle.

The telephone company offers several suggestions of ways service men can help keep the delays as few and as short as possible. First, try to avoid the 7 to 10 p. m. rush and place your call during the daytime if you can. The fates are slightly higher during the day but calls will more than likely be completed faster. Another suggestion is to let the family or girl friend know the call is coming so that they will be sure to be at home.

The Fort Benning Public Telephone Center is located at Doughboy Stadium, Main Post, and is open 24 hours per day. Attendants will be on duty during the busiest hours throughout the holiday season.

Plans are under way to open another Public Telephone Center in the Old Post Office building, 8th Division Road, 3rd S. T. R. Area, before Christmas. Definite announcement of this will be made later.

Red Cross

By KATHERINE HAMMARGREN

You women who are handy with a needle and thread, a sewing machine, and a pair of scissors, are needed at the Red Cross Work Room next Tuesday, December 21, and the Tuesday after that, December 28. There are housewives to be sewed, and they have to be completed before January 1.

The housewife is a neat little gadget that fits into a kit bag, which in turn goes to some soldier overseas who doesn't have a mother or wife around to keep his buttons sewed on. The kits are also sewed at the Work Room here on the main post. They, and the housewives, are sent to the Muscogee County Chapter of the American Red Cross, in Columbus, where they're filled with small toilet articles, pocket-sized books, and other things a soldier finds hard to get when he's far away from home.

The kit bags land in some strange places, but they're always appreciated. Mrs. J. R. N. Weaver, chairman of sewing and knitting of the Fort Benning Red Cross Auxiliary, knows they're appreciated. She's seen a letter from a home-sick soldier, written on Guadalcanal a year ago. "You will never know," the letter says, "what it meant to have a Georgia tag in a bag in Guadalcanal."

One hundred kits have been made, but out of that hundred one woman made twenty-five, and another woman made ten. Just how many have the rest of you made? Only thirty housewives have been sewn, and someone has to make one for each of the kit bags.

The Work Room, or production room, is open from 9 a. m. until 12 noon. Mrs. Weaver will be there next Tuesday, and the Tuesday after that, to get you started. And remember, the housewives must be turned in to the Muscogee County Chapter by January 1. Start the new year happier by having finished your quota.

An Army Wife Shops In Columbus
By Phyllis

If you're in need of last-minute inspirations about what to buy for Christmas gifts, dash down to the J. A. KIRVEN COMPANY and let them help you out. They're all prepared with a vast supply of cute and cunning ideas which are really delightfully low-priced. How about a compact sewing kit, fitted with silk thread, mending cotton, needles, thimbles and thread cutter? Or perhaps the sight of a perky chintz or feathertex apron intrigues you. Or maybe a pair of cozy foot warmers, or a pair of cute and quilted scuffs. A bit more expensive, but truly perfect presents are the genuine alligator handbags with leather linings certain to delight the most-hard-to-please woman. A thoughtful and practical gift to give might be an ensemble of a rayon-print ankle length coat in sheer or satin with a matching v-neck nightgown in white, pink, or blue. Indeed pretty and perfect. Following several of these suggestions by Kirven's will solve all your Christmas shopping problems.

—V—

Many think of the MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY being the best place in Columbus to buy fine footwear for men, women, and children. Indeed, this shop is a great deal more than that, for here you may shop for hosiery of rayon in celanese, mesh and rugged textures, as well as lisles in sheer, mesh and sport weaves. "For men only," are the hole-proof luster lisles and rayon hosiery and handtailored crepe, foulard, mogador or monotone type neckties. Of interest to women are the excellent quality handbags of soft, fine leathers or durable and attractive fabrics. If your shopping at present for accessorie-type Christmas gifts, you'll find a wealth of appealing articles in the shop which is so much more than just a shoe store, namely Miller-Taylor's.

—V—

This present holiday season promises to be similar to past Christmas seasons, in that it means a week of gala activities. For the many dances, where all wise women want to look their very best, the quality shop of KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, INC., suggests topping a most exciting evening gown with one of the appealing evening wraps from their lovely selections. Ever-popular are the boxy styles of inky, black velvet which are especially suitable for almost every type gown. One outstanding version of this style suggests the military with its touch of gold braid at the throat and the bright red lining. Other styles in velvet, sport dramatic white embroidery on their wide, loose sleeves. Fur wraps, quilted jackets and other smartly designed evening wraps at Kayser-Lilienthal's assure you the final touch of glamour for your momentous evenings during the holiday season.

—V—

Almost any of the exciting, yet practical gifts available at the SEARS ROEBUCK COMPANY are surprisingly low-priced. Whether you give presents from this most complete department store or whether you shop for presents for yourself, you'll fully realize the values of the fur coats, dresses, housecoats, felt hats, suits, handbags and pajamas displayed for you. Little boys' sailor suits, bright-colored blanket cloth snow suits, princess-style corduroy dresses for tiny tots, rayon nightgowns trimmed with lace and ribbons, 100% wool cardigan sweaters, slips, stockings, handkerchiefs, in fact most everything you want to give or get this Christmas is at Sears. For your friends in the service you'll find shirts, ties, hosiery and leather goods, perfect for brightening up a military celebration. Gifts galore for children and grown ups are thoroughout this family store, so do your shopping now when you'll be certain to find a vast and interesting selection.

Benning G. I. Eats 350 Tons of Bread Per Month

In the preparation of his Army Service Forces bakery at Fort Benning, Uncle Sam kills the proverbial two birds with one stone by training Army personnel for service with bakery companies in the field and by baking bread for his troops at the post at a cost of slightly more than three cents per pound.

The job of baking bread for the soldiers at Fort Benning runs into big business according to a report from 1st Lt. Bernard J. Ritterholz, bakery officer of the Quartermaster Bakers and Cooks School at the post. The report shows that during a typical month the bakery at Benning produced over 700,000 pounds of bread, or about 23 carloads.

The bakery is operated by assigned military personnel in charge of graduates of the Army's Bakers and Cooks Schools. It was established under the supervision of the Quartermaster Branch, Fourth

Bonesteel Cites Academic G. I.

Pvt. Dennis H. Williams of the Service Detachment, Academic Regiment of the Infantry School has been cited by Maj. Gen. Charles H. Bonesteel, commandant of the Infantry School, for an outstanding act of courage reported by Lt. Col. Charles Carlton of the Post Ordnance.

Col. Carlton reported: "On November 27, Pvt. Williams was driving a team of spirited horses near a road intersection on Edwards Street when the team bolted and jerked the reins from his hands. Without thought of injury to himself, he jumped to the ground, overtook the team, brought them under control by grabbing the reins and beating the horses in the face with his hands, thereby preventing them from running into a convoy which was passing.

"In my opinion, Pvt. Williams prevented not only damage to government property but prevented one or more of the trucks from being wrecked. This soldier quickly analyzed the situation and with outstanding courage prevented a serious accident. I believe such acts should be duly recognized."

General Bonesteel wrote: "The Commandant desires to add his commendation for the courageous act of Private Dennis H. Williams. This act constituted an outstanding demonstration of the ability of the real American soldier to act decisively and effectively and without regard for personal safety under emergency conditions."

Private Williams' home is in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Children's School Changes Yule Date To December 17

Fort Benning's Christmas celebration will begin tomorrow (Friday, Dec. 17) afternoon at the Post Primary School when children of the military personnel from Columbus, Benning Park, Baker Village, and the Fort will fall in at 1:30 with Santa Claus as commander and march over to the Main Theatre for the festivities.

As the six hundred children look on the beauty of a lighted tree, and await their presents to be handed out at the end of the afternoon, a program will be presented including one of Mrs. Albert B. Claus' children stories, a 45-minute Christmas movie, a group of Christmas songs by the school's glee club, and other events that will make this the children's Yuletide affair.

This school celebration is given at this early date because school classes close for the holiday period tomorrow, to be re-opened January 3.

Main PX Is Open Evenings For EM

The main branch of the PX is keeping open evenings until Christmas for the convenience of enlisted men. Hours of business are from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. from Monday until Friday. (Regular hours are 9:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.)

The Exchange management state that the extra hours are designed particularly for the enlisted men and have asked officers and their families to do their shopping during the regular hours.

All patrons are urged to shop as early as possible if they wish to get any choice in the matter of stock, for no new stock of holiday goods will be added. No "Christmas" merchandise purchased from the PX will be exchanged after December 25, nor will refunds be made thtrefor.

Service Command, to insure that the soldiers in training at the post have sufficient wholesome and nutritious bread without putting too great a load on commercial bakeries serving civilians.

The report for the month shows that the bakery used 496,827 pounds of flour and produced 700,942 pounds of bread, or 141 pounds of bread for every 100 pounds of flour consumed at a cost of .03045 cents per pound of bread. Army bread is baked in two-pound loaves while the ordinary commercial loaf weighs about one pound.

Luckies Slate Yule Events

With little more than a week before Christmas remaining, the "Lucky 7th" Armored division returned to garrison yesterday to find a veritable barrage of entertainment awaiting it during the holidays.

After spending the past month in the field the Sand Hill garrison looks good to Maj. Gen. Lindsay McDonald Silvester's "Luckies," but home will look even better to those few soldiers with Christmas furloughs.

The round of Yuletide festivities got under way yesterday with an "open house" party at the Sand Hill Service club, under the direction of Mrs. Winifred Baker, senior hostess. Along with renewal of old acquaintances, coffee and doughnuts were the order of the day as hundreds of men jammed the club on their first day back in camp.

Tonight the festivities continue with a "Welcome Home" dance to the music of Sgt. Tony Borelli and his 48th Armored Infantry orchestra.

VARIETY SHOW

For the rest of the month unit dances, parties, and broadcasts will entertain 7th Armored soldiers both in the service club and the "unit club," formerly the Sand Hill non-com's club. Each of the several "rec halls" will present a variety show with one of the division dance orchestras this week and next, featuring talent from the main post as well as from 7th companies.

High point in the season's activities is scheduled for Sunday afternoon 1530 to 1700 when 150-200 children of 7th Armored men will be feted at a special party in the "Unit club" by personal invitation of Commanding General Lindsay McDonald Silvester. In order to keep the traditional Christmas atmosphere for the children, there will be a big fat "Santa" with gifts and well-filled stockings for every child attending.

A picked chorus of eight men, and a brass ensemble from the division's military band will furnish music for the general and his guests.

On Christmas day, after the Army's famous Christmas dinner, the 7th will salute Fort Benning and vicinity with a full hour broadcast over WRLB from Service club No. 2 in Sand Hill.

PARTIES SCHEDULED

Parties are also scheduled for enlisted men Christmas Eve, Christmas day and New Year's Eve in the Sand Hill Service club, and unit dances will be held on the 21st, 27th, 29th and 30th of this month.

Two-day holiday passes will be granted a few soldiers wishing to spend Christmas or New Year's away from camp, and many more will be allowed to spend the holidays with their families in Columbus.

Although it is a busy season for a busy, combat-training division, 7th Armored chaplains predict record attendance at religius services of all major denominations in division chapels. This year as in former years the men of the 7th appreciate the fundamental "freedom of worship" which they are striving to preserve in the hope that soon they may be instrumental in restoring "peace on earth . . . good will toward men."

Special Program To Mark Service Club 5 Birthday

Service Club 5, Harmony Church Area at Fort Benning, will observe its first anniversary with a series of special programs and entertainments, beginning Sunday, December 19, Lt. Robert C. Long, officer in charge, announced today. The celebration will extend over a week, climaxing with a play, "Three Wise Men," under the direction of the Twix-teen dramatic players of the Little USO on Christmas Day.

E. E. Farley, director, Army-Navy-YMCA USO, Columbus, Ga., is scheduled to give the main address this Sunday, Dec. 19, during the opening of the celebration at the Service Club. The program will open at 5 p. m., EWT, and will also include Christmas music by the Third Truck Regiment orchestra, a violin selection by Cpl. Harcouth McCean, and a vocal number by Lt. Long.

First Sgt. Victor H. Lyons will review highlights in the year-old history of the Service Club as master of ceremonies, and introduce special guests. Another feature of the day will be presentation of a variety show by soldiers of the Third Regiment. It will include dance and song numbers, and a series of hot comedy skits.

During the week, each department is planning special activities. The Negro in Music and Literature wil be depicted by the Service Club library, under Mrs. Hazel G. Rood, librarian, December 22, and the Cafeteria, Miss Louise E. Harris, hostess, will give a free beer party Christmas Day.

Other features will be an old-fashioned Christmas Party in the Service Club lobby with music by the Third Regiment chorus; and a series of small game tournaments, planned by Sgt. Harry Smyles, chairman, of the Recreational Council.

Miss A. Bernice Smith is directress of the Service Club and responsible for outlining and carrying out activities for the club. She has been with the club since it opened a year ago.

St. Luke Plans Yule Reception, Carol Service

Sunday evening, December 19, from 7 to 8:45 EWT, the Service Mothers Club of St. Luke Methodist church will entertain at a reception in the social rooms of the church. Hostesses will be the mothers of the men and women of St. Luke church who are serving in the armed forces of the country and Fort Benning personnel, families, and friends are cordially invited.

Mrs. Frank J. Bickerstaff, who is chairman of the Service Mothers Club, is in charge of the arrangements for the reception. Tea and coffee will be poured by other service mothers, and sandiches and fruit cake will be served during the course of the evening. Mrs. Frank Bradford will decorate the rooms for the occasion.

During the reception Lt. Robert Wenz, of the Advanced Officers Cpurse, TIS, a former pianist with Paul Whiteman, will play favorite musical compositions. There will be group singing of the beloved Christmas hymns and carols.

CAROL SERVICE

Following the reception, there will be a Christmas carol service in the church sanctuary. The hour for the service is 9:00 EWT. The choir of St. Luke church, augmented by singers from the First Presbyterian church, will be under the direction of Mary Catherine Medley. Accompanist for the service will be Elizabeth Fort Jenkins, noted Columbus musician.

The Carol Service has been adapted from the annual service given at King's College chapel, Cambridge, England. It centers around a group of nine Scripture lessons, portraying in their entirety the story of Christmas, from the ancient prophecies of the coming of a King, through the actual birth of Jesus in Bethlehem, and ending with the interpretation of the Mystery of the Incarnation as set down in the Gospel of St. John. In the group with each lesson is appropriate music, consisting of hymns, carols, ancient plainsong, and other inspiring musical numbers.

PROCESSIONAL

There will be a candlelight processional, followed by the Bidding Prayer, an ancient and traditional prayer-form still much in use in English churches. Rev. Paul Sanders will read the lessons. An offering will be taken for overseas relief.

NEW YEAR'S CURFEW

Curfew time for military personnel at Fort Benning will not be extended on New Year's Eve off the reservation, according to an announcement at post headquarters today. Enlisted men and officers will be out of public places and off the streets at midnight, Columbus time. It was announced, however, that curfew time will be extended one hour on the reservation to 2 a.m., E.W.T.

Seems as if people who do wrong usually find the right way to do it, while those who want to do right too often go at it the wrong way.

People who put on airs have no reason to be put out when others put them off.

Wignited Wax Waxes Warmly; Wesult—Waxplosion

Three booming explosions—shrieking of fire sirens—screaming of brakes — hoarse shouts of guards and firemen —scurrying of soldiers and various other alarms and excursions at 3:03 a.m. today brought Fort Benning officers rushing out, wondering if a bombing raid were being staged on the post.

They found everything pretty well under control, however, with the fire department putting out a blaze that had resulted from an explosion in a paint and flooring wax storehouse behind Service Club No. 1.

Investigation showed that Pvt. David Hart, First Parachute Training Regiment, assigned to guard a group of Italian prisoners of war on a floor waxing detail during the night, had struck a match to show the prisoners where the wax was stored. Result — fumes in the shed ignited with a roar. Nobody was injured. Damage was less than $100 to the shed and $500 to the contents.

Ed Memphis World To Cover Reception Center For PRO

Private Lewis O. Swingler, managing editor of the Memphis World, Memphis, Tenn., and one of the few Negroes of the country holding a journalism certificate, this week was assigned to the Public Relations Office at Fort Benning, Major R. J. Hammargren, director of the Public Relations Dviision, announced. Swingler is on leave from his paper.

Attached to the Special Service Office of the Reception Center, Private Swingler is expected to cover the many news sources of the Reception Center relating to the Negro service men as they get their first taste of military life.

Graduating from Nebraska University in 1931, Swingler was awarded the A. B. degree and Journalism Certificate. He came to Memphis a month later to take over the editorial department of the then two-week-old Memphis World and over a period of twelve years help to build this publication into one of the best known Negro papers of the country. The Memphis World now has a circulation that extends to readers of North Mississippi, East Arkansas, and scores of out-of-tate communities of West Tennessee. Member of the Scott Newspaper Syndicate, it is the only Negro semi-weekly in the Midsouth.

Private Swingler, in 1939, was invited by LeMoyne College, Memphis, to set up a course in journalism, which he taught for three years thereafter. It is one of the few Negro colleges to introduce journalism into its curriculum. Many of Swingler's students have decided upon journalism as a life's vocation.

Achievement is better than argument. No one can argue against experience.

Benning Sets Plasma Record

What is believed to be the nation's highest record of blood donations ever received by six Red Cross nurses in a period of six hours was made Friday, when the Red Cross mobile Blood Donor unit obtained 302 pints of blood from Fort Benning soldiers who took a few minutes off from their rigorous training to give blood that some of their "buddies overseas might live," according to Ralph J. Mitchell, field director of the Fort Benning branch of the American Red Cross.

The highest previous record in Georgia, Mrs. J. B. Suttles of Atlanta, in charge of the blood donor unit, said, was established during four days, when 724 pints of blood were obtained, while the record set at Benning during the three-day period which ended Friday totals 652, the average is almost 36 more pints a day than the previous record. The highest previous record for a single day, established in Georgia, was made in Rome, Ga., in September, when seven nurses worked seven hours to obtain 288 pints of blood, in contrast to the 302 pints obtained at Benning Friday by six nurses in six hours flat.

The donor unit, which arrived Wednesday a week ago for its third visit to the post, collected 185 pints of blood from volunteers from Infantry School units last week, 15 more pints than the 160 per day which is the average for the donor unit. Friday volunteers from units under the Parachute School donated 165 pints of blood, and were prepared to give an addition 100 pints had not a delay in express shipment en rotue to the post prevented the arrival of more bottles.

Friday morning soldiers from guard units at the prisoner of war camp, civilians, and men from the Seventh Armored division and other units in the Sand Hill area provided the donors for the anticipated 290 pints.

Col. William H. Hobson, post commander, spent much time where the bleeding was taking place, visiting with the soldiers, congratulating them on their eagerness and willingness to donate their blood "for their buddies overseas," and seeing that operations were proceeding smoothly in every respect.

The blood unit includes six Red cross nurses, two volunteer nurses' aides, an attending physician, a medical secretary, a blood custodian, a volunteer Motor Corps member, and the special assistant to the Atlanta blood donor service in charge of the Mobile Unit of Georgia.

AUXILIARY HELPS

Assisting the blood donor unit were members of the Fort Benning auxiliary of the Red Cross, and the Canteen Corps from the Muscogee county branch of the Red Cross in Columbus.

According to Mrs. Suttles, the mobile unit feels that it had rather come to Fort Benning than any other place in the United States, due to the "cooperation, efficiency and smoothness with which the procedure is organized. Through the Columbus chapter and the Fort Benning auxiliary of the Red Cross, and the Red Cross organization here, and the Army represented at the post, we have no worries here. It is absolutely a perfect set-up," Mrs. Suttles said.

"We get more blood here than on any trips we have ever made or than from any place the mobile unit has been in Georgia. And except for Saturdays and Sundays, the mobile unit has not been idle a single day since May," she declared.

PX Christmas Hours Announced

Special Christmas Day hours for the Fort Benning post exchange and branches were announced Wednesday by PX officials.

The PX grocery and all branches, both in the Sandhill and HC areas, will be closed. The cafeteria will close at 2 p. m. and the PX, serving the Parachute area and Reception area, will open at 2 p. m. The Lawson Field PX will open at 5:30 p. m., as will PX No. 18, serving the 1st STR.

All other PX activities normally open on Sunday will open for business Saturday at 4:30 p. m.

Post Gas Stations Exhaust Supply

Due to a dastic cut in the gasoline quota to the Fort Benning Exchange, the sale of gasoline on the post has been halted since Saturday, it was announced today, since the supplies on hand have been exhausted.

Colonel John P. Edgerly, executive officer of the post, disclosed that reason for the shortage of available gas at exchange garages on the reservation has been the decrease in current gas allotments.

For the month of December, the post was allocated 66 2-3 per cent the amount of gasoline which was apportioned to the garages in November. Col. Edgerly explained that under the new quota arrangement, the post will receive shipments of gasoline once a week.

It is expected that gasoline will be available at the post in a day or so. However, plans are underway to limit the amount of gas to be made available to car operators so as not to cause an excessive drain on the available supplies at the post.

Novel Overseas Yule Broadcast Slated Dec. 25

On Christmas Day, men and women of the American armed forces on land and sea in every quarter of the war-torn globe will hear the radioed greetings of a grateful people in the United States, and the voices of fighting men overseas will be brought by the same means to the people on the home front, the War Department announced today.

Three hours of special Christmas radio programs have been produced and transcribed in this country by the Armed Forces Radio Service, Army Service Forces. These programs, for the benefit of the armed forces overseas only, will feature entertainment stars and name bands.

Arrangements have been made to insure complete coverage of overseas military and naval personnel. The transcriptions will be beamed by short-wave stations in the United Stations to all parts of the world. In addition, the transcriptions have been shipped by plane and ship so as to arrive at their destinations by Christmas Eve. Overseas, the transcriptions will be broadcast to the troops through such facilities as army and local radio stations. Where such facilities are not available, phonographs and public address systems will be utilized.

NOTABLES TO SPEAK

Included in the three-hour program will be personal greetings from the Honorable Henry L. Stimson, secretary of war; the Honorable Frank Knox, secretary of the navy; General George C. Marshall, chief of staff of the army; Admiral Ernest J. King, commander in chief of the United States fleet and chief of naval operations; Lieutenant General Thomas Holcomb, Commandant of the Marine Corps; Vice Admiral Russell R. Waesche, coast guard commandant; Chaplain (Brigadier General) W. R. Arnold, chief of chaplains, U. S. army; Captain Robert D. Workman, navy chief of chaplains; Colonel Oveta Culp Hobby, director of the Women's Army Corps; Captain Mildred H. McAfee, director, Women's Reserve, U. S. Naval Reserve; Lieutenant Colonel Ruth C. Streeter, director, Marine Corps Women's Reserve, and Lieutenant Commander Dorothy Stratton, director, Women's Reserve, U. S. Coast Guard Reserve.

On Christmas Eve and again on Christmas Day will come programs from American soldiers in far places. Feature planned through coordination of the American radio networks and the War Department Bureau of Public Relations will include, for instance, the broadcast of a midnight mass from some place behind the battle lines in Italy.

HOLY LAND CHORUS

A chorus of 200 American soldiers in the Holy Land will be another event. From as island in the South Pacific will come a special Christmas-tree decorating exercise. Listeners will hear accounts of Christmas celebrations from the jungles of Panama and the snows of Alaska.

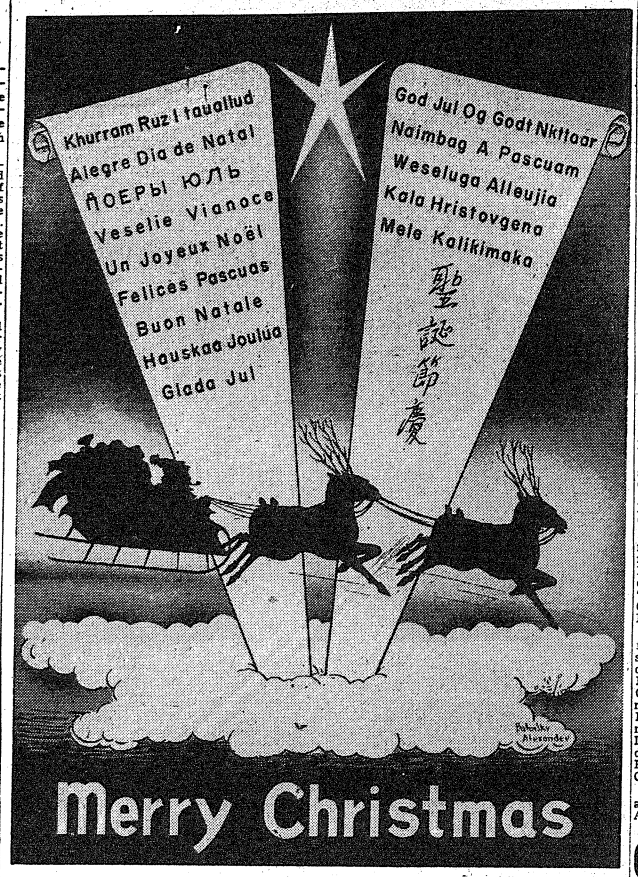
In the United States, soldiers returned from combat as casualties, now recovering in army hospitals, will send greetings to their comrades overseas and to their friends at home. Also being prepared are several broadcasts during the holiday week-end of special Christmas services conducted by Army chaplains at Army posts and on maneuvers in the United States and with troops in foreign lands.

Included in the three-hour Christmas Day program produced and transcribed in this country for broadcast only in the theaters of operation is the 90-minute "Command Performance," featuring Bob Hope, Jack Benny, Fred Allen, Nelson Eddy, Spike Jones and the City Slickers, the Charioteers, Ginny Simms, Ed "Archie" Gardner, Jimmy Durante, Kay Kyser and his orchestra, Frances Langford, Dinah Shore, Ken Carpenter, and a military band.

OVERSEAS PROGRAM

Other programs included in the three hours of entertainment for overseas only include:

"Christmas Package," a half-hour show with Linda Darnell as mistress of ceremonies, the Andrews Sisters, Fibber McGee and Molly, Lena Horne, Ginny Simms, and Bob Hope.



"Christmas Album," a 15-minute show presented by Bing Crosby, with the Andrews Sisters.

A 15-minute show presented by Fred Waring, featuring his orchestra and chorus, offering "Jingle Bells," "Night Before Christmas," and "Cantique de Noel."

Basil Rathbone of the films will play "Scrooge" in a half-hour adaptation of Dickens' "A Christmas Carol," with Richard Crooks as guest soloist.

Uniformed listeners abroad on New Year's Day will hear a 60-minute sweep of America's popular bands and soloists playing and singing the hit tunes of 1943. Orchestras will be led by Woody Herman, Freddie Slack, Cab Calloway, Bobby Sherwood, Harry James, Count Basie, Xavier Cugat, Jimmy Lunceford, Benny Goodman, Tommy Dorsey, Louis Jordan and Freddie Martin. Singers will include Mary Martin, Helen Gorrest, Dinah Shore, Ella

Merry Christmas In Any Tongue!

Primary School Yule Program

A Christmas program will be presented at the Post Primary School next Sunday morning at the Sunday School hour, 9:15 o'clock.

Christmas songs and a three-reel movie, "A Saviour Is Born," will be features of the event to which all parents and children on the Post are invited, according to an announcement by Post Chaplain Frank M. Thompson.

On Christmas Day, it is further announced, the Post Junior Choir, under the direction of Mrs. J. O. Methvin, will present a series of Christmas songs in the wards of the Main Post Hospital Station.

Strip-tease Queen Hit By Grippe; Doc Declines To Let Her Strip; Doughboys Clamor 'It's a Gyp!'

Gypsey Rose Lee has been forced to postpone her visit to Fort Benning. The former strip-tease queen was stricken with the flu this week, and her doctors advised her to cancel her present itinerary.

Miss Lee was scheduled to appear on Benning on January 1 for a series of shows at the Main Theater. However, Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer of the post, said that he hoped to bring the Gypsey here on Jan. 5.

Another change in itinerary affected the visit of Heavyweight Boxing Champion (Sgt.) Joe Louis (Barrow). The Brown Bomber was originally scheduled to appear here with his sparring partners on December 29. Col. Finnegan announced that his appearance has been changed to Monday, January 3.

Hospital Yule Plans Complete

Final plans for the Yuletide celebration at the Station Hospital were made at a luncheon staff meting of the Grey Ladies Monday at the Officers Club, and hostesses selected for Christmas Eve and Christmas Day.

Four shifts volunteered for Wednesday and Thursday to stuff 2500 stockings with sweets, fruits and gifts, while others have taken wards to check for the final gift list that must be gotten Friday in order that everyone of the constantly changing hospital population gets a gift package.

Decorations are to be put in final order Friday, too, under the direction of Mrs. Bass Lewis of Columbus with her committee, Mrs. Edgar Bulolck and Mrs. William McKee.

The luncheon Monday was attended by 60 Grey Ladies, several of whom had just completed their course. Mrs. Hugh Elliott is chairman of the organization, and Mrs. John Gold and Mrs. J. A. Lynch were hostesses in charge of the affair.

MISHAP SLOWS TRAFFIC

Traffic to Fort Benning was slowed Wednesday by a collision between a car and a Parachute school bus just across the bridge from Outpost No. 1.

T-5 Marvin Kuhl, who was driving the car, and Pfc. Melvin H. Joyce, driver of the bus, suffered minor injuries when both of their vehicles overturned.

Florida's oldest living thing is "The Senator," a cypress near Orlando, 3500 years old.

Downtown Billeting Office Moved To USO-TA Lounge

Fort Benning's downtown billeting office has moved to the lounge of the USO-Traveler's Aid building at Tenth St. and Broadway, Lt. John W. Myers, Jr., post billeting officer, announces.

The move was made to coordinate more closely the activities of the USO-TA and the billeting office and for the greater convenience of all personnel concerned, Lt. Meyers said. The billeting officer will continue to handle only quarters of a permanent nature while the USO-TA will confine its activities to the listing of quarters for transients.

The downtown office is in charge of Lt. Owen Meredith, Jr., acting assistant billeting officer, assisted by Sgt. Steve Ivaniszyn and Cpl. Ursula Di Filippo. The phone number is Col. 8213.

Post's Christmas Entertainment, Religious Program Now In Full Swing

Christmas week activities at Fort Benning will cover a multitude of events ranging from religious services to tea dances, with a full day of broadcasting of various programs on Christmas Day itself as a climax. In addition, many events are scheduled for the week between Christmas and New Year for G. I. entertainment.

Columbus Cafes Open Christmas

Soldiers and their out-of-town guests will not have to go hungry on Christmas Day, thanks to the action of local restaurant owners, it was revealed last night.

Walter P. Pike, secretary of the Columbus Restaurant association, stated that a check-up last week showed that at least 75 per cent of the restaurants will remain open, and probably more.

Of the restaurant managers contacted last night by the Enquirer, two in the downtown area plan to close Christmas Day, and these have made it a custom for many years to close for that day. An additional reason, they said, is that the majority of their help are army wives who wish to be at home with their husbands for the holiday.

One Broadway restaurant manager, in response to a query said, "You bet I'll be open. I'm going to have dinner for "the boys" even if I have to cook the whole thing myself, and the soldiers have to wait on themselves!"

Another stated that his eating place would be open Christmas Day and Sunday, but that he would close on Tuesday and Wednesday in order to give his help some time off during the holidays.

Although most of the restaurants will be open Saturday, some of them will not remain open Sunday, it was said.

A Note of Thanks

THE BAYONET desires to express its deep appreciation to Miss Jane Russell who posed for our front-page Christmas greeting card, to Frank Foster and the J. A. Kirven Company who generously supplied costume and setting for the photo, and to Sgt. Don Kortemeier who made the portrait for us.

If anyone thinks it was an easy task to bring forth the finished product, he is mistaken. THE BAYONET editors called Mr. Foster to ask whether there was available a suitable costume for Miss Russell to wear. The answer was in the negative, but Kirven's magnanimously offered to engage a dressmaker, at the firm's expense, supply all of the material necessary, and make available the needed props.

Miss Russell then gave generously of her time to complete the necessary arrangements. She made several trips to town to be fitted to the costume. The time taken to make the photo totaled exactly three hours and we must say that her patience was inexhaustable. It was no picnic to perch on a chimney top for that length of time with six 750-watt Kleig lights glaring in her eyes.

Sgt. Kortemeier is due a vote of thanks for his patience also in laboring until he thought he had exactly the kind of photo which would appeal to the boys of Fort Benning.

Orchids to all of them. We hope you like it!

Civilian Boasts Only 2 Bosses In 35 Years

John W. Perrin, principal clerk of the gas and lubricants section of the Supply and Service Division, Fort Benning, has had only two employers—an Atlanta newspaper and the War Department—in the more than 35 years he has been working, but has held just about every job within those organizations.

J. W. PERRIN

For 13 years before the last war, Mr. Perrin worked for the Atlanta Journal, specializing in the business end of the paper. But in those days, anyone who worked for a newspaper had to know all angles of the business, so he sold ads, wrote stories and editorials, set type and did whatever else had to be done.

Mr. Perrin was the first selectee from Atlanta in the first World War, and was assigned in turn to artillery, quartermaster, and depot work. At the time of his discharge from the army in November, 1918, he was working in the subsistence division of the Zone Supply Depot and immediately went to work at the same job in a civilian status.

He came to Fort Benning when the Atlanta depot was abandoned in November, 1922, and worked first as principal clerk of the commissary. After about two years he was transferred to the Property Section, now the Supply and Service Division.

In the years since then, he has worked in every branch of the division except transportation, and in his present job of gasoline procurement has become experienced in some phases of that field.

Mr. Perrin is married and has one child, Patsy, a high school student. The family lives near Phenix City.

Sabers Plan Big Christmas

By CPL. JOHN J. FITZGIBBON
306th Infantry P R Office

As the 300th Regiment of the Infantry School swings into its second Christmas holiday season since activation, a varied and extensive program of Christmas activities for the men is in the making. Last Christmas the regiment, only three weeks old at the time, was in no position to plan much for the men but is trying to make up for it this year.

Beginning the early part of Christmas week, carols will be played at frequent intervals during the day and piped to loudspeakers scattered throughout the area. The 300th band will also make a tour of the company streets on three successive nights before Christmas, playing Christmas carols. The band itself is planning a little celebration of its own, with a decorated tree, a Christmas eve party and exchange of presents. Captain Benjamin Zvolanek, in charge of the band has already made his Yuletide present in the form of a sizable amount of money towards making the party a success.

All companies in the regiment have made plans for Christmas celebrations within their own companies. Most revolve around the Christmas dinner with emphasis on an eye and stomach filling bill of fare. Married men in the regiment plan to bring their wives to the dinner and give them a taste of G.I. food and a G.I. Christmas. Entertainment to go with the dinner has been arranged by many of the companies. All have arranged for decorations in dayrooms, mess halls and orderly rooms but many have found themselves in a jam because of the lack of decorating material in Columbus.

TO STAGE PAGEANT

The Christmas spirit will have its full play in Company M where 1st Sgt. Britt Rayburn is planning an old-fashioned pageant to be staged by the men and for the men in the Company Mess Hall on Christmas Eve. The highlight of the pageant will be a recitation of the story of the Christ-Child with an appropriate background of Christmas music. Of all the companies in the 300th, Company M has planned the most extensive program. In addition to the pageant they intend to have an exchange of presents among the men and a Santa Claus to distribute the presents during the Christmas eve festivities.

The only outdoor Christmas tree in the regiment, and that 20 feet high, has been set up by Company I. It will be gayly decorated and lighted and on Christmas eve the company will assemble around it, sing Christmas carols and distribute presents which have been placed under the tree.

The regiment, realizing that Christmas is essentially a religious festival has arranged for a complete Chapel program. On the night before Christmas the Protestant chaplains, Jones and Daniels will conduct a carol service, this to be followed by a midnight Mass at which Chaplain Janco will officiate. On Christmas morning, the Protestant and Catholic chaplains will have appropriate Christmas services. A crib has been prepared and will be set up on the lawn in front of the chapel.

NON-COMS ENTERTAIN

The recently opened Non-Coms club will stage its first party on Christmas night and expects to attract well over 400 people. Married men are bringing their wives, single men their girl friends and for those who have no escorts the WACs will be at hand to provide pleasing company. Music will be supplied by the 300th Dance Orchestra.

With a three day holiday looming at Christmas time, Company E has made arrangements for ping-pong, pool and chess tournaments. The company feels that with the weather the way it is the men will enjoy themselves better with indoor games.

Presents have been arriving for all the men in the regiment but the best present of all was left for Company A. For the past three weeks this company has been braving the recent below-freezing weather on bivouac out in the Clear Creek area. When they were informed that bivouac would end a few days before Christmas, the men revived their belief in Santa Claus. He couldn't have given them a better Christmas present.

Ex-Servicemen's Lapel Buttons Are Now Available

Lapel buttons to be worn by former military personnel who have been honorably discharged since September 8, 1939, are now available at post headquarters, Fort Benning, it was announced at the post today.

Eligible persons living in the vicinity of the post may obtain the lapel buttons at Room 9, post headquarters. Those who live too far away to apply in person should write to the commanding officer (Attention MPB) Fort Benning.

Applications of former officers, warrant officers, nurses and contract surgeons must include two true copies of separation orders and a certificate in duplicate, signed by the officer concerned, that he is entitled to wear the lapel button.

Applications of enlisted men and women must be accompanied by the discharge certificate when applying either in person or in writing. The certificate will be returned to the individual.

Personnel honorably discharged in the future may secure their lapel buttons at Room 9, post headquarters, upon presentation of their discharge certificates or relief from active duty orders.

COVER BOYS

Covers of three of the recent issues of the Infantry Journal and one of Liberty Magazine were graced with photos of members of the 176th Infantry of The Infantry School Troops. The photos reproduced in color were taken by Public Relations cameramen from Washington and included shots of a mortar and 105 mm squads in action and also a marching column.

Wilson, N. C., is said to have the largest curb market in the world.

Don't Mix Yule Cheer, Military Secrets

Sunday next hundreds of Fort Benning servicemen and women will enjoy the hospitality of Columbus and Phenix City homes as dinner guests of citizens of these two communities anxious to substitute for the Christmas board with their families our soldiers will miss due to the war.

Post authorities are eager that Fort Benning soldiers enjoy to the fullest the generosity of these public-spirited citizens; they are equally eager that these soldiers exercise the greatest discretion in discussing matters of a military nature which if bandied about might endanger the internal security of this nation at war.

THE BAYONET is in no sense implying that our hosts are enemy agents lying in wait for juicy morsels of military information to relay to our adversaries abroad. Nor is THE BAYONET suggesting that our soldiers and WACS and nurses would consciously be guilty of divulging vital military information.

However, all too often many of us, prompted by that human failing of desiring to gain self-importance, are prone to seek the limelight by dropping here and there bits of information which are repeated in the presence of other and not so innocent ears. Ultimately the enemy has enough of the pieces of a jig-saw puzzle to fill out a more or less complete picture of the information they so ardently desire.

There is an old statement quite often coming from the lips of Army men, to wit: "I'm in the Army; I don't know anything." If soldiers will only live by this creed when away from their duties, there need be no fear that the enemy will learn anything whic migt endanger the successful prosecution of the war. Soldiers politely refraining from discussions of a military nature will certainly enhance the opinion which civilians may have of them as fighting men.

Yule Can Be Bridgehead Of A Brave New World

High taxes, travel difficulties, commodity shortages, no room room in the hotels. The things we complain about in 1943 are nothing new. Circumstances surrounding the first Christmas 1943 years ago were much the same as now. Today dictator-occupied countries, mass enslavement, reprisal killings blot out peace on earth. Then there was the Roman occupation of Palestine when Herod killed all the children under 2 years because he could not find Christ.

Just when violence and force alone seemed to have the last word, Christ was born. With him there came into history a new factor—a fresh invasion of hope. Greece and Roman had great culture for certain classes. But the ordinary man too came into his rightful place with Christ. The spirit which made our democracy possible was born in the Bethlehem manger. It was reborn in the lives of courageous men in Independence Hall. Today a rebirth of this same spirit across the world is all that can make "a world family of democratic nations' more than wishful thinking. Only as we fight to square our lives with what Christ taught will we build the new world hoped for by the millions whose spokemen met at Cairo and Teheran.

The way Christians live has always triumphed over tyranny. After corruption ate out the power of Caesar and Herod died with his brutal regime, the way of the Christians lived on. That is why, with each recurring Christmas, there comes to all who know this an upsurge of hope. This hope can no longer be allowed to egg. If Christians hold their ground this year, the spirit of Christmas can become more than a one-day invasion. It can become the permanent bridgehead of the new world.

A Soldier Dreams Of A Perfect Christmas

During the past few weeks we soldiers have received many letters inquiring as to what we desired most for Christmas. Few of us would answer, if persuaded to be honest, in terms of material gifts. We want the world has has wanted for centuries and for what it is still waiting.

We want peace and shared happiness; the love of a few relatives and friends; the laughter of children at play and, faith enough to see with the children's eyes that life is worth while and the spirit of Christmas enduring.

We wish for years full of days of contentment, health, satisfaction in our work and in our associations with our fellow-beings and, for the peace that "passeth understanding."

But, how can we soldiers, knowing that it is an impossibility to obtain these precious gifts for this Christmas, obtain them for next Christmas? Let us look at the whole matter with severe introspection to be sure that we are contrivuting our share towards the achievement we so dearly wish.

Before we do anything else we must cure the CHRONIC GRIPERS in our midst, that type of soldier who would gripe after having a good turkey dinner because he did not have caviar and champagne. Maybe he had never tasted these delicacies but he would gripe withal. To the man who gripes about his food, we say, "Brother, think of your buddies who are in cold and wet fox-holes who go hours and, sometimes, days without even a sandwich." We believe you will swallow your words before uttering them if you will only go out and occupy a fox hole for two hours.

To the man who gripes about not receiving enough mail and even accuses the mail orderlies of miss-delivery, we say: "Maybe you would receive more mail should you fill your own letters with cheerfullness, instead of with your own WOES." People soon get tired of talking or writing to a person who reflects sourness and bitterness in every word and action. No one likes to hear of the three abnoxious D's: DEATH, DISEAST and DESTRUCTION. Yet, many men, filled to overflowing with their own self-pity, will dwell upon nothing else in their letters. They will magnify a cold to such an extent that the person on the receiving end foresees pneumonia and imminent deat.

To the man who gripes about not being able to get ahead in the army, we say: "Analyze your gripes and see if you could conscientiously promote yourself." Would you promote a man who complains about every chore with which he is entrusted; would you promote a man who complains that he should have been promoted to a certain other man's place although he is not fortified with either the mentality or learning of that man and is doing nothing about it but gripe or, would you promote the man who complains that a certain thing should be done a certain way although he has never cracked a Field Manual to ascertain whether he is right or wrong?

To the soldier who gripes about any and everything, we say: "Would you like to swap places with the American soldier who is occupying a watery grave on an isolated beach in the South Pacific or would you prefer to work hard and cheerfully so that another American boy will not have to occupy a grave alongside of him; would you like to swap places with the man who is maimed for life or would you rather use your two good limbs to run miles, if necessary, to save another boy who same misfortune; would you swap places with the soldier who is blinded or would you rather use your two good eyes to see that everything you do is done to its utmost perfection so that another soldier will not suffer like consequences; would you swap places with the soldier who is deafened or would you rather be deafened yourself so that you could not hear your own gripes?"

Remember that gripes are like sand on a well oiled wheel. Griping soldiers, although outwardly doing a good job, can slow up the war effort more than any other single source. This, because they do nothing well. One thousand griping soldiers become sand in on thousand WHEELS OF VICTORY. When magnified, think of how many WHEELS OF VICTORY may be stopped, thereby staving off the Christmas of our cherished dreams. Let's present ourselves with a "changed attitude this Christmas.

FROM THE TIME WE ARE BORN TILL WE RIDE IN A HEARSE, THINGS ARE NEVER SO BAD BUT WHAT THEY COULD HAVE BEEN WORSE."

—Staff Sgt. William Calhoun Hope, 3rd Bn., 13lst Infantry.

The Compass Has Five Points, Say Chinese

An old Chinese proverb reads, "There are five principal points to a compass, North, South, East, West, and the point where you are."

The intelligent man keeps his mind on that fifth point—the point where you are. It is the important point of reference for a personal analysis.

For the majority of men in the service, at least one year has gone by since being inducted into the forces of our nation. It is an excellent time to think of that fifth point. In physical training, military discipline and adjustment to Army life the progress has been steady. In a definite sense you know your way around. But there are other areas of great consequence that need to be checked.

First is the area of values. In the eyes of your buddies are you more of a man? They knew you months ago as one with a fixed convictions about moral qualities. You valued self respect and all owed no one to convince you wrong was right by simply twisting words. Where are you now? Have you learned that fidelity is the finest form of faith? If the war should end tomorrow are you sound enough in your choices of right and wrong to assume the responsibilities as a father, a sitizen, an employee? Are the basic designs for your living worthy of becoming universal in practice?

Second is the area of religion. All of you came into the Army with some form of religious expression. The wise man has nourished it. He has had sense enough to know that the whole fabric of his life is bound up with his maturing faith in God. He has not fallen prey to child-like playing with God. The universe, made according to a design by God, is the framework within which he grows in understanding and wisdom. He knows that despite war and Army regimentation his God has not relaxed the laws of decent speech, immorality, drunkenness and loose living. His observations convince him that the easiest ways to lose his tomorrows is through life's loose ends.

The hinese proverb is essentially true. The important point is where you are.

Many have tried but no one set has found a way to build a worthwhile world out of selfishness.

Self interest and materialism are entrenched in human nature like the Japs on Tarawa. Verbal barrage won't blast them out. We can only get at them through hand-to-hand conflict.

To break through to total victory in our lifetime, a lot of us will have to break through the habits of a lifetime.

USO Presents—

YULE PARTIES OPEN HOUSE, TREE PARTY, AND CAROL SINGING

By LT. M. S. DANK

For Benning personnel who are spending Xmas Eve or Day in Columbus and vicinity this coming weekend won't have to worry about getting the proper Yuletide spirit—and the food that goes with it. . . . Without exception, every USO in town is making special arrangements to entertain the soldiers and guests of the post. . . . As a matter of fact, many of the buildings have already started their celebrations of the holiday week and others will join in tonight and the few remaining days before the holiday actually takes place. . . .

The Ninth Street USO has taken cognizance of the fact that huge number of soldiers will not be able to crowd into the churches in Columbus for midnight mass. . . . Consequently it has arranged to hold services in its main auditorium for soldiers, their families, and friends. . . . Following the celebration, which starts at midnight of December 24-25, the club's traditional coffee-ands will be served to the gathering. . . . On Xmas Day itself, the club will be holding open house, and from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until evening, coffee, cookies, candies, and nuts will be served. . . .To date more than 70 home-made cakes have been pledged by Columbus women to supply the table. . . . Climax of the day takes place in the building at 8:30 p. m. (EWT) when a formal ball will be held.

At the Salvation Army USO, 1323 Broadway, an old fashioned Xmas tree party will be held. . . . This ought to be one of the high spots of the "night before Xmas." This club has announced that the Wynnton Study club, which customarily holds a yearly dinner party on that night, has cancelled its plans this year and has turned over the money which would have been spent in order to buy trees, decorations, and even presents for every GI attending on Xmas Eve. Festivities get under way at 9 o'clock, (EWT.) . . . Next day, open house and eats.

Across in Phenix City, the other Salvation Army USO is planning similar celebration both the night before and on the holiday itself. . . . Only difference is that the Phenix City USO will start its Xmas party at 8:30 p. m. (EWT) on the 26th.

THE YWCA USO, the club which virtually guarantees the GI's a date on all occasions (well, almost always) will hold an hour's program of Xmas carols on the 24th from 5 to 6, and then has an open dance scheduled the same night beginning at 8:45. . . . Call Columbus 8451 for reservations and dates. . . . Or you can bring your own date. . . . There'll also be open house with iformal dancing both on the 25th and the 27th throughout the day.

Tonight, at 8 o'clock the Negro Army-Navy YMCA USO, 841 5th avenue is holding the first of a series of holiday dances and celebrations. . . . On the 24th the club will hold a Christmas Gift Festival Grab Bag, also beginning at 8 p. m. . . . Club is also scheduling a Xmas play for the day after the holiday. . . . Time for starting is 5 o'clock.

The Negro YWCA USO has scheduled a Twixteens party on the eve of the holiday, and will follow up on Xmas Day with open house, with the customary festivities, refreshments, and good times to mark the day.

Mail-Call—

Editor,
The Bayonet,

Dear Sir;—

The War Department deserves a vote of thanks for remembering that there are civilians giving all in this war effort. We civilians wear no glamorous uniform, have no special insignia to designate our status, do not parade to the blare of trumpets or the roll of drums, nor do we have any of the special privileges accorded those of the Armed Forces; still every day of the week at whatever time of the day or night necessary for the successful carrying out of the war effort, civilians are found on the job.

Gratitude for our small part in this tremendous program of winning the war is indeed gratefully received by those of us who have tried in our small way to do our bit. Some of us may have felt that there were times when Fort Benning could run just as well without us as with us.

Now we know that our job is just as important as the most essential war job. It is our responsibility to keep things humming behind the man behind the gun. The home front is our fort. Our typewriters, adding machines, drills, welders, and files are just as important in winning this war as machine gun or air plane in the front line. So again we say thank you for making us cognizant of our responsibility and for the kind words of appreciation spoken in our behalf.

Sincerely,
Myrtle M. Joines,
Garrison Library.

If all the good intentions in the world were put end to end, they would still get us nowhere. But if half of them were put to work they would reach to a new era.

Think what others ought to be like. Then start being like it yourself.

People who come up to snuff overcome their own shortcomings.

An absorbing purpose for all of life gives zest to any part of it.

WHEN CHRISTMAS COMES

Chaplain F. M. Thompson

Would you catch the real spirit of these holidays? Then take down your Dickens. His "Christmas Carol" has sung its way into the heart of mankind. A story that stigs Scrooge, the squeezing, wrenching, grasping, scrapping, clutching, covetous old sinner, into Yuletide activity and changes him into a ministering angel, will, in turn, provoke the most ill tempered reader to pleasant thoughts and good deeds.

"There are many things from which I might have derived good, by which I have not profited, I dare say," returned the nephew. "Christmas among the rest; but I am sure I have always thought of Christmas time, when it has come around, apart fro mthe veneration due to its sacred name and origin, if anything belonging to it can be apart from that, as a good time, a kind forgiving, charitable, pleasant time; the only time I know of, in the long calendar of the year, when men and women seem by one consent to open their shut-up hearts freely and to think of people below as if they really were fellow passengers to the grave and not another race of creatures bound on other journeys. Therefore, uncle, though it has never put a scrap of gold or silver in my pocket, I believe that it has done me good and will do me good and I say, 'God bless it!'"

There are some who would spread the Christmas cheer over all the months. There is no objection. However, that would be quite a strain on our poor humanity, but it won't hurt much, if once a year you relax.

* * *

Have you any old brudge
you'd like to pay,
Any wrong laid up from a bygone day?
Gather them now and lay them away
When Christmas comes.
Hard things are heavy to carry, my friend,
And life is short from the beginning to end.
Be kind to yourself, leave
nothing to mend,
When Christmas comes.
Then we can say with Tiny
Tim,
"God bless everyone."

The problems of the nation can only be answered with men. What kind of man are you—a problem or an answer?

We've agree on a concerted plan to break the force of enemy arms. Let's agree next on concerted thinking to break the force of un-American ideas.

Truth, when it becomes plain to our minds, has still to be made effective in our lives

Kay Says—

MANY A CHILD IS GETTING SANTA CLAUSED TO DEATH

The delightful myth of good St. Nick is a charming custom and undoubtedly adds much to the pleasure of a child's Christmas, but it puts a considerable strain on conscientous parents. It isn't so bad if your child is a naive, trustsould who believes everything that's told him, but get hold of some of these young skeptics and you have a job on your hands.

In the first place, many a child is getting Santa Claused to death, and secretly he'd just as soon have the whole thing over and done with. When those strange adults, from mother down to the buxom laundress, keep warning him he'd better be a good boy or Santa won't bring him anything, what's an active, mischief-loving boy to do?

"It's a terrific strain having to be good for such a long stretch, and many an energetic hoodlum would gladly settle for the bundle of switches or the lump of coal which he's been told Santa reserves for bad little boys. Besides, if he's reached the age of remembrance he knows good and well that Santa Claus shows up whether he's good good or bad.

The parents of a child who's set his heart on an electric train, a shiny new tricycle, or a big metal airplane are going to be hard put, this Christmas, to explain why jolly St. Nick has muddled the order. A bookish Santa Claus, who goes in for games and cardboard toys and durable clothes, isn't the sort of person many boys would go out of their way to meet.

This Christmas tree proposition has its puzzling aspects, also. Does Santa Claus bring the tree, as Susie's mother says? Aand if he does, what's that daddy's tugging out of the back seat of the car and putting on the porch? And if Santa brings the tree, why all this talk adults go in for about the scarcity of Christmas trees this year? Maybe Santa trims the tree at your house Christmas Eve, but down the street two older boys trim their own tree several days earlier. It's all very confusing, not only to a bewildered young mind but also to many older persons trying to clarify things.

Santa Claus, too, appears in amazing plases and in disconcerting vehicles. With his mind filled with visions of a chubby St. Nick, complete with rosy cheeks and a twinkle in his eye a boy can't be blamed for being skeptical when Santa is pointed out to him as that tall man who is wearing some sort of Hallowe'en mask. It's a bit disappointing, too, to dream of seeing a sled and prancing reindeers, and then to see Santa step into a car very similar to the one daddy drives.

I'm inclined to think, sometimes that even the youngest child has his tongue in his cheek about this Santa Claus business. If his parents want to believe in it, well and good. Parents have queer ideas, anyhow, and there are a lot of times he has to do things which don't make sense. He'll put on a good show of being enthusiastic to please them, but he'll be glad when he can sit down and enjoy his presents and act natural again.

THE COLONEL FINDS RED-TAPE APLENTY WHEN HE CASHES CHECK

SGT. TOM McDONALD

While re-arranging Colonel Swampwater's confidential 201 files this morning, I ran across a very interesting autobiographical document dated Dec. 19, 1943. It was written in the "old boy's" familiar pre-war longhand and profusely illustrated with scrawls and dodallys.

Being extremely curious and at the same time feeling rather guilty about reading the document, I called in Pvt. Sawgrass. My conscious would undoubtedly hurt so I surmised that Sawgrass would be agreeeable company at the guard house in event ol' T. P. caught us reading it.

After informing Sawgrass of the severity of the move and after having him inform me that he was willing to risk all to hear something of such secret nature, I began reading in a rather apprehensive voice and by chance we were not caught. The paper follows:

Headquarters
13th Infantry
Chairborne Division
Dec. 19, 1943 (The old boy wasn't up on the Army style of writing dates such as 19 December 1943.)

"To The Historians of the future who may wish to have interesting facts about my career, as they compile their many great records of my life:

"To wit: A. M., the 18th of Dec. 1943.

"Being of an extremely amiable nature, I found myself this pleasant forenoon walking very militarily toward the Officers' Club to cash a nice fat check to buy Christmas presents for Brigadier General Quagmire, Lieutenant General Brassitch, Senator Snookie, Representative Geehaw and my beloved wife.

"Insofar as appointments to Brigadier General are only obtainable from Washington, I felt that any act of generosity on my part at Christmas time would draw their attention to the fact I was not only a great soldier but also a humanitarian of the first water.

"So arriving at the aforementioned club with this inner spark glowing in my personality, I approached the club officer and flourished my check under his nose with indubitable benevolence.

"Good Morning, Captain! I, Colonel T. P. Swampwater would like to have a check cashed right now. I want the money to buy Christmas presents with."

"Why certainly, Colonel," he replied as he elevated his fountain pen from his left hind pocket and with a very itchy type of scribble, placed his official X in the lower left hand corner of the check.

"Thank you, Captain," I said. "Now gimme the money right quick like."

"I'm sorry, sir, but you will have to show me your AGO card, form 5-1, and your club membership card which I must scrutinize before I can make any obvious transaction."

"Why certainly," I replied.

"H-mm," the Captain mused as he read my identification. "I see, sir, that it is apparent that you haven't paid your club dues for last month amounting to three dollars and seventeen cents."

"Shades of Salome! Captain! That's all the money I have on my person," I snapped as I turned this amount over to him rather begrudgingly.

"Thank you, sir. Now will you write your serial number on the rear of this check?"

"I don't remember it," I replied hotly.

"It's on your dog tags, sir," the Captain answered. After groping frantically through my clothes and finally getting my dog tags untangled from my long underwear I discovered my—0-131313 and promptly wrote it down.

"Now can I have my money?" I asked as I ran my hand through my wavy hair.

"Just a minute, sir," the Captain continued. "Now just write your club number on the check to the right of the serial number. Your club number is No. 2 since you're the second oldest officer assigned here from point of service."

"Dammit, sir, I remember my club number!" I replied as I jotted it down too.

"Very good, sir. Now do you see that red-headed girl over there behind the cash register chewing gum?"

"I see the girl but I don't think the cash register is chewing gum."

"O. K., Colonel, O. K. Now you just take your check over there and she will cash it for you!" The Captain gasped concurrently mopping his forehead.

After putting on my ear muffs and running my fingers through my hair, I approached the objective indicated.

"Miss," said I, taking her in with a glance." I have here a fully indorsed check that I want cashed."

"Sorry, big boy, but you'll have to go to the main office. I'm just watching the cash register while the regular cashier is making a telephone call."

"Who is she calling?" I asked.

"That's none of your business," the girl replied rather anti-socially. So I went on to the main office after giving her my most reproachful look.

The main office cashier took a quick look at my haggard face and immediately surmised the nature of my mission.

"Hand me all of those identification papers Colonel," she said.

"Yes," I answered gratefully.

After checking and double checking and x-ing and filing and filing and paper clipping and reassorting, she finally picked up eleven dollars and a handful of change nd passed it to me.

"Madam," I yelped, "I have been gypped. There's only eleven dollars and ninety cents here. Where's my dime?"

"That's service charges, sir, for all the trouble you're causing us."

"Madame," I rejoined elevating myself to my full stature," I must assure you the pleasure has been all mine."

"Fortunes of war, Colonel," she grinned with a sly kind of smile spreading over her features.

After this I returned to my office to reorganize my perspective.

OC Spent 85 Days On Troop Transport

One of the big lessons of this war is that the men who come home from the front lines don't usually look like our story-book Galahads. They let the rest of us do the talking while they just remember. It is difficult to engage a battle-front veteran in an account of his experiences, but the time and tact necessary produce dividends.

Take Frank Barnes, of the 20th Company, Third Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School, for instance. He looks like the fellow you used to meet at a cocktail party, or at a football game. Quiet, neutendable — certainly not belligerent. But ask him where he has been for the past year and a half. Ask about the 85 days on a stinking transport, dodging submarines and wondering where in hell he was going. Instead of telling you how tough it was, he will remember the Army nurses who at- tempted to "boost the morale" of 3,000 Australia-bound dog faces. (And there wasn't much room for "boosting.")

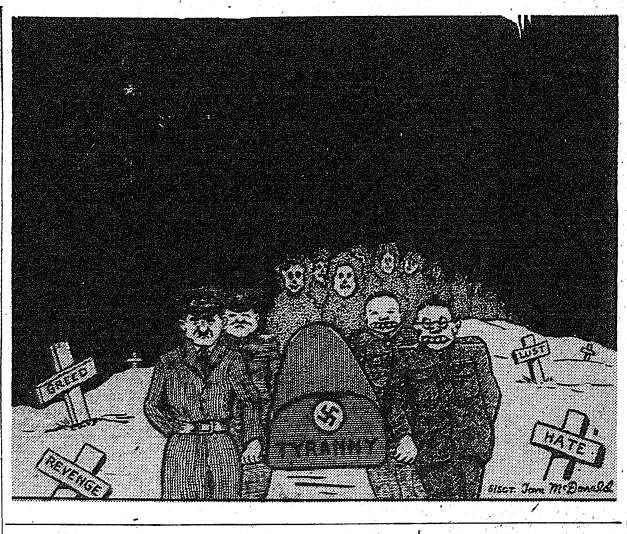
CITY OF PUP TENTS

Singapore had just fallen when they hit Australia, and thousands of the fighting Anzacs were herded into Jap prison camps. Port Darwin was being pounded from the air. It was a grateful populace that opened its heart to the American boys when they disembarked at Melbourne. A network of pup tents sprang up in the city parks, and curious, friendly auss- sie girls began asking questions. "Do you really have five cars? Are you ALL millionaires?" The answers were obvious, and Frank says they got away with it for quite a while! MGM and Paramount had done a good job!

Those were golden days, but they ended abruptly. For two days and nights, without pause, they loaded their transports, working feverishly against time. The "honeymoon" was over.

Frank recalls the day in November, 1942, when his regiment landed on "Green Hell." They disembarked early in the morning of November 12, and after listening to Marine scuttlebutt and stories calculated to serve as a baptism of fire, the regiment set to work unloading the cargo. In spite of a bit of artillery shelling and the welcoming committee of dive bombers and torpedo planes the Nips sent over from Bougainville, the transports were unloaded by late afternoon. The boys stood on shore that night and cheered like kids at a college football game while the Navy pasted a Jap task force. It was a beautiful sight!

FUN BEGINS



Combat patrols were quickly organized, and the fun began in earnest! American hate rises slowly, but when the boys saw an eight-man patrol ambushed, and watched the Japs jig a "bayonet death dance" over them, all hell broke loose. Every jeep in the outfit soon had a gleaming Nip skull for a radiator ornament.

Are the Japs SMART fighters? Frank cites an amusing incident. Some of our fragmentation grenades had fallen into enemy hands, and the sons-of-heaven were very quick to use them. There is something damnably unpleasant about seeing a grenade lobbed into your fox hole, and recognizing it as one of your own doesn't help matters a bit. There was some wild scrambling until the boys learned the Japs had neglected one little thing. They had forgotten to pull the safety pins!

UNITS BEAUTIFY

In keeping with the policy of the 1st Student Training Regiment to improve continually the appearance of its area, the 15th and 16 Companies are conducting an "Extensive Beautification Project" in the firebreak and around the Officer's Club between the two companies.

The program initiated by Lt. Col. Robert E. Thompson, Third Battalion Commander, and carried out by Lt. Wesley B. Frace of the 15th Co. and Capt. Richard W. Hutson of the 16th Co., was started a fortnight ago. Workmen are sodding, seeding and grading the area, as well as installing a sidewalk.

Hope and Langford Eskimo Drawing Card

It was the day after Christmas, 1940, when Lieutenant Norvin E. Lotspeich of Long Island, California, sailed with his outfit for Alaska. He returned to the states not long ago to attend the Officers Motor Course of the Infantry school as a member of the 16th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment.

"It was cold, all right, but I enjoyed the adventure," said the lieutenant, explaining how during their first winter in the territory, his men had to build their own huts. "When the temperature sometimes dropped to 60 below, it didn't help matters."

He described the far north of Alaska as bare of trees of any vegetation. If a man was unlucky enough to get separated from his buddies in a blizzard, his chances were pretty slim.

Each infantry company had its dogsleds, each man his skis and snowshoes, explained Lieutenant Lotspeich. Skiing was sometimes their only recreation.

"I can't say enough for the Red Cross," he declared. "It supplied books and films that came in handy on long winter nights.

"Once Bob Hope and Frances Langford visited our unit. That attraction brought in not only G. I.'s, but Eskimos from miles around."

How about fresh meat? "We were well fed," Lotspeich answered. "The QM would buy reindeer from the Eskimos, and in that cold it would last four of five months. I'll never forget that tasty venison."

Special Service Office A Grand Central Terminal

It was three weeks after the Special Service office of the 300th Infantry of the Infantry school had moved to its new location in 1st Bn. Hq. that a member of the 1st Bn. staff inquired of the Special Service officer's assistant the whereabouts of Special Service. He was in the same office with Special Service but still didn't recognize it.

That about sums up the position of the Special Service in the 300th Infantry and it's a pretty good picture of Special Service in general. There is plenty happening in this obscure branch of the regiment but most of it goes unnoticed.

If there's a question in anyone's mind as to how much work is accomplished in Special Service, a visit to the office will quickly supply the answer. When the staff is functioning at top speed, which is more the rule than the exception, the office takes on the appearance of Grand Central Terminal at the beginning of a holiday weekend.

THAT D— PHONE!

The phone rings on the average of once every two minutes and keeps the staff constantly on the hop. The Special Service officer sits behind his massive desk submerged in buck slips, special orders, requests for athletic and recreational equipment, detailed plans for the next Sunday's football game and arrangements for a company party. He once received a request for the following items: black cape, sheriff's badge, lady's dress and underwear, and handlebar moustache.

The request was urgent, the items had to be obtained in a few hours and the officer was left with the problem of picking them out of thin air. A Special Service officer has to be a born diplomat because in the course of his work he must ask for favors and it's a sad day for him when he calls a central agency on the post for equipment only to find his request refused becuse he failed to congratulate the officer-in-charge on his promotion the week previous.

And if he isn't already a teacher by profession he has to learn quickly because on him depends the success of the orientation and army institute programs in the regiment.

IS WHOLE STAFF

One assistant pounds away on a typewriter, hounded by the approaching deadline of the next edition of the Saber of which he is not only editor but at the same time the entire staff. He also has to keep in mind that the Infantry School Public Relations office expects to keep them supplied with a constant flow of publicity on everything 300th. And then there are the publicity releases on all promotions in the regiment, officers and enlisted, that must be prepared and sent to hometown newspapers. In his spare time, as recreational director, he has the additional responsibility of planning dances, clubs, choirs and all manner of group activities.

The other assistant, in the meanwhile, pores over the recreation fund accounts and readies the voluminous correspondence of Special Service on matters that rang from the regimental pro-corp machine to last minute arrangements for lodging and feeding the Saber football team in Birmingham. As athletic director, he supervises the purchasing of athletic equipment, makes up schedules for 300th sports from baseball to ping-pong, makes the arrangements for lining the football field and keeps a fatherly eye on the progress of inter-company sports.

Captain O'Leary Is A Master Magician

Lieutenant Leo O'Leary, instructor of the Basic Training group in the 1st Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School, doesn't have any trouble with the men pulling disappearing acts in the course of a period of instruction. He knows all the tricks.

It so happens that he is a professional magician. He turns $1 bills into $5 bills, makes cigarettes disappear, disengages thumbs from their joints, makes billiard balls multiply, and performs countless other tricks.

Included in his repertoire is one of Houdini's famed chain tricks. With hands completely chained, O'Leary deftly moves his nimble fingers until he is completely unbound.

Another feature trick is where he starts out with empty hands and gradually produces one billhard ball, two, three, etc.

"The hand," O'Leary adds, "is not quicker than the eye as is popularly misconceived." He then proceeded to prove his poin® by making a cigarette disappear from his hands with only a slight movement of his hands which could easily have been followed by the eyes.

"It's like playing the piano," he added. "You have to practice."

ODB Finishes Its First Year

The nationwide network of Field Investigating offices of the War Department Officer of Dependency Benefits has successfully completed its first year of activity, Brig. Gen. H. N. Gilbert, U.S.A., Director of the ODB, an activity of the Army Service Forces, announced today.

From coast to coast, in nine key cities, the Field Investigations Branch Offices — the watchdogs of the ODB — protect soldiers, soldiers' dependents, and the Government from fraud in connection with family benefits.

The majority of all cases investigated by the ODB offices concern family allowances provided under the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942, as amended.

"Many parents, brothers, and sisters do not seem to understand that they must be dependent upon the soldier for at least a substantial portion of their support or more, to be eligible for family allowances," General Gilbert pointed out. "Furthermore, they must remain in that status throughout the period during which they receive payments."

SERIOUS NEGLECT

During the year, over 7,500 soldiers or dependents failed to notify the ODB promptly when they became ineligible for a family allowance and thus made themselves liable for prosecution.

An investigation of over 125,000 family allowances also showed that many violations are the result of ignorance or misunderstanding of the law. Family allowances are being discontinued every day through ODB investigation.

Over 700 cases of suspected fraud were investigated during the year and prosecution prepared against those who willfully violated the provisions of the family allowance act. Military cases were referred to trial by military court while civilian cases were turned over to law enforcement agencies by the ODB Field Investigations Branch.

Among the prosecutions for fraud were a number of cases of women who had married several soldiers for the purpose of collecting payment checks from more than one family allowance account.

NO DOUBLE SHIFTS

"Women who believe they can marry a number of soldiers to receive multiple family allowance checks are due for a rude awakening," General Gilbert said. "They will be quickly apprehended and brought to justice."

Also prosecuted was the case of a civilian who charged a fee for assisting a soldier's dependent to apply for a family allowance. A fine of up to $1,000, or imprisonment for a maximum of two years, or both, are provided by law for taking such fees.

A number of soldiers were also tried by military court for having more than one wife. Many cases of bigamy were discovered by the ODB Field Investigations Branch when two or more family allowance applications for "awife," naming the same soldier, were received at the ODB.

From a personnel nucleus of five, the ODB Field Investigations Branch has grown to over a hundred. Officers assigned to this ODB Branch receive special courses in law, criminal evidence and methods of investigation, General Gilbert revealed. Among them are former FBI agents, a former chief of police, and a former county prosecutor besides many who were in the legal profession in civilian life.

This Branch of the ODB cooperates actively with Municipal, State, and Federal law enforcement agencies, the Director pointed out.

NINE OFFICERS

The nine offices of the FBI of the War Department Office of Dependency Benefits are located in New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Cincinnati, Chicago, Kansas City, Dallas, Denver, and San Francisco.

"The ODB is now in the midst of its greatest task—the conversion of most of its three million family allowance accounts to conform with the amendments to the Servicemen's Dependtnts Allowance Act of 1942," said General Gilbert. "At the same time, it is continuing to pay family allowances and allotments-of-pay without interruption. Our Field Investigations offices also will continue to guard against those chiselers who expect to obtain soldiers' benefits by perjury or fraud."

MAJOR WALKE

A former member of the 176th Infantry regiment, John Tabbe Walke has been promoted to the rank of major. Major Walke is serving with a transport command in India as flight surgeon. The major will be remembered as the Third Battalion surgeon.

High-Scoring Machines Pace TIS Basketball League

6th Reg't Eagles, 3rd STR Rifles Tie for Lead

Snipers Lose Brace Of Games By Heartbreaking One-Point Margin

BY SGT. CHUCK VOORHIS

If the 131st Intantry Snipers could just manage to cook up two extra points some place, they stand a good chance of chasing the jinx that has pursued them in their last two games in The Infantry School Basketball League. Last Sunday, they lost by one point to the 3rd STR Rifles and Tuesday night, they lost again by a solitary point, this time to the 4th Training Regiment Spartans.

The fact that the winning point for the Spartans was scored after the game was over didn't enhance the sour note in the Snipers' camp. A foul by Harry Momi, starting forward just as the game ended and the winning conversion by Johnny Hartman of the Spartans provided the gloom maker for the Snipers.

Add to this the fact the Snipers led in the first period and again at the end of the third, and the picture of ill-luck is complete.

There was some mighty fine basketball played during the first full week of the Infantry School league season. The 176th Spirits demonstrated they are a high scoring team as evidenced by their average of 54 points a game. Despite that scoring punch, they met one team which, for the day, was more prolific. The 6th Regiment Eagles beat them 60-56 and with two other league wins are tied for first place in the league standings with the Rifles. . . .

SPIRITS-SPARTANS IN 3RD

The Spirits are deadlocked in third place with two wins and one loss along with the Spartans, the surprise team of the circuit. After losing their first game, the Spartans changed personnel to a great extent and won their next two. Bill Briggs of Morningside College is the top scorer for the Spartans with 35 points to-date. . . .

Troy Ricks, leader of the Profs, is lenging the entire league in scoring with 60 points, 22 of which were allied against the Spirits. Remarkable in this 22 point total was the 12 fouls which he dumped in. . . .

Leo Mogus of the Spirits is right behind Ricks with 56 points. His play and that of Kirk Gebert, Spirit coach, has been the highlight of the 176th's performance to date. Gebert has a galaxy of good players as evidenced by the handy fashion in which all deported themselves against the Profs in winning 57 to 40. He used 12 players and all but three broke into the scoring. Big Jim Weir played his first league game and scored seven points against the Profs . . . Another steady player for the Profs has been George Petriska . . .

The Profs have been missing the services of Benny Zientara, regular guard and Johnny Ossi, a gifted shot-maker. Zientara is on emergency furlough and Ossi has been ill . . . A late addition to the squad, John Belk from Davidson, has been turning in a good job. . . .

Frank Shannon's Eagles have been sparked by Milt Ticco from Kentucky whose scoring record to date is 48 points. Bernie Mehen from Tennessee has also been playing top notch ball as has Danny Gabbianelli. Shannon himself has been the same master floorman he was last year. . . .

The Sabers, with three straight losses, have been unable to produce a sustained attack. Against the Eagles' second stringers in Tuesday's game, they played brilliantly in spots, outscoring them 16 to 6 in the third period. And then when the Eagle regular came back for the final period, they outscored them too by a point. However Shannon's crew had built up a 35 to 12 half time lead, too much of a margin for the Sabers to overcome . . . Lynn Grate has been a consistent player for the 300th. . . .

Held to that one point win over the Snipers, the Rifles unleashed a heavy scoring attack against the Leaders, piling up 60 points Tuesday night. Ewell Blackwell, the baseball pitcher has been a steady scorer but it wasn't until this last game that Ray Sundquist of Washington State really got hot. His 18 points were high for his team. Manager Carl Ott and Ed Moeller, have been standouts. . . .

Tiger-Tornado Game Sure Thing

Camp Forrest Grid Coach Gives Green Light To New Year's Tussle

"It's a sure thing," enthused E. E. Farley, director, USO Colored Army-Navy YMCA, when questioned further regarding the Victory Bowl football game between the Reception Center Tigers and Camp Forest (Tenn.) Tornadoes, New Year's Day. Director Farley said that the Camp Forest team's coach had already sent a wire confirming agreement to play the Tigers in Memorial Stadium, Columbus, January 1.

In the meantime, more than forty members of the Reception Center squad have got down to action to reshape themselves for the Tornadoes which wrought havoc on the grid field against four major foes this past season. The Tigers, on a comparative basis, have made a better record with their seven victories in as many games, but it is the concensus of opinions that the Tornadoes' triumphs were against stiffer opposition.

TO PLAY FOR CROWN

Proceeds from the Victory Bowl, over expense, will be used to help finance the establishment of a Troops-in-Transit USO Lounge for colored soldiers in Columbus. The game is being sponsored by the USO Colored Army-Navy YMCA, 841 Fifth avenue, and will decide the championship title of the southeast. Neither team was defeated or tied during the regular season.

Reception Center Tigers averaged 320 yards from line of scrimmage, and passes per game, Capt. Charles R. Loughland, head coach (Notre Dame) asserted, and made a punting average of forty yards per game.

High-point scorer on the Tiger eleven was Macon Williams, fullback, (Fla. A. & M.) with 62 points, seconded by Michael Cheatham, halfback (Ala. State) with 36 points. Other teammates registering points during the season included:

Leo Harrison, quarterback, (Fla. A. & M.), 18 points; Crews, halfback (Ala. State), 25 points; Franklin Banks, end (Bluefield), 6 points; Lawerence Gaines, end, (Ala. State), 7 points; Richard Baugh, (Ala. State), 6 points; John L. Pitts, (Talladega), end, 2 points; George Hollingsworth, halfback, (Morris Brown), 6 points; N. Smith, halfback, (Ala. State) 1 point.

PROBABLE LINE-UP

Probably lineup for the Victory Bowl classic is as follows: Baugh, end; Moulton, tackle; Martin, guard; Smith, center; Baugh, guard; Lacy, tackle; Gaines, end; Crews, Williams, Harrison and Smith, backfield.

Tickets, now on sale, can be purchased by soldiers, their wives or dates for 50 cents an admission. General admission, however, is $1.00 in advance, and $1.25 at the gate. Tickets for Columbus can be bought at the USO Colored Army-Navy YMCA, or Hugh Bentley's Sports Store, 1305 Broadway.

Officer who doesn't mind telling story on himself but wants name unused, tells one on self, speaking of cigars. He wrote to dozen or so friends, explaining scarcity of cigars, asking them to help get some for self and Christmas presents. Imagine his surprise, not to say chagrin, when friends rallied hurriedly to his support and in one day mailman brought in cigars worth thirty-five bucks—and all COD. Officer hurriedly wired all friends to forget his remarks about cigars, lest others may have had same idea.

1st STR Wolves' Coach Has 'Talent' Trouble

Lt. Nick Thermos, coach of the 1st S. T. R. Wolves, is a worried man. That's not unusual, most coaches are. But Thermos's worries are unusual in that he has too much talent. The 1st S. T. R. started late but sure is making up for lost time.

After getting a starting combination and some capable replacements lined up, Thermos had his plans upset by the appearance at practice of Sgt. Bill Kovacich, 6'4" Temple Univ. center. Then came Tech. 5 "Chuck" Wagner, 6'4", another good center. Then came Tech. 5 Frankie Rose, All-State forward at Kentucky, and 6'2" Pvt. Phil Johnson of the Nashville All-Stars. Now, according to Thermos, the next starting line-up is anybody's guess.

The Wolves are working out nightly and competition for positions is keen. Lt. Mickey Panovich has cinched a forward spot by his consistently flashy performance. Last year's UCLAN flash has sparked each practice session. Tech 5 Bill Perry and his southpaw accuracy has teamed him effectively with Panovich. Sgt. Bill Kovacich's ball-handling has been superb. Tech 4 Fred Thomas, St. Sgt. Royal James, Tech. 5 Jim Combozou, and Cpl. Jim Talley are arguing about the job of guard. And Coach Thermos is worried. They all look good, very good.

Whatever decision he makes, you may be sure that it will be a source of worry to Lawson Field next Monday night. The Wolves are out to win. And at each practice session the competition for starting positions increases. With that spirit, the Wolves will be a hard team to beat!

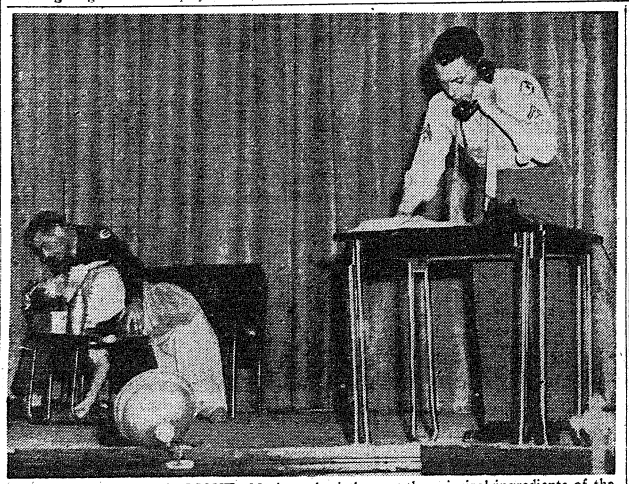
17th Tank Bn. Quint Smacks CCB Hq. 34-18

The 17th Tank Bn. quintet, in its first division tourney start since returning from the field, romped easily over an outmanned CCB Hq. Co. five Monday night at Shepard Hall, 34-18.



Using but five men the entire time, the Hq. squad was a weary, outclassed gang at the final whistle. Four men sparked the Tanker offensive. Higgenbothom counting five times from the floor for ten points and the evening's scoring honors. Dunlap was close behind with eight points, Roberts and Bayus were good for six each.

For the losers D'Angelo was the big gun in a weak battery. He rippled the nets for eight points and kept the affair looking somewhat like a ball game and not a complete rout. Lloyd contributed six markers and played bang-up ball for the men from headquarters.

The teams left the court at half time with only five points separating them but the third period saw the Tankers get hot. Roberts, Dunlap and Higgenbothom tossed 'em up from all angles and really kept those nets dancing. They rang up sixteen points in eight minutes.

"HOLIDAYTIME" HIGHLIGHT—Music and mirth were the principal ingredients of the musical-revue presented by the Post Special Service Office last week at various theatres and rec-halls at Fort Benning. Above comedy sketch, entitled, "A Scene Is Created" was written especially for "Holiday-time" by Corp. E. Barry Sturmer who produced the show. Deep in the throes of romance are Bette Putnam, Red Cross Worker at Station Hospital No. 1, and Sgt. Bill Cope of the 176th Infantry. On the phone, discussing the propriety of the situation is Corp. Sturmer.—(Photo by Ryder.)

Spirits' Irish 8 Touchball Champs

Championship honors in the 176th Infantry's Touch Football League were garnered by Company I, the 'Irish Eight' who trimmed the Cannon Company, 20 to 6, in the title game.

The losers scored early when Ike Petrello's punt was blocked and recovered on Company I's five yard line. Cannon Company scored on two plays.

After the kick-off, I company scored on four plays, all passes. Another pass netted the extra point and the winners led 7 to 6. An intercepted pass paved the way for another I company marker and the conversion was made, making the score 14 to 6.

In the final period, Verelle connected for three straight passes for the final score.

Col. Hill Renamed To Alabama State Boxing Commission

Col. John Hill, commanding officer of The Infantry School's Third Student Training Regiment, has been reappointed to the Alabama Boxing and Wrestling Commission by Gov. Chauncey Sparks of that state. Colonel Hill, who in civilian life resides and practices law in Birmingham, has served on the commission through two state administrations.

The colonel's reappointment was hailed by sports writers in Birmingham as an outstanding move toward the continuance of harmony and prosperity in the state's cauliflower and grunt industry. They point out that Colonel Hill contributed greatly some years backs to the ironing out of disputes in the athletic households of the American Legion.

An Army Wife Shops In Columbus

By Phyllis

It seems to me that the J. A. KIRVEN COMPANY, with its smartly redecorated building and its articles of quality is indeed a shopper's haven for Columbus and Fort Benning residents. Proof of this is the sight of many women AND men exclaiming excitedly about the gift suggestions displayed throughout the store. It is still not too late at Kirven's to find a perfect Christmas gift. Here are a few which are especially notable. I'll tell you about them, after that it's all up to you. Fine linen or swiss material hankies for men and women. Cultured pearls with 14 carat gold clasps for a truly elegant present. Genuine Cordo handbags for a "special" someone. Boudoir chairs to add a bright touch to a corner that needs it. Bedroom suites of maple of mahogany for a really super-duper Christmas. Tumble twist rugs in exciting shades. My space really limits me. I suggest you visit Kirven's and see all this wonderful merchandise and more, too.

—V—

Last week I mentioned the main articles of clothing necessary for a well dressed appearance at the many exciting affairs you'll be attending during the holiday season. Right now I'd like to tell you about the unusual evening accessories at KAYSER - LILIENTHAL'S, INC., perfect for adding the final glamorous touch to your costume. Perfect for carrying the ever-necessary articles of makeup are the lame', satin, or sequin covered evening bags in pouch, drawstring or envelope styles. A few brocade evening bags boast unusual color mixtures. Sparkling jeweled clips or earrings add a touch of color or glitter, as the case may be, to your evening ensemble. For a most important occasion, you'll no doubt realize the fashion value of a pair of long black or white gloves. Several of these gloves are unusually smart with their rhinestone decorations. Shopping at Kayser-Lilienthal's for evening wear of every type will find you looking your most fashionable self from tip to toe.

—V—

Now that all the Christmas rush is just about past and activities will soon settle back to normal, why not do something you've been thinking a great deal about, but have simply not got around to doing? Yes, I do mean having your photograph taken at the AIME DUPONT STUDIOS. As a gift or remembrance after holiday giving has ended, a lifelike portrait will carry an element of surprise and will without a doubt be cherished by loved ones. The Dupont Studios ask enough time to assure you the most perfect proofs you've seen yet; so don't expect an overnight rush job. You'll be given the suggestions of their experienced personnel as to what type "finish" will be best for your pictures. When you do receive your final photographic portraits, you'll be yet another of the hundreds of completely delighted persons dealing with the Aime Dupont Studios.

—V—

Columbus' foremost family department store, namely the MONTGOMERY WARD COMPANY has, even at this late date, numerous gift suggestions for all members of the family. Always well received at Christmas are phonographic records. The assortment of recent recordings displayed here will satisfy any and all musical tastes. Cozy housecoats for keeping warm these chilly mornings, delight all eyes with their bright and flower-like shades. Equally well made and colorful are brunch coats and housedresses. Amusing toys and attractive clothing of every type will help make a cheery celebration for young boys and girls. Not glamorous, but certainly well liked, are the pyrex baking dishes and other glassware displayed in the household furnishings section of this store. If you still have shopping to do for the holidays, be wise and do it at Montgomery Ward's.

—V—

The answer to the man prayers of last minute shoppers this Christmas is right at the MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY. This most reputable shop not only has a large and unusual assortment of quality footwear for men, women and children, but also other thoughtful gift suggestions. Both real and simulated leather billfolds in black or brown tones are useful gifts which will be truly appreciated. Equally useful are the holiday handbags of sturdy leathers or smart fabrics. These tailored or dressy style bags are both durable and beautiful. Mesh, rayon or lisle hosiery for women are displayed at this shop in a variety of weights and shades. Hosiery for men features holeproof luster lisles and rayons, another practical gift thought. Last minute shoppers, take heed and shop at Miller-Taylor's.

Film Stars Easy To See These Days

Things have come to such a pass in Hollywood that even the most exclusive of the stars are being forced into personal contact with a public that sees them only at a price. War conditions have swept away the last barriers.

No longer do secretaries, chauffeurs, butlers or maids do the shopping and errands for the movie great. They do their own these days, due to domestic help shortages. Epicures now are seen in restaurants, and the tired favorites who used to get away from it all by going to distant and exclusive resorts, go to the neighborhood movies, even stand in line, "Gas rationing did this.

Picture Of The Week!!!

WE'RE INDEBTED to Major Macfarlan of the ASTP for this entry in our series of "Why Did the Photographer Do It?" or "Why Public Relations Officers Go Nuts." Just imagine a regiment having a print and your photographer comes back with something like this. Don't the soldiers in this honey look military? What backs if only you could see them. And that outhouse or whatever it is! Aren't you readers charmed by its rustic simplicity? Yes, sir, this picture really belongs to our throwaway collection. Its only virtue is that it's out of focus. If it weren't, you could see it better but who would want to?

Santa Claus Visits 7th AD

Santa Claus, at the special request of Maj. Gen. Lindsay McDonald Silvester, made a pre-Christmas trip in a tank to Fort Benning's Sand Hill Sunday to pass out presents to enlisted men's children in the "Lucky 7th" Armored division.

Scene of the division commander's kiddy Christmas party was the newly-finished Unit club at the corner of Scott and Fourth avenues. In keeping with wartime policy the hall was tastefully but conservatively decorated with pine boughs and sprigs which effected a saving of critical materials.

Santa was greeted upon his arrival at the club by throngs of kiddies running pell-mell out to meet him as he charged up to the door in an M-5 (light) tank amid clouds of dust, jingle-bells, and general excitement.

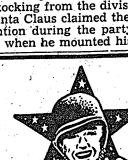
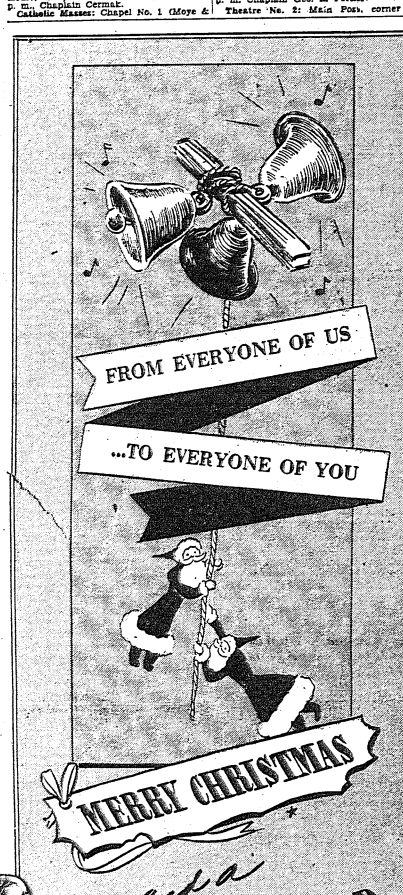
Although it was a week early, yesterday was really Christmas for Gen. Silvester as well as the children of his men, after a month's training in the field. The spirit of the thing caught everyone up in a gay holiday embrace.



The general arrived early at the party personally to greet the small sons and daughters of his men. He stayed to see that every child there received a present and a well-filled stocking from the division.

Santa Claus claimed the kiddies' attention during the party, especially when he mounted his glittering snow-white throne to distribute a mountain of presents at the end of the hall.



May happiness be yours at Christmastime, and may the New Year bring you much joy.

Ordnance Man Would Win War All By Himself

Out at the Post Ordnance Shop, Sand Hill Area at Fort Benning, is a fighting Irishman who seems determined to win the war all by himself.

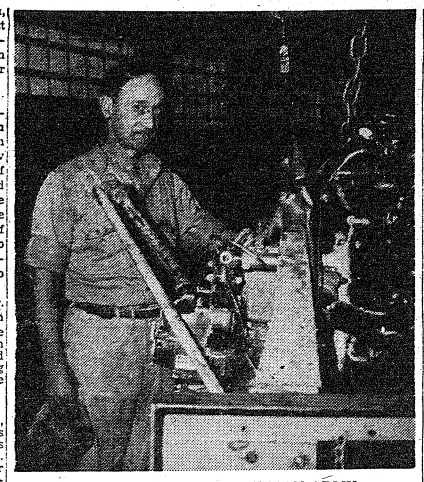
He is Stephen Hannan, Jr., from Houston street, New York City. Veteran of the last war and father of two sons fighting this one, Mr. Hannan isn't satisfied because his job as a mechanic, doing tank maintenance, is rated as essential to winning the war. He is establishing some kind of record as a blood donor, buys War Bonds at a furious pace, and spends his spare time trying to get a release from his job so he can get into the fighting side of the war.

Mr. Hannan has lost track of just how much blood he has given for emergency transfusions and to the Red Cross for plasma, but he has kept track of the last 13 pints. His 14th known donation will be made this week when the Red Cross Mobile Blood Donor Unit returns to Fort Benning.

GIVES BLOOD

He first gave a blood transfusion to his wife in 1939, when she was seriously ill following an operation. When he saw how easy and painless the process of giving blood was, he volunteered whenever he heard of someone who needed a transfusion. He gave blood to several members of his family, to friends, and to strangers, refusing pay for his donations and never bothering to count the number.

In the past seven months, Mr. Hannan has bought $2,600 worth of War Bonds, in addition to the two bonds he has deducted from his pay check every month. And some time this week he is going to buy another $500 bond to give to his grandchild.



TWO SONS IN SERVICE

One of his sons is in the Army, and when last heard from was fighting in Sicily. The other is in the Navy, stationed in Alaska.

Mr. Hannan was in the Air Corps, attached to the 42nd Division, in the last war. He spent 23 months overseas, flying and doing mechanical work. In spite of repeated refusals from his superiors—who rate him as "a darn good mechanic"—he hasn't given up hope that he will get a release from his civilian job at Fort Benning to get back into the Army.

Mr. Hannan who worked as a mechanic between wars, has been employed at the Sand Hill shop for about a year and a half. He and his wife live in Baker Village.

Twenty-six of the 48 states have names of Indian origin.

Army Service Commands Make Changes

Headquarters of each of the Army's Service Commands by December 31, 1943, will conform as closely as practicable to the organization of Headquarters, Army Service Forces, the War Department announced today.

The realignment is based on Service Command wartime functions. Service Commands are the field agencies of the Army Service Forces for performing Army administrative, training, supply, hospitalization, sanitation, housing, transportation, real estate, repairs and utilities functions. Posts, camps, and stations under the command of Service Commanders will be realigned similarly.

Organizational units, including the technical services, will be set up at each Service Command headquarters with functions corresponding to those assigned to such units in ASF headquarters. Each Service Command headquarters will have three components, the Office of the Service Commander, one group consisting of the staff divisions and another comprising the technical services.

The Office of the Service Commander is the focal point for the operational direction of the entire Service Command. The offices of the air liaison officer, the Service Command director of the Women's Army Corps, the control division, the Service Command inspector general, the public relations office and the labor branch are its integral parts.

There are 18 staff divisions under the new organization. Those operating under the director of personnel are the military personnel, civilian personnel, special services, officer procurement, morale services and service command chaplain, while those under command of the director of military training are the Army specialized training and the military training divisions. The director of supply commands the following divisions: Stock control, maintenance, storage, purchases, operations and salvage and redistribution. Other staff divisions are service command adjutant general, service command judge advocate, fiscal director, and security and intelligence division.

The technical services staff consists of the Service Command quartermaster, ordnance officer, engineer, chemical warfare officer, signal officer, surgeon, and transportation officer.

Post Chapel Plans Communion Service On Christmas Eve

Protestant communion services for Christmas Eve will begin at 11:45 at the Post Chapel, under the direction of Col. Frank M. Thompson, post chaplain.

The Post Choir will present two numbers as a part of the service, "Break Forth, O Beauteous Heavenly Light", (Bach), and "There Were Shepherds" (Vincent). A short meditation will be given by the chaplain. The communion will be in direct charge of Major Alfred L. Pollock, assistant post chaplain, and Chaplain Fredrick W. Helfer, of the First Student Training Regiment.

The chaplain extends an invitation to all people in Fort Benning to attend this service, which is an annual feature of the Christmas season.

Japs Cannot Understand Yank Kindness

Take it from OC Richard K. Hayashi of the 19th Company, Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry school—the Japs are a tough, tricky enemy.

Candidate Hayashi, Japanese-American soldier who has just returned from service in the Southwest Pacific combat areas as an interpreter, says that the "Japs fight hard because they are just as scared of dying as anybody else. The 'dying gloriously in battle for the Emperor' is a lot of bunk."

Hayashi questioned Jap prisoners taken by doughboys in the South Pacific, and he says that a surprising number of the Japs actually believed that they would be killed by the Americans.

"They would be stubborn at first and rattle off stock answers to our questions. But they usually trapped themselves because the Americans applied the one thing they couldn't understand — kindness.

CRIES LIKE BABE

"One day I saw a wounded American soldier offer a wounded Japanese prisoner a drink from his canteen. It was all the water the American had—and the Jap knew that he needed it badly. The Jap was so overcome that he sat down and cried like a baby. It wasn't long before all the Japanese prisoners in this area heard about it—and from then, on they gave us any information we wanted."

"They simply couldn't understand American kindness. They either expected to be shot or to be treated like coolies."

Hayashi, born in Stockton, California, is proud of his appointment to Officer Candidate school because he sees it as a recognition of the loyal service of many Japanese-Americans to this country.

PATIENT ENEMY

"Most of the Jap prisoners were young—18 to 24 years. And they are extremely patient soldiers. They will follow an American patrol all day—listening to the soldiers, talk, learning their accent.

"Then toward evening, in perfect mimicry of one of the Americans, they'll yell, 'Hey, Joe, come over here a minute.' And when Joe comes, think it's one of his buddies—well, that's the end of Joe."

Hayashi has been in the Army 2 1-2 years, serving for awhile with the famous Third Division, Seventh Infantry—the unit founded by Andrew Jackson after the battle of New Orleans.

Soldiers Learn New Trades With Sabers

The 300th Infantry of the Infantry School isn't just a one-sided outfit. Unlike man other organizations, it does not thrive on loyalty of its men alone, and pay nothing back. It has been more of a "cooperative" enterprise since its beginning.

In other words, the 300th has given specialized training to hundreds of men who, when they return to civilian life, will be able to practice new trades and new professions, and be better citizens.

Hundreds of Sabers have gone to dozens of schools, ranging from elementary grade schools where some learned to read and write English, to Radio School, where others studied the intricate mechanisms of Signal Corps Sets which "get the message through."

When the regiment was first activated, men specialized in many lines came over on cadre, but there were not nearly enough to fill the tables of organizations. That meant that the incoming soldiers had to be schooled in all of the various activitis required for the maintenance of an infantry regiment.

BIG JOB

This was a tremendous task, for while the Signal Corps is engaged primarily in communication, the Ordnance in repair, the Quartermaster in supply, the infantry regiment is all these and more. That meant that there were also cooks to be taught, medics to learn their delicate tasks, mechanics to learn the repairing of vehicles and so on.

Despite the humorous barbs projected at the system, the Army DOES try to put the right men in the right jobs. It would be ridiculous to think otherwise, for in putting men in jobs in which they are not qualified, the Army would be injuring itself.

Thus meticulous care was taken in selecting men for their jobs—or the jobs they were to learn. The first step of course was to find men already experienced in the "essential" needs of the regiment. This was done by checking the classification cards.

BACK TO KITCHEN

Men who had been mechanics found themselves in the Motor Pool. Those who had been cooks returned to their kitchens—UNLESS and that is the word that explains the lack of understanding by most people of the system, unless these men showed greater APTITUDE in some other line.

Still, there weren't enough men with specialized experience to fill all the jobs and many had to be sent to school. The selections were made on the basis of tests given to show the aptitude of the men along certain lines.

Those with high mechanical aptitude scores went to the Motor Maintenance course at Main Post, and those with good radio aptitude scores spent several months at the Enlisted Radio Operators Course learning code, radio sets, and procedure.

Dozens of men went to Bakers and Cooks School; some went to our own Regimental Intelligence course; every company was represented at the Gas School, at Armorer Artificers' School, at Map Reading School. Every man in the outfit received schooling in weapons, sanitation, and dozens of other subjects.

Some will be able to make profitable use of the things they have been taught when they return to civilian life. Others will have enjoyable hobbies because of some training they received. All will be better, more enlightened citizens, because of the general training they have received.

3rd STR Establishes Agricultural College

The instruction methods of The Infantry School, which are regarded as having no superior for efficiency in any establishment of learning in the world, are to be utilized by the Third Student Training Regiment of the Infantry School in the preparation of a large section of its personnel for an improved status in their post-war, civilian life.

Employing facilities already at its disposal, the regiment in the very near future will have in operation an "agricultural college," to which the colored personnel of the Service Battalion are invited to submit applications. Site of the "college" will be the regiment's own 30-acre farm, located in the Blackhawk Road area.

Students will be selected from among the men who already have demonstrated an aptitude for and an acquaintance with agriculture either through previous instruction in agricultural schools or through experience in the actual practice of farming. The applicants also must convincingly show they are determined to improve themselves in this line in order to profit after the war.

Capt. Jack D. West, commanding officer of Company C of the Service Battalion, has been placed in charge of the project by Col. John D. Hill, regimental commander. Instructors will be officers in the regiment who either possess agricultural degrees from recognized colleges and universities or who were successful farmers before entering the Army.

Instruction of the men will be thorough and will follow the familiar Infantry School pattern of "preparation, demonstration and application," etc. The program, moreover, will embrace virtually every phase of farming — soil treatment, planting, crop rotation and animal husbandry.

Classes will be conducted along a schedule which will not interfere with the students' assigned duties and military training. Emphasis has been placed, however, on the fact that the field work will not constitute a fatigue detail.

As presently outlined, the instruction will cover a course extending to the final processing, distribution and shipment of agricultural products. Crops harvested during the instruction period will be used to supplement the rations not only of the Service Battalion but of Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the Third Student Training Regiment, which is lending many of the farming implements for the course.

TRACTOR PURCHASED

A "baby" garden tractor has been purchased to expedite the planting of seasonal crops indigenous to the area and cooperation has been solicited from leading agricultural colleges in the Southeast. Agricultural textbooks, pamphlets and studies submitted by these institutions will be preserved in a reference library to be maintained in Service Battalion Headquarters.

The regiment's farm was acquired last June from the now inactivated Second Student Training Regiment, which had operated it for two years. Under supervision of Service Battalion officers, the farm last summer produced thousands of bushels of roasting ears, green vegetables, canteloupes and watermelons for consumption within the regiment.

THE 7TH ARMORED TANKBUSTERS

Tankbusters to Play At USO Yule Dance

It'll be the lilting rhythms of Charley Dee and his 7th Armored division "Tankbusters" for Christmas night dancing when the 11th Street USO holds open house for throngs of Fort Benning soldiers in downtown Columbus.

Formerly known as the 31st Armored Regiment orchestra, smiling, sax-playing Charley Dee and his 14 music makers, will mark this month a year and a half of entertaining GI buddies all over the country.

The orchestra was formed just a few months after the division's activation back in Camp Polk, La., and got off to a good start by playing for shows, dances, and broadcasts in camp and town.

BAND PLAYED ON

When the division took to the desert for a grueling half-year of maneuvers the band played on, between tactical periods. It was here that "The Tankbusters" played an important part in division morale by providing musical background for the performances of a host of Hollywood stars who came to the 7th's lonely desert base camp to entertain.

Highlight of the band's history though, came when it was "booked" into the Hollywood Canteen to play with screen stars Dennis Morgan, Belita, and Ann Sheridan.

Since coming to Ft. Benning the "Tankbusters" have filled engagements all over the post and in downtown USO clubs. They have found time to broadcast too while training.

Latest addition to the aggregation is sweet Sue Lauderdale of nearby Phenix City, Alabama, girl vocalist, whose ballad interpretation has heightened the band's popularity.

BAND PERSONNEL

Band personnel, composed of former "side men" with popular civilian bands includes the following enlisted men:

S. Sgt. Charles De Pasquale, leader and vocalist; saxophonists: Cpls. John Sabatino, William Cicetti, John Oriano, Gene Sprando and Pfc. Irving Rodisky;

Brass section, Sgts. Anthony Del Casino and Vernon, Cpl. Paul Okstein and Pfc. Dave Bastien.

1st STR Men Learn 3 R's

For the first time in their lives, a dozen members of the 4th Battalion, 1st Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School, are going to school. Good soldiers all, none of them ever before had a chance to learn their "three r's."

They're getting that chance now because Lieutenant Colonel William B. Zeller, Commanding Officer of the 4th Battalion, learned that some men of his command couldn't sign their names to the payroll. Assisted by Major William J. Lawe, his executive officer, the colonel speedily set about to remedy the situation.

He decided that the battalion would conduct its own classes for those of its personnel who had not had the opportunity of a formal education. In charge, Colonel Zeller placed Lieutenant Millard Cross, of the 20th Company, who, as a civilian, had taught school in Scott County, Tennessee.

The men sent to class belong to the organization's assigned cadre which cares for the hundreds of enlisted motor and communication students quartered there.

CRACKER-JACK SOLDIERS

In service from one to two years, all 12 are capable all-around soldiers. And some of them are skilled experts, able to repair plumbing and other equipment in the battalion's messhalls. Recently, they painted the entire interior of the outfit's home in a Main Post cuartel.

One hour each morning, five days a week, the 12 men studied under Lieutenant Cross' guidance. Eager to learn, they advanced rapidly.

So rapidly, in fact, that the following month, a doubting finance clerk sent back a 1st S.T.R. payroll. He couldn't believe his eyes when he saw signatures of three of the students in place of the usual X's. Colonel Zeller convinced the finance office that the newly-learned signatures were genuine.

NOW READ NEWS

Since the program got under way on October 15, the men have learned to read the many newspapers and magazines in their orderly rooms. Their progress will pass a milestone next week when each of them pens a Christmas letter, the first he has ever written, to his folks at home.

Since some of the men are now taking basic training in addition to their regular battalion tasks of maintenance and administration, "school" had to be shortened to 30 minutes a day. But the students' enthusiasm carries their education right on.

Lieutenant Cross has added elementary arithmetic to his boys' curriculum. They always had been able to do simple sums by rule of thumb. Now they can work wonders with figures.

Although no definite duration has been set for the course, Colonel Zeller pointed out, it will continue until each trainee has the well-rounded fundamental education he was not fortunate enough to receive before he joined the Army.

A broken-down farm tractor contains enough metal to make 38 .30-caliber machine guns.

Water is the world's most precious liquid, since every form of life is dependent upon it.

Colonel Hunt Is Pistol-Packin Papa

Colonel H. J. Hunt, Jr., commanding officer of the 300th Infantry of the Infantry school, has proved himself to be the "Pistol Packin' Prexy" of the regiment.

Going on the Simpson Pistol Range "cold," without practice marksmanship, Col. Hunt eased off a neat 93 points out of a possible 100.

He chalked up the highest score on the range for the day. Those anti-tankmen and officers armed with the pistol were also firming.

Major White Of 1st STR Has Colorful Career

Now approaching the halfway mark in its three months period at The Infantry School, the 16th Company of the 1st Student Training Regiment, lifts its nose from the grindstone long enough to take stock of its members, and finds many with interesting and varied backgrounds of service all over the world. Experience in almost every theatre of operation serves these officers in good stead as they now check their knowledge against the latest approved methods rendered by The Infantry School.

Major William G. White of California is a case in point. Though now a member of the 409th Infantry, Camp Howie, Texas, seven years of his service has been spent as an enlisted man in the United States Marine Corps. Receiving his boot training at San Diego, he saw service in Nicaragua in 1931, in the 4th Regiment in Shanghai in 1932, the 6th Regiment, Fleet Marine Force in San Diego, and abroad the USS West Virginia.

Among Major White's campaign ribbons are the Yangtze Campaign, the 2nd Nicaraguan Campaign, and the Marine Corps Expeditionary ribbon. He is especially proud of having fired on the Marine Corps Rifle Team at Bremerton, Washington, for three years, and holding two legs on the coveted Distinguished Rifleman rating.

1st STR Unit Wins Gold Ribbon

From the hands of Lieutenant Colonel William B. Zeller, 4th Battalion commander, an Enlisted Motor class in the 19th Company of The Infantry School's 1st Student Training Regiment recently received the Gold Ribbon, highest honor for march discipline and its fourth award in as many weeks. Previously, the class had won the Red, White, and Blue ribbons.

Daily, student companies on their way to and from class parade before the battalion's reviewing officers. At the Monday morning formation, the present ribbons to the best turned-out classes. Few groups attain the distinction, as did the 19th Company "mechs," of pinning the gold streamer to their guidons.

Pvt. Sells Car, Buys War Bond

When a man bites a dog, it may be news, but when a private purchases a $1,0000 band, it should make headlines.

Thus the headline maker this week is Pvt. Ray E. Lindblad of Headquarters Company 300th Infantry of the Infantry school who shelled out one grand for an interest in the United States.

Pvt. Lindblad, a driver for the Communications Plattoon, sold his car while home on furlough and sank every cent of the dough for the bond.

Still single, he is completing one year of service with the 300th Infantry this month.

Italian POW's Publish Paper

Italian prisoners of war at Fort Benning are now publishing a weekly mimeographer newspaper in their nativee tongue. The paper has been entitled "Il Nostro Giornale" (Our Newspaper) and over the mast-head carries the motto "I am in search of liberty which is so precious."

The paper has a section devoted to internment camp news, and publishes short stories, poetry, sports and recreational news. Various sketches illustrate the stories.

In the front page editorial of Volume 1, Number 1, entitled "The Scope" the editors discuss the purpose of the paper.

THOUGHTS FLY HOME

"Recreational facilities are not lacking; the hours pass swiftly but our thoughts and hearts constantly take flight into the distance, beyond all the barriers erected by man and nature, to rejoin our dear ones, to take us home again. The day of repatriation will come and then we shall have to relate all of the things we are experiencing, all of the sorrow which from time to time burns in our hearts like red-hot pincers, all of the flashes of hope which comfort us from time to time, that is a part of the patrimony of the spirit and the Giornale will not be occupied with it.

"But here we are meeting new people and new customs; we are engaging in sports, musical, theatrical, and ecclestacal activities; we have at our disposal a library, two recreational halls, an art salon; all of this indeed merits being locked up in our memory; however the material is so broad in its scope that part of it could be forgotten. So it is that a Giornale is born to record in detail our life of every day and to contribute with the greatest efficacy possible to the development of our minds.

"The day on which we begin our journey homeward, we shall take with us the collection of the Giornale of Fort Benning and once more having set foot on the soil of our beloved Italy, we shall show it to our loved ones and to our dearest friends that they may be cognizant through the pages which we propose to fill and which we shall fill with the help of our collective will, faith, and knowledge —of the life we have led, and of the seriousness and dignity which have inspired the behavior of each of us during our absence from our country."

Presbyterian Service

The First Presbyterian Church, Columbus, Ga., will hold a Communion Service on Christmas Eve at 7:30 EWT. A Choral group from the ASTP will render special music. Chaplain Frank M. Thompson, Chief of the Chaplains Branch, Fort Benning, will be the speaker. All service men who are in the city at that hour are cordially invited to attend.

PING PONG

A ping-pong tournament is in progress within the 176th Infantry regiment, with the winning singles and doubles champions to receive a twenty-five dollar War Bond.

Japan has a population of 73,000,000.

Coleman Is Authority On All Military Courtesy

Master Sergeant Howard E. Coleman, personnel sergeant major of Headquarters Detachment, Section 1, can really "throw the book" at those who want to know something about military courtesy and discipline, and what's more, he can throw more than one book while he's at it.

The sergeant, a native of Clinton, Ind., who always has been interested in army customs and regulations, can even quote line and verse from the articles of war published in the book of "U. S. Infantry and Rifle Tactics," published by the war department in May, 1861—a good which Sergeant Coleman personally owns and cherishes as a collector of old military books and manuals.

He knows that according to the Articles of War in his "collectors item," a soldier could receive up to 50 lashes as punishment, that the use of a "profane oath or execration" was a fineable offense, and that it didn't pay to do "violence to any person who brings provisions or other necessaries to the camp, garrison or quarters . . . upon pain of death or such other punishment as a court-martial shall direct."

This strict punishment for those officers or soldiers who would molest or do violence to persons bringing "provisions or other necessaries" was provided for under Article 51 of the Articles of War published in the 82-year-old book.

Neither was the spiritual side of soldiers serving in the Army during the War Between the States neglected by the Articles of War, for Article 2 said, "It is earnestly recommended to all officers and soldiers diligently to attend divine services," and went on to say that if officers behaved indecently or irreverently at any place of divine worship, they should be brought before a general court-martial and there publicly and severely reprimanded. Non-coms or soldiers thus offending should forfeit one-sixth of a dollar on his first offense, while on the second offense he should be fined a like sum and confined 24 hours. Such money so forfeited, according to the Article of War, should be applied to the use of sick soldiers in the company or troop.

HARD ON OFFICERS

Reproachful or provoking speeches and gestures to another by an officer or soldier was severely frowned upon by Article 24, which provided for the arrest of an officer, and the confinement and apology to the offended party by a soldier so offending.

Duelling also was a subject of much concern and severe punishment in those days, with severe penalties—including cashiering of officers or corporeal punishment of soldiers—for sending or accepting a challenge or fighting a duel. All seconds, promoters, or carriers of challenges for duels also were deemed principals and were to be punished accordingly. Several articles of war was concerned with this subject in those days, in contrast to the one article at the present time.

According to Articles 42 and 43, "no officer or soldier shall lie out of his quarters, garrison or camp without leave of his superior officer," and every non commissioned officer and soldier had to "retire to his quarters or tent at the beating of retreat," or suffer punishment.

PENALTIES CHANGED

While many of the officers mentioned still properly remain in present Articles of War, penalties and emphasis on many of them have been changed, and the wording of many of the articles have been changed accordingly.

The book "U. S. Infantry Tactics," authorized by Simon Cameron, then Secretary of War, and published on May 1, 1861, states that the system of Infantry Tactics used were "based upon the latest improvements in French military experience, and adapted to the peculiar wants of our service."

Infantry at that time was divided into Heavy Infantry—also called Infantry of the Line—and Light Infantry. According to Sergeant Coleman's boog, the "difference between Heavy and Light Infantry is two-fold: 1st, In their weapons and equipment, the former being armed with the musket, and the latter with the rifle, when it may be had. 2nd, In order of battle, Heavy Infantry being in compact orders, while the Light Infantry is dispersed or deployed as skirmishers, the men being separated and more independent in delivering their fire as sharpshooters."

SGTS' RATINGS

Sergeants' ratings in those days were in five grades, and were called first sergeant, second sergeant, third sergeant, fourth sergeant and fifth sergeant. All were above the rank of corporal, and with the exception of the first sergeant who covered the captain in formations, the second through fifth sergeants held various positions with the platoons.

Many Tactics and Articles of War have changed and improved with the times since the 1861 book Sergeant Coleman owns was published, but the sergeant finds that the historical phase of military discipline and Army traditions is a valuable thing to know, and often stands one in good stead when various problems arise.

COMPLETION OF SIX WEEKS of training at the Station Hospital at Fort Benning is climaxed with the award of a certificate of proficiency to Pfc. William F. Robinson, Jr., by the Post Dental Surgeon, Colonel M. A. Sanderson. The soldier is one of fifty-three students from Atlanta Southern Dental School who spent part of their Army Specialized Training Program at Fort Benning.

A Good Mess Spells 'Excellent Morale'

(As a guide to young officers who have been appointed company mess officers, Lieut. Dewey M. Campbell, regimental mess officer of the Third Student Training Regiment, The Infantry School, has prepared two articles in which the responsibilities and duties of such a position are outlined. In this first article, Lieutenant Campbell discusses the preparation of food and its relation to morale.)

One of the great military geniuses of all time once stated that an Army moves on its stomach. What was eminently true in Napoleon's time was also true in World War No. 1 and remains unchanged in the current war. A good mess is recognized as being most important for the attainment of a state of high morale among officers and men alike.

Notwithstanding this now famous and oft-quoted statement of fact that it is a command responsibility to exercise close and constant supervision of the mess in order to insure that all food is of high grade, of adequate quantity, properly cooked and served and that unnecessary waste is avoided—all too many company commanders detail their most junior and inexperienced officer to the duty of mess officer. It's a tough detail at best.

Since we of the Army must deal in realities and since the foregoing is a reality all too frequently, it is hoped that some pointers of value may be given herein to potential mess officers to the end that they may not assume such duties without at least some basic principles to guide them.

TECHNICAL MANUALS

Initially it is not necessary for a mess officer himself to be an expert cook to know if a meal is properly prepared, adequate and nutritionally balanced. There are several Army technical manuals covering this subject as well as two particularly valuable text books, namely, "Company Administration" (chapter on Company Mess) and "Army Food and Messing," both of which are obtainable through The Infantry Journal, for the information and guidance of the mess officer who sincerely desires to become above average, a goal toward which all such officers should aspire. Furthermore, the area monthly menu will provide the daily balanced menu.

Elimination of unnecessary waste, while always of prime importance in an Army mess, is a matter of particular significance at this time in our national life since never before have we had so many mouths to feed, military and civilian, in so many places throughout the world.

Some of the simplest expedients of food conservation may yield substantial benefits for the mess. To illustrate: Fats, which are one of the two most important sources of energy for the human body, are scarce. Consequently, any mess officer who is "on the beam", will require his cooks to render beef fat whenever available.

All carcass beef should be properly trimmed of all excess fat which then should be cut up into small pieces, either by hand or with the aid of a meat chopper and then rendered by one of the following methods:

1. To render a fat suitable for frying purposes only, fry out the trimmings in a bake pan placed on the stove top or in the oven. The stove top or oven must not be too hot and constant care must be exercised to prevent scorching or burning.

2. To render a fat suitable for use as a shortening—first place in a pot with enough water to float the trimmings; next, simmer (not boil) on back part of stove top until fat has all been rendered; then strain the mixture into another container and let stand until fat hardens; finally, skim off the fat, put into a covered container and place in the refrigerator for future use.

Excellent pastry shortening may be made by mixing a part of this type of rendered fat with a like amount of regular issue lard or lard substitute.

All bacon and fresh pork drippings should be strained, allowed to cool and then placed in a separate container in the refrigerator for future use.

SOUP HELPS

In view of the present system of issuing field rations to the Army, involving, as it does, the issuance of less than a full ration per day per man in most instances, it becomes of ever greater importance that advantage should be taken of every opportunity to improve a meal. One of the simplest ways of improving a meal is to provide a first-class soup which is tasty, nutritious and filling.

With this thought in mind, no uncooked beef bones should ever be discarded from your kitchen. Beef bones, well trimmed of fat and meat, should be cut into short lengths of four to six inches and then placed in a stock pot. A meat saw, never a cleaver, should be used in cutting up the bones so that the stock pot will be kept free of bone splinters. A good stock pot is an indication of a good mess and provides the foundation for soup, gravy or sauces.

GREENS APLENTY

Minerals and vitamins are the two important food sub-divisions, the functions of which regulate the body processes. Green vegetables constitute a most important part of such foods and are provided in ample quantities by the Army. Unfortunately, a large part of the vegetables are prepared and served in such a manner as to be unappetizing to many persons which results in their not being eaten. An inspection of the mess hall garbage cans will serve to verify this statement.

It is therefore important that mess officers see to it that cooks prepare vegetables properly. Fresh vegetables must be carefully washed. They should be cooked in a covered container at boiling temperatures with just enough water to cover the bottom of the container and cooked only long enough to make them tender.

A maximum of 15 minutes is required for the leafy vegetables, cabbage, spinach, etc., while a maximum of between 30 and 45 minutes is required for the starchy and root vegetables such as carrots, onions and turnips.

The cooking of all vegetables should be so regulated that they can be served immediately. The water in which the vegetables have been cooked contains valuables dissolved food and should not be thrown out. It should be added to the stock pot and used in gravies, stews, soups and sauces.

Cooks should be cautious that food, once brought to a boil, should be held there with a minimum of heat to avoid boiling away the flavor, weight and food values. This practice also will result in an appreciable saving of fuel, an item which well may become critical before the winter is over.

Instruct cooks always to soak dry beans and peas as well as all dried (evaporated) fruits overnight or for at least eight hours before cooking them— and always to simmer, never to boil them. The resulting palatability of such foods will be pleasing to the persons served.

All mess officers should require cooks to strain all canned milk before using it for any purpose. This process will catch the lumps of solder now often present. The solder, while not harmful to the milk, may be harmful to one's teeth and, incidentally, to one's digestion.

See to it that the coffee boiler is scoured and that making coffee is so timed that it can be served within 15 minutes after the brew is completed. The Army provides coffee of an excellent quality and there is not excuse for a poor brew being served in any messhall.

Observe cooks at work and when the menu calls for roast meat, see to it that the larger chunks of meat are roasted together and put first into the oven, next pieces in size following. In this manner, a large piece of meat must be cooked longer than a small piece. Time control is most important in all cookery.

Proper care of the kitchen range is of prime importance. Many camps and stataions use Army Range No. 5—usually three to a kitchen. It is imperative that frequent firings be made with small amounts of coal instead of large amounts at infrequent intervals. This provedure will result in fuel conservation and will provide a more even heat for cooking. Ashes under the fire box should be removed frequently and never allowed to pile high enough to touch the grate bars. Burned out grate bars will result otherwise.

Under no conditions should the stove top ever be red hot. Such conditions result in poor cooking, scorched or overcooked food, damaged hot water piping and warped top sections of the range. The oven should be swept out and the top and outer surfaces of the range and stovepipe rubbed with a greasy cloth daily. A greasy cloth applied daily to the stove will keep it in better condition than stove polish applied once a week and all cooking utensils will be cleaner as a result.

Garbage cans should be cleaned with hot, soapy water and GI brush daily. Proper segregation of garbage is important and no indelible garbage such as citrus rinds, coffe grounds, etc., put in the edible garbage can.

Never establish a regular time for making inspections of messhalls. It is important to check up on the breakfast meal and to do so will require the presence of the mess officer at least 30 minutes before serving time. A mess officer should go into his kitchen at about the time the meats, vegetables and potatoes should be started in order to observe whether they will, in fact, be cooked and ready to serve at the appointed meal hour. An examination of the menu will indicate to the alert mess officer the proper time for such a visit. He also should be present at the time the meal is served to determine if everything is satisfactory. He should eat at least one meal a day in his own messholl and it should not always be the same meal.

The mess officers' job is an important one and must be considered as such. There is an indefinable something between friendliness and reserve in a good officer which can and does create loyalty and respect. Firmness with fairness, determination without harshness and constructive criticism without sarcasm all resolve to better understanding and more efficient operation of kitchen personnel.

Sanitation plus attractive preparation and serving of foods results in eating pleasure and satisfaction among the men. Two waste and development of high objectives thereby are obtained, morale. This state should be the maximumm elimination of food aim of every mess officer.

Booklet Tells Story Of Parachute School

PARACHUTE SCHOOL, USA, is the title of a souvenir picture book recently by the Special Service Office of the Parachute School. During the past month over 4,000 copies have been sold. The book was prepared and edited by Captain John E. Minter, Jr., Special Service Officer and is published by a commercial press.

The book is 9 inches by 12 inches in size, and contains 92 pages. It carries some two hundred photographs of every phase of parachute training, arranged in sequence so as to furnish a complete picture-story of each volunteer's training at the Parachute School. Sections are devoted to each of the specialist courses offered by the Parachute School to men who have successfully completed the qualification-jumping course for parachutists — parachute communications, parachute rigging and machine maintenance, parachute demolitionist, and parachute camouflaurs.

COLOR PICTURES

The heavy paper binding carries full-color photographs, reproduced by lithography, while the pictures inside the book are one-color halftones printed from the finest copper engravings. The average picture size is 9 inches by 7 inches, with many of them taking a full page. Captions have been cut to a minimum — just enough reading matter to provide continuity and explanation to the picture series, it was explained. Two pages are devoted to a brief, concise and accurate history of the parachute-troop training in the United States Army.

The new publication is not to be confused with any of the several privately printed pamphlets which are on sale at various places off the reservation. Such "outlaw" folders and booklets have no official recognition, and have been produced without sanction or cooperation from the school. Their prices are as high, or higher than, the $2 which is charged for the official book, while their average contents to pages and pictures runs less than one-tenth of that of the School's publication.

NON-RESTRICTED

"PARACHUTE SCHOOL, USA", is in no sense a "classified document." Copies may be sold to military personnel of units other than parachutists, and to civilians, with no restrictions whatever. It has been placed on sale at Service Club No. one, the main Post Officers Mess newsstand, and at all parachute organization clubs and recreation rooms.

It is proving immensely popular as a Christmas gift, according to a check of the Red Cross gift-wrapping counters in the various Fort Benning post offices. At least fifteen hundred copies have been purchased for mailing to families and friends in this country and in every major Theater of Operations, a survey indicated, as a "Christmas gift with the Fort Benning touch."

Art For Art's Sake

Officers taking the Infantry school's communication course now receive several hours of soldering instruction—and some of the boys find they have undreamed-of artistic talent.

One class in the 13th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, was issued small galvanized iron plates and short lengths of copper wire, and began to solder them together. After two hours the shop resembled a museum of modern art. Grotesque designs, which students labeled "Dawn," "Interior Decorator's Nightmare," and other weird titles, had been created from scrap plates and copper strips.

Sgt. Baxter Dies Suddenly

James Baxter, retired master sergeant and civilian store keeper in the 53rd sub-depot at Lawson Field, died last Thursday morning en route to Lawson Field Dispensary after he was suddenly stricken ill while at work.

Sgt. Baxter retired from the Army at Fort Benning upon the completion of 30 years' service on October 31, 1930. At that time he was serving with the 72nd Ordnance Company.

He served with the Second Division for two years in France during the First World War and was decorated with the Distinguished Service Cross and the Croix de Guerre while overseas.

Sgt. Baxter is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary Josephine Baxter of 2512 Schaul street, Columbus; three sons, James W. Baxter, postal employee of the Columbus Post Office; Robert E. Baxter with the U. S. Navy somewhere in the South Pacific; Jesse H. Baxter; and two daughters, Mrs. Robert Fraser of the SPARS and Mrs. R. S. Blount, Jr.

Lt. Day Appointed Aide-de Camp To General Gaither

First Lieutenant Richard W. Day of Cambridge, Mass., son of Mr. and Mrs. Hilbert F. Day, has been appointed aide-de-camp to Brigadier General Ridgley Gaither, commandant of The Parachute School.

Upon his completion of The Parachute School's famous jump course of four weeks in April of 1943, the lieutenant was assigned to the then activating 515th Parachute Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning, where he was in the S-2 Section.

Lieutenant Day, Yale graduate of 1938, was inducted into service in March, 1942, and in November, 1942, was commissioned from the Armored Force O. C. S. A few months later he volunteered and was accepted for Parachute training.

Lieutenant Day is married and Mrs. Day is an ensign in the WAVEs stationed in Washington, D. C.

VOLLEY BALL

A regimental volley ball tournament is scheduled to start within the 176th Infantry immediately after the turn of the year, it was announced by the Special Service Office. Awards will be given to the winning team.

Claudie Gardner picked up this "leaf" when his Army Engineer outfit took over an ex-Nipponese stronghold in the South Pacific. He sent the souvenir to his brother, 1st Sergeant Grover C. Gardner of the 1st Student Training Regiment, The Infantry School.

Claudie enlisted at the Columbus, Ga., recruiting office in October 1942. The boys' father, Mr. Fred Gardner, lives in Purvis, Miss.

OC LeBow Is Holder Of Rope-Climbing Crown

A "Tarzan" rival who should prove invaluable to the Yanks in jungle warfare is Officer Candidate Charles P. LeBow of the 20th Company, Third Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School, holder of the National AAU rope climbing championship.

LeBow, a studious lad in appearance, but nevertheless muscularly wiry, clambered up a 20-foot rope last March in the record time of 3.8 seconds. In setting this mark as a member of the Penn State gymnastic team, LeBow clipped one-tenth of a second from the previous record which he held in partnership with Fred Young, also a Penn State gymnast.

The candidate explains that in climbing the rope for record, one starts his ascent from a sitting position on the floor and climbs 20 feet to a point where he strikes a pan.

The National Amateur Athletic Union Gymnast Handbook takes due recognition of LeBow's feat and reports that he set his record with eight strokes and a reach, using vigorous, choppy strokes and an upward propelling leg motion. "Most climbers use nine strokes in record ascents," LeBow adds.

Ropes are not the only gymnasium instruments on which LeBow has excelled. He chopped the Eastern Intercollegiate horizonal bar championship and won a similar title in the Mid-Atlantic AAU tests.

LeBow gives much of the credit for his achievements to his gymnasium coach at Penn State, Eugene Wattstone. However, he has been interested in gymnastics for the past five years, starting in the gymnasium in Northeast High School in Philadelphia which he attended prior to his matriculation at Penn State.

As an example of the seriousness with which he took gymnastics, LeBow would eat only one meal a day while in training. "I frequently trained myself down from 150 to 136 pounds," he revealed.

LeBow majored in physical education at Penn State from which he was graduated in October and hopes to make that his career. He was active in ROTC at college and came from there direct to OCS in this regiment.

John Adams Becomes Candidate Once More

Candidate John Adams of the 14th Company, Third Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School just can't seem to evade the title of "candidate" even though he is wearing khakis and is far from the political speakers' platform in Omaha, Nebraska. A year ago, Adams was a "candidate" for the State Legislature. A margin of 200 votes constituted Adams' first defeat in a political election. Adams enlisted in the Army and thought for certain he could forget the routine of smoking black cigars, kissing babies, and wearing the title of "candidate" every two years.

Until his defeat, the 37-year-old candidate held the distinction of being the only Negro representative in the State Legislature. He was first elected to office in 1934 and served eight years. An index of the candidate's popularity might be gained from the fact that he was re-elected four times to the legislature.

Adams holds A. B. and LL. B. degrees from the University of Nebraska. Most of his time in the legislature has been devoted to the cause of social security legislation. He has also served on the Judiciary, Revenue, Labor, Health and Government committees. Married for 12 years, Adams has a boy 10 years of age and a girl, eight. His wife is now employed in the Martin Bomber Corporation.

Adams admits patterning his career after his famed namesake, the second president of this country. Oddly enough, the original John Adams is revered as "the father of the American Navy." Candidate Adams' brother has made up for this slight discrepancy by enlisting in the Navy. Previous to this enlistment, he served as assistant dean of men at Johnson-Smith College, Charlotte, N. C. The youngest brother of this law-minded family is on the staff of the OPA in Omaha, Nebraska. John Adams, Sr., is a minister and lawyer.

Candidate Adams reports that the real loser of the election was his successful opponent. You see, he was Adams' dentist and a well-paying patient was lost to the free Army dental service.

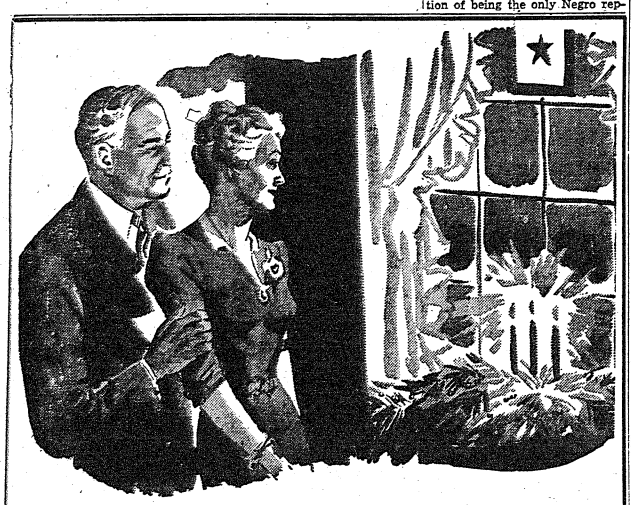
CAPT. MATHWIG

William H. Mathwig, cannon company commander in the 119th Infantry, 30th Division, has been promoted to captain. Temporarily attached to the 1st Student Training Regiment here, he is attending the Infantry School's Officers' Advanced Course.

Chemical Warfare Officer Is Major

Captain Charles S. Black, post chemical warfare officer and chief of the Chemical Warfare Branch at Fort Benning, has been promoted to the rank of major.

A native of Charlotte, N. C., Major Black was professor of chemistry at Wake Forest College, Wake Forest, N. C., prior to his call to active duty in May, 1942, when he went to Englewood Arsenal, Md., and went through the Chemical Warfare School. He stayed there as an instructor in chemical agents until January, 1943, and assumed his present duties at Fort Benning in February.



A veteran of the first World War, Major Black served overseas in the medical department for a year during that conflict, in a field hospital in France. The major, who also taught at Mississippi State College for two years, received his B. A. degree from Wake Forest college, his M. A. degree from the University of Virginia, and his Ph. D. degree in chemistry from the University of Wisconsin.

He is a member of Sigma Xi, honorary scientific research fraternity, Phi Lambda Upsilon, honorary chemical fraternity, and the American Chemical Society, in which he served as head of the North Carolina section.

A Few Leaves Clear Japs Quickly

Silent though impressive evidence of how the United Nations air-psychological warfare team softens up the Jap for attack by American ground fighters is this "leaflet" dropped by Allied flyers on enemy positions. Translated from Japanese, it warns the defenders that "Before the second spring comes, American bombs will fall like these leaves. You will be mighty unfortunate."

The Japs apparently didn't wait 'til spring to clear out. Private

Academic Sarge Was Once 1-Man Company

First Sergeant Harry J. Devlin of Co. D, Academic Regiment who enlisted in the Army at the age of 44—once had the honor of being a one-man outfit. He was a whole company of engineers, and a very phantom company it was!

The story starts back in Pittsburgh, Pa., almost two years ago, when Pop Devlin saw his youngest son take off for the Air Corps. His elder son was already in the government service, and Pop, a widower, began to feel lonely. He tried to enlist in the Army, but they told him his eyes were bad. Thinking he could fool them, he tried again, but no, he was still near-sighted.

So he went to an eye specialist, paid through the nose for consultations, took a series of treatments and bought glasses. It worked. In June, 1942, he was accepted and sent to Camp Wheeler for basic training.

"It was tough at my age, coming out of a swivel-chair job," Devlin admits, but it had to be tough, for the government had big plans for Devlin.

NOT TO BE FOUND

"I was sent to Fort Benning with a group of quartermaster men—my orders read that I was to report to the such-and-such Engineers. But nobody here at Benning knew where that outfit was. They just weren't here. As a matter of fact, they werent any place. Because it turned out that I was the first and only soldier ever assigned to that company! So the Quartermaster topkick put me up for two days while Post Headquarters tried to figure out what to do with me."

Apparently, however, the Army decided that even Devlin couldn't be a whole company, because—

"I was finally dropped into the lap of Sergeant-Major Kline of the Academic Regiment of the Infantry school. I was attached, mind you, ATTACHED to Sgt. Plunk's D Company. For five full months after that I still didn't really belong to any outfit, and so I couldn't even make Pfc. But last January, the sarges sighs relief as he comes to this part of the story, "I became a real Academic, and two days later I made Tech. 4."

That was the only rating Devlin held before he earned his six-stripes—just in time to drill D Company on that memorable Sunday of October 10th.

Shortly after Devlin had found a home, the such-and-such Engineers were finally activted—but without Devlin, who was their original cadre and personnel.

OCS CANDIDATE

At present he is sweating out appointment to OCS. Topkick Devlin believes he learned how to control men, and give and follow up orders, when he was supervisor of the Motor Vehicle Service, Post, Office department, for the 20 counties surrounding Pittsburgh. He started out in life as a truck-driver in 1918, and by 1925 he was in charge of trucking for the entire postal district. And after the war. . . .

"I'm going right back to job the minute I'm released,' the sarge assures. "And when the duration and six months are over, I'm looking forward to seeing my son again —Harry W., you know, is flying a Mitchell bomber somewhere in the South Pacific."

P. S. the sergeant has never worn those glasses since the day they helped him pass the physical exam!

NON-COMS ON K.P.

The Non-commissioned officers of Co. K, 176th Infantry, The Infantry School troops, have prepared a Christmas and New Year's present for the G.I.'s in their outfit. They're going to do K.P. on those days. First Sergeant John Lockamy will be chief of the kitchen police.

The London Zoo has several fish with eyes that shine like motor headlights in the dark.

THE BACK OF OUR NECKS TO YOU, SIR, was the attitude of the youngsters at Major General Silvester's Christmas party Sunday. They were so busy peering into the innards of the tank and gazing at Santa Claus himself (seen shaking hands with Gen. Silvester) that even the photographer could not divert them from the main show. COLONEL HOBSON SPEAKS AT TIS SHRINE

St. Hubert's Shrine Rededicated Sunday

Twenty-one years ago, a soldier assigned to the Quartermaster detachment of the 29th Infantry of the Infantry school troops at Fort Benning, was stricken with an illness from which there seemed no recovery. He was known as Private Stadnik.

Private Stadnik sought recovery in prayer and, eventually, his prayers were answered. To show his gratitude, he constructed a wooden shrine on Lowland Trail, a mile north of the present Infantry school stables. The trail has long been a favorite of military equestrians at Fort Benning and the shrine has been a turning point for their outings.

Sunday, that shrine was rededicated at an unusual and colorful ceremony attended by officers, enlisted men and their guests.

SHRINE REBUILT

Under the direction of Capt. Charles B. Taylor, commander of the Service Detachment of the Academic Regiment, the shrine was rebuilt. Skilled craftsmen from the Italian prisoner of war camp materially aided in its renovation.

The dedication was to St. Hubert, patron saint of all horsemen and to the many members of the military riding classes at Fort Benning who have given their lives in the service of their country.

Col. William H. Hobson, commander of Fort Benning, flanked by flags of the United Nations, delivered the principal address.

He said, "With no tools other than his bare hands, no material but salvage, Private Stadnik raised a memorial that was beautiful to behold. There is no doubt but that it was constructed with a tremendous spirit—a spirit of determination and thanksgiving.

SPIRIT OF FREE MEN

"So today, as we bow our heads in prayer, let us keep uppermost in our minds the fact that we are here to dedicate, not a building but a grand and glorious spirit, the American spirit, the spirit of freemen." He called upon his listeners to re-dedicate themselves to the tremendous tasks before them. Col. Thomas Taylor of the Infantry school, spoke briefly. Chaplain Roderick MacEachern delivered the invocation and benediction. Following the ceremony, guests inspected the shrine, snuggling among the trees and shining in its newness in the winter sun.

When American paratroopers first arrived in England, they learned that jumps from 800 feet, customary in America, were "high altitude" over there, hence the practice is now for them to "hit the air" at about 300 feet, providing the enemy with less time to shoot.

Chapel No. 4 To Celebrate Midnight Mass

The beautiful strains of Handel's Messiah will announce the approaching solemnity of the Mid-Night Mass at Chapel No. 4 on Christmas Eve.

Pfc. Winfield S. Davis will play a 30 minute prelude of Handel's Messiah. The choir will lead the congregation in singing appropriate Christmas Carols, "The first Noel" "Silent Night" "Hark The Herald Angels Sing" "It Came Upon a Mid-Night Clear" and "Joy To The World".

At 12 o'clock a High-Mass will be sung by the choir of the Catholic Chapel, composed of WAC's from Station Complement Sec. 1, WAC's from the Infantry School, and soldiers from the 283rd QM. Ref. and the Academic Regiments.

Sgt. Jack Griffith, tenor, from the 283rd QM Ref. and Cpl. Helen Tvorach of the WAC Det will serve as soloists. Other members of the choir are Sgt. Grace Costa, Sgt. Peggy Ryan, Cpl. Wright, Cpl. Patricia Perchowski, Sgt. Dorothy Buttermark, Sgt. Rembez, Pfc. Mary Minucci, Sgt. Thelma Harmon, Pfc. Barth, Pfc. Suzanne Fensick, Cpl. Sophie Pawlak, Sgt. Emily Kiolbasa, Cpl. Jane Regola, Sgt. Lawrence Ott, Sgt. John Krupansky, and Mrs. Anne Krubansky.

The Mass in honor of the Child Jesus, by James Scheil will be sung. The offertory solo "O Holy Night" will be sung by Sgt. Griffith, Cpl. Helen Tvorach.

During Communion the organist will play "Sanctus" from Gounod's "Mass Solemenelle." The Recessional "Gloria in Excelsis Deo" will be sung by the choir, and "Hallelujah Chorus" will be played by the organist. Pfc. Winfield S. Davis, medical detachment Station Hospital, is choir director and organist of the Main Post Catholic Chapel. Father William Hunt will be the celebrant.

Plane Named For Spirit G. I.

A former member of the 176th Infantry of The Infantry School, now of a B-24, Lt. Frank T. Sutton, III, has named his airplane after a member of the Spirit outfit. Lt. Sutton calls his plane "SHMO."

Mr. Walter Lea, a close friend of Lt. Sutton's, received a letter from the lieutenant in which he stated, "I am naming my plane after Pfc. Anthony "SHMO" Simon of Service Company. We used to work together and I expect the name "SHMO" to bring me good luck."

Post Maintenance Activities Merged

All maintenance activities at Fort Benning which are now operated by the Station Complement of the Post have been merged into a single unit to be known as the Maintenance Branch, according to an announcement from Post Headquarters.

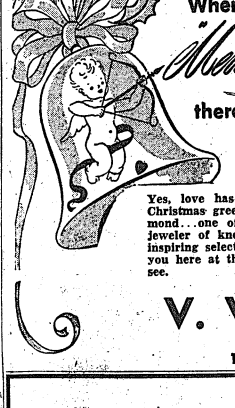
In an order issued by Colonel William H. Hobson, commanding officer of Fort Benning, the newly formed branch will be operated and controlled by the Deputy Director for Maintenance, Service and Supply Division.

At the same time, Colonel Hobson announced that Lieut. Colonel Charles Carlton had been appointed Deputy Director of the Division.

Egypt's great pyramid and the city of New Orleans, La., are on the same degree of latitude.

1st STR Unit Masters Jungle Jim

The famous combat patrolling course known as "Jungle Jim" to the thousands of Infantrymen who have trained in the pine covered hills of Benning, designed to present the principles of infiltration in unforgettable fashion, has proved itself a model of tactics behind the enemy lines in all combat theaters.



Last week the student officers of the 10th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, commanded by Capt. Richard E. Miller, went through "Jungle Jim" in four platoon waves. According to the Combat Training Committee of The Infantry School, they caught on to the principles in spectacular action.

In a commendation forwarded to Capt. Miller, the Committee stated that the class "went through the course in as excellent a fashion as any Basic Class in the recollection of the Staff of the Combat Training Committee."

The Committee composed largely of officers who have returned from the theaters of operations, asked that the commendation be made known to the members of the class.

Pearl Harbor Attack Recalled

BY OC DONALD FORBES

Everybody has wanted to shoot out lights with a rifle. Like in the movies, Capt. John F. Dunlop, commanding officer of the Sixth Company of The Infantry School's Third Student Training Regiment, had his chance. It was on that memorable Pearl Harbor Sunday of Dec. 7, 1941, over two years ago, when he was in Honolulu on an anti-sabotage mission.

His first reaction to the attack was one of incredulity. "At first we thought it was maneuvers," he said. "But they were Jap planes and bombs were falling. But we still thought it was maneuvers until the bombs began to fall in our area. Four bombs landed in my company area, the industrial section of Honolulu.

"One set afire an illuminating gas storage tank and almost got a sentry who was on a larger tank next to the one on fire, which constituted the main lookout post of his company. Another tore four parked cars into shrapnel. One plummeted into the American Pineapple Canning Company warehouse, ripping a hole two feet deep in the concrete floor, destroying 24 cases, each containing 12 No. 10 cans. The fourth bomb fell 25 yards from my command post."

Captain Dunlop declared that "the most romantic city in the world became a ghost town. The glaring nightclub lights died out. Shipboard fires from Pearl Harbor, some of which lasted as long as a week, were the only source of illumination to be seen from our area. Our detachment had orders to patrol the city to put out all lights or shoot them out.

ONE LAST WARNING

"One last red aircraft warning light on a tower kept burning in the Honolulu dock area. No one could find the switch. I lined my M1 sights on it and fired. The first shot put it out. After a few minutes it went on again. I squeezed off another. This time the light went off for good. Red glass tinkled at my feet. I kept a piece for a souvenir."

Life was disrupted in Honolulu as a result of the attack. Curfew was enforced strictly—nobody could leave his house without permission. Two-thirds of the population was Japanese. Captain Dunlop headed searching parties looking for hidden knives and firearms. When they went into a Japanese house, machine guns on jeeps would cover the outside walls—just like in the movies.

"Food, however, was not a problem," the captain went on. "War was known to be inevitable so the people stocked up on canned goods. Some had enough for six months."

It is said that every captain has a fish story. Captain Dunlop has one to top all previous fish stories. "The best deep sea fishing in the world is at Christmas Island," he said. His company constructed a 16-foot sail boat which was sent across a large lagoon each Thursday to get fish for Friday mess. The captain was with the group on several occasions when 300 pounds of fish were caught.

"We waded in with M1 rifles to shoot sharks as they approached the beach pursuing smaller fish. You had to be careful the sharks didn't get you instead. We kept the skins as souvenirs and teeth to make ornamental knives.

250 M. P. H.

"Bird do your casting for you. The fastest and slowest birds in the world live together here. The slow gooney birds need about 20 feet for a takeoff to catch fish in the lagoon. The fast prickett birds will swoop down and seize the catch. The prickett birds—they can do 250 miles an hour with their three-foot wingspan and tiny body—will steal fish out of your hand.

"We baited our lines with fish," the captain related, with a grin. "The snatching prickett birds would carry the fish out to sea and then drop them when the line ran out. So we had perfect casting.

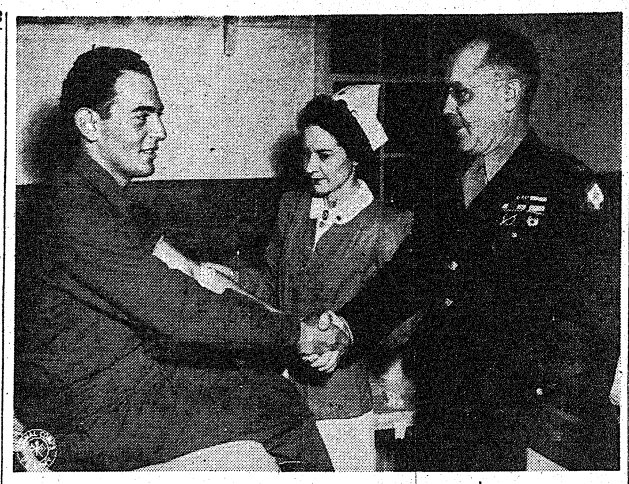
"We caught some of the most beautiful fish imaginable—deep purples and reds and blues and marvelous striped and spotted patterns. There was plenty of mother-of-pearl."

Captain Dunlop pulled a matchbox from his desk. Inside were two white pearls. "In this translucent one," he pointed out, "you can see the grain of sand that annoyed the oyster and started the pearl.

"On moonlit nights we would go out on the reefs and catch lobsters. We cooked them and poured melted butter over them. They were the best lobsters in the world.

PORPOISES LIFE-GUARDS

"Sailors say that if you are drowning, porpoises will roll you back on the becah. That's why we never killed them although they were plentiful. We never found out if the story were true or not."



Christmas Island, from Captain Dunlop's description, must be a real South Sea Island paradise—like in the movies. The second leading sport on the island was sea shelling. The captain has a marvelous collection of shells and has made several necklaces from the objects.

The weather ranges year-around between 80 and 90 in the shade without too much humidity. The sun, however, is blistering. Captain Dunlop had to issue orders to his men not to bare their backs in the sun for more than 15 minutes at a time. But, since the soldiers preferred to go around in shorts, someone was always landing in the hospital for sunburn treatment.

Who lives there? Ownership has been in dispute for decades. The British claim it on the grounds that Captain Cook discovered it in 1775.

After 33 months of overseas duty—a little more than two years in the Hawaiian Group and seven months on Christmas Island—Captain Dunlop treasures one moment he would not trade for any other. "That first sight of the Golden Gate bridge when I came back."

Like in the movies.

Officer Recommends G. I. For OCS; Awards Bars

A coincidence almost without parallel in the Army occurred here Monday when Major Paul C. Byrne, assistant executive officer of the Third Student Training Regiment, pinned second lieutenant's bars on a young soldier whom he personally had recommended as potential officer material.

What makes the coincidence all the more extraordinary is the fact that the recommendation was given while both men were stationed in far-off Hawaii. Major Byrne commanded an Infantry battalion in the islands and among his other duties was serving as president of a three-officer board set up to pass upon prospective officer candidates.

One of the many young soldiers to appear before the board was Sgt. Charles E. Lesnick. Lesnick, who comes from Flint, Mich., and was a news agency dealer in civilian life, came into the Army in March, 1942. Following his basic training, he was shipped to the islands and rose rapidly in grade despite the tunefully expressed lament of there being "no promotion this side of the ocean."

Major Byrne and the board recommended Lesnick and the soldier soon thereafter left the island. Some time elapsed and Major Byrne received orders shipping him back to the United States and assigning him to The Infantry School. Two weeks ago, Major Byrne and Candidate Lesnick met in the Post Exchange near Regimental Headquarters. Lesnick revealed that he was nearing the end of his training in the Third Company of the regiment and asked him to present him his bars on graduation day. The major gladly complied with the request, appearing at the exercises Monday morning in Theater No. 9 to do the honors.

The Third Company graduation also was notable for the appearance of Jane Russell, the movie actress, who had a cousin among the new second lieutenants. This was the second Third Student Training Regiment commencement for which Miss Russell was present. On the previous occasion she witnessed the commissioning of her husband, Bob Waterfield, the football star.

'Go Northwest' Young Man

"Go northwest, young man," Captain Harvey Bailey advised classmates in the 10th Company of Colonel Robert H. Lord's 1st Student Training Regiment. The captain recently reported to The Infantry School from several months' service in Alaska, where he headed a G. I. sawmill.

Mrs. Bailey, too, shares his enthusiasm over that northern territory—maybe because of the gift of furs he brought back. Anyhow, she readily assented to accompany the captain on a post-war trip to Alaska. Captain Bailey comes from Morgantown, West Virginia, where he had been a cabinet maker and vocational-school teacher.

Saber Service Company Rates Commendation

The Service Company of the 300th Infantry of the Infantry School, has been commended for its participation in an Infantry School demonstration by Colonel Leonard R. Nachman, Chief of the General Section of the Infantry School in a letter to Colonel Hunt, commanding officer of the 300th Infantry.

"For the past several months the Service Company, 300th Infantry, has participated in a demonstration of the Supply of a Regiment in Defense, given as a part of the course of instruction in Logistics," Col. Nachman write.

"Captain Richard B. Lee and the enlisted men of the company are to be commended for the excellent manner in which they carried out the duties of that assignment. They exhibited remarkable patience and willingness during the rehearsals which preceded the demonstrations, and showed a high degree of cooperation, initiative, and understanding of the problem during the demonstrations.

"It is a recognized fact that the excellent character of instruction at the Infantry School is made possible only by teamwork between instructors and demonstration troops, of which the above was a fine example. The performance of this company resulted in a demonstration that was a pleasure for the instructor to put on, and exceptionally interesting and instructive to the studtnts observing. It was an outstanding job."

Col. Hunt added his congratulations to the officers and men of Service Company.

Saber Non-Coms Establish Club

With more than 350 paid members already signed up, the new 300th Infantry Non-Com club has become a reality Mr. Sgt. Nathan Wein, regimental Sergeant-Major, was elected the first president.

The club which will be housed in the old Teater building, as revised the initiation fee plans, due to the overwhelming response by members joining up. Those who join before December 15th pay an initiation fee of $3. After that time the fee becomes $10 except to newly made non-coms.

Others elected were Tech. Sgt. Lloyd, vice-president, T-4 Leibig, secretary, and 1st Sgt. Merrill, treasurer. In the club there will be a 30-foot bar and sandwiches and coffee may be purchased there. Regular dances are on the schedule and celebrations to observe the Christmas and New Year holidays are also planned.

709th Tankers Get Commendation For Film Work

Three members of the 709th Tank Battalion of The Infantry School Troops Brigade have received a commendation from the Signal Corps for excellent services in the filming of one of the War Department's latest training films, "Combat Firing for Individual Tanks." The men are: Sgt. Ralph W. Andrus, Augusta, Kans.; Cpl. John V. Connors, Dorchester, Mass., and T-5 Richard E. Best, Camp Hill, Pa., all of Co. "C".

Training films have become a "must" in the Army's training program as visual aids are used to advantage in the Army's training objective. The War Department through the Visual Aids Department of The Infantry School and in collaboration with the Signal Corps is ever keeping pace with the latest for use in its applicatory system of instruction.

275,000 Infantry Enlisted Men Promoted Overseas

About 275,000 enlisted infantrymen are getting one-grade promotions in recognition of what the Army says are "the acknowledged hazards and responsibilities shouldered by the infantry in combat."

The War Department, announcing the promotions, said today they would affect 16 of the outstanding infantry combat categories and provide pay increases ranging from $48 to $216 a year. The promotions were effective December 13.

Lieutenant General Joseph T. McNarney, deputy chief of staff, said:

"The increased grades will provide a more suitable reward as well as supply means for more careful selection of non-commissioned combat leaders."

Theater and area commanders were authorized to advance half the privates in certain designated units from grade seven to grade six, making them privates first class. Others given promotions were squad leader assistants, from corporal to sergeant to staff sergeant; section corporal to sergeant or from sergeant to staff sergeant; platoon sergeants, from staff sergeant to technical sergeant, and battalion sergean majors, from staff sergeant to technical sergeant.

Sgt. Harp Contributes To R. C. Development

By PVT. LEWIS O. SWINGLER

Technical Sergeant Chester A. Harp, during his two years as coordination clerk in the Reception Center at Fort Benning, Georgia, has contributed in a fine way to the development and expanding program of the Center, now considered one of the most efficient-ly operated unit of its kind in the United Sates.

From Colonel Ulric N. James, commanding officer of the Reception Center, and clear through the command to the enlisted personnel, Sgt. Harp has won commendation for his manner of processing newly inducted Negro soldiers. He hails from "bluesdamned" Memphis, Tennessee, on the Mississippi River.

Processing is the term used for carrying men, already accepted for military service, through the various channels necessary to give them full soldier-status. It is estimated that Sgt. Harp, since he became coordination clerk two years ago, has been responsible for processing over 100,000 men. His work during this period has not only become more constant but more complex.

HUMAN DYNAMO

Small in stature, the coordination clerk is, notwithstanding, a dynamo of energy, at once impressive and infectious. Harp gets things done in a hurry, and yet the newly arrived selectee is not likely to forget the things he says nor the almost religious way in which he says them. He is a symbol of the change that takes place in a man once he reaches the Reception Center.

Every day scores of selectees move closer and closer toward the real purpose of their call into the Armed Forces under direction of Sgt. Harp. With him and his guides, these new arrivals, now referred to as "tag men," make contact with every important spot of the Army way of doing things.

"You are about to hear the Articles of War," Sergeant Harp explains to his charger as they reach the final stage of their processing. "Sit erect in your seats, give careful attention to the officer while he reads you the laws of the army. Once you've heard these Articles of War, you are then bound by them."

Although Sgt. Harp gives this same statement day by day, it never seems to lose its effect, and by the time the officer is ready to read, the audience of "tag men" is rapt with attention. Harp has already gained it by his fervent introduction, stressing the importance of these laws.

PROCESSING PROCEDURE

Processing includes a series of steps which begins with the checking station. Here the soldiers are given their tags, placed in groups of forty-eight, and numbered according to order of their formations. With two guides assigned to each group, the selectees are then taken to the quartermaster for G. I. clothes. In succession they are given aptitude tests, taken to the insurance and allotment section where each soldier makes out an allotment, if he has dependents; takes out government insurance, and afterward, ushered to the classification and personnel departments for interviews and assignments.

In the medical dispensary, the selectees receive the first of three typhoid shots, and at last directed to the recreation room to hear the Articles of War, lectures by the medical officer and chaplain, and see a series of government films illustrating Army laws, military courtesies, and customs, and the significance of maintaining good health. The last stage of processing takes about five hours.

Inducted into service March 24, 1941, at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, Sgt. Harp was sent to Fort Benning, Ga., three days later. He has been here since. His first assignment was as mail orderly but when a fellow-Memphian, Corporal Garland Princeton, former LeMoyne college football star, was transferred, Sgt. Harp succeeded him as coordination clerk. Harp and Pinkston were inducted at the same time at Oglethorpe, and together they came to Fort Benning on March 27, 1941.

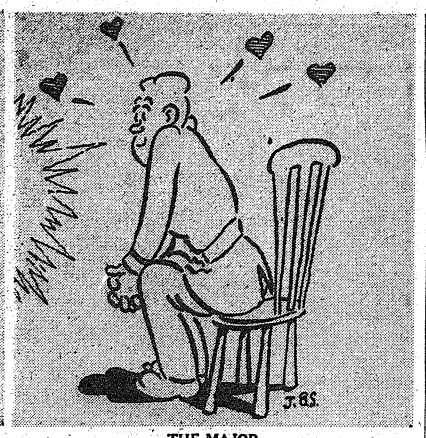
COORDINATION

Sgt. Harp, aside from his work in the Recreation Center, also serves as coordination clerk for the Student Training Regiment Inductees. If they fail to pass the aptitude test given during processing, they are sent to the STR for three months' training in elementary education.

It is part of Sgt. Harp's job to see that men are properly transferred to STR companies and make certain that each STR company is up to strength as to numbers of men. He likewise places each STR trainee that he may be given the fullest benefit of the instructions offered during the time he's assigned to this unit.

Divided into four sections, the Student Training Regiment offers subjects equivalent to the first four grades of a typical civilian school system. Approximately two-third of the men passing through the Reception Center can neither read nor write. Until they are given the fundamentals of a "first-to-fourth" grade education, they are virtually useless as men of arms. The STR, therefore, has become the most far-reaching setup of Col. James' command.

RUNS GAMUT



Sgt. Harp completed his high school work at Booker T. Washington high school in Memphis. He attributes his success thus far to the good training of teachers back home, and expresses thanks for it. Few college graduates could have handled the processing of such diverse groups of men any better. Even college men many of whom work under Sgt. Harp, agree that this young man from the rugged banks of Ole' Man River pretty nearly runs the gamut of the Reception Center. He is an epitome of all of the vital points which the center embraces.

Sgt. Harp contemplates entering business when this grim business of war has been closed. Yet it is doubtful if the sergeant will ever have memories more glowing than those of the Reception Center. Among the thousands of men with whom he helped don swaddling clothes as neophyte men of war, there will always be those to keep him reminded of their "tag days" at the Reception Center.

Approximately one of every 150 persons is injured by an accident in July.

Military Papas And First-Born

By MEDICUS

COLONEL: Bustles into the main corridor, flushed, trying to appear aloof, whisks off gloves with a sweeping gesture. Is still overwhelmed by his pre-climacteric virility. Has no idea of what people are saying and answers "yesyesyes . . . ofcourseofcourse," as he wanders off to his wife's room. Is fluttered and abashed as he timidly knocks and enters. If other visitors are present he almost dies, being embarrassed by the unspoken question in their eyes. Quickly leans over and pecks a kiss on his wife's forehead. Wife lowers covers, exposing weazened future chief of staff and petulantly asks: "Don't you want to see your son? Aren't you going to kiss him?" Giggling sheepishly, he swiftly complies. After five more minutes which to him are more harrowing than the time he faced an entire machine gun squad alone in Belleau Woods, he dashes from the room and speeds away to the Officers' Club where over a highball he secretly enjoys the joshing of other officers. Is still amazed, at himself, however.

MAJOR: He with his wife had this whole thing cut and dried. They were not only to tell the obstetrician the exact date from which to figure, but gave him the exact hour and minute, using, of course, "Z" time. Deliberately planned delivery for September because: (1) promotion was expected then (and happened), (2) weather would be cool, and (3) baby would teeth during winter months rather than the onerous prickly-heat summer ones. Religiousiy saved a certain sum out of each month's pay check for cost of the whole business, including 100-word telegram to Grandma and Grandpa (who have one foot in the grave and are lousy with dough). Pop has schools and colleges all picked out, future career, type of wife (or husband) child will marry, and in fact, as the kid grows up he'll need parental approval and acumen of a military strategist. The only thing to upset his applecart is twins.

LIEUTENANT: Young, fresh from civilian life, married the night before he reported for active duty. Wishes he knew then what he does now. Had about two hundred bucks when he entered the Army, and between buying uniforms and moving, threw himself into a heap of debt. Since then so many extra expenses which he never envisioned have come up. Runs hand through hair and can see no solution to his problems. When he enters his wife's room and sees her, so pretty and sweet, he throws himself at his wife and kisses her passionately—forgetting all about mercenary matters. Soon wife is murmuring, "Oh, Charlie, how are we ever going to manage?" Sits up, grins at wife and bellows, "Nuts! Others have done it, I guess we can, too!" On the way to quarters later, decides having a family when you are young is swell. Maybe next year, if he can be promoted, they can have another child. Then when the war is over—!

ENLISTED MAN: The sublime picture of joy. Hasn't a care in the world, doesn't give a damn about expenses, gifts, cigars, tips or plans. Proud as a peacock of himself, his wife and his son. Is convinced the latter will some day be president and that he is lucky to be just a plain soldier's off-spring. First gift to wife is what he feels she is missing most. Usually a tin pail of chicken chow mein (with plenty of noodles), or a quart of chocolate ice cream. Later for reading matter will bring up all the picture periodicals, movie and radio magazines. When wife asks him about naming the child says indifferently, "Anything you pick is okey-dokey by yours truly." After an hour's visit, pinches wife's cheeks affectionately, gives her and the baby a noisy kiss each! nonchalantly wheels out of the hospital, overseas hat cockily over one ear. No use makin' a fuss over all this. Been going on thousands of years. Whistling, enters PX, where he quickly gets into a game of rotation pool, nickel a ball. "Rack 'em up!"

Central Interviewing Unit For Civilian Job Seekers

A central interviewing unit has been established in the Civilian Personnel Branch at Fort Benning, to handle all unsolicited applications for Army Service Forces civilian jobs at the post, it is announced by Captain Raymond A. Parkins, chief, civilian personnel branch.

The new unit will interview all applicants for the purpose of determining their qualifications for any Service Forces job which may be open. In the past, in the absence of such a central agency, applicants have had to seek interviews with the heads of various operating offices, "wasting the time and energy of all concerned," it was pointed out. Under the new system, their prospects for jobs in all parts of the organization will be appraised in one interview.

Operating offices will refer unsolicited applicants for employment to the central interviewing unit. No applicant will be acceptable for appointment without the approval of the central interviewing unit.

Miss Jennie M. Robinson, chief of the Placement Section of the Civilian Personnel Branch and a civil service employe at the post for 14 years, will be in charge of the new unit.

Telephone Lines To Columbus Take a Beating

Monday was a bad day for Col. A. W. Young, communications officer at Fort Benning, and if you had trouble with telephone calls to the post here is the reason:

About 11 o'clock on that day the trench digging machine near the Columbus airport dug up and damaged telephone cable lines.

For the rest of the day telephone communications were restricted to emergency and strictly official calls. At one point there was only one trunk line in operation.

At 5 o'clock all the damage had been repaired, but at precisely the same time a truck tore down a pole carrying other Columbus and Fort Benning lines!

By 7 p. m. communications again were normal, but Col. Young still has his fingers crossed.

176th Infantry Yule Services Slated Sunday

The annual Christmas musical service of the 176th Infantry regiment will be held Sunday, December 26 in the Main Post Chapel at 9:15 a.m. The special music will be under the direction of WOJG Paul S. Callaway, formerly the organist and choir director of the National Cathedral, Washington, D. C. Chaplain Arnold M. Lewis will conduct the service.

The Regimental Choir will sing "Angels We Have Heard on High," "Joy to the World," and "We Three Kings of Orient Are." The male quartette will render "Hark! What Means Those Holy Voices," and "Silent Night, Holy Night." The soloist will be Tec. 5 Don Hasse, who will sing Adolphe Adams' "O Holy Night." Accompaniment for the service will be played by Mr. Callaway at the organ assisted by a brass quartette.

The public is invited to this service.

CHRISTMAS EVE

By Sgt. Donald J. Stevens
Company B, 176th Infantry

Christmas Eve:
Sweet thoughts these words now bring to mind,
My thoughts with home they closely bind.
While to my eyes the visions rise
Of my mother, so dear, so wise,
Who taught me that the Christ above
Was born today, through God's great love.

Christmas Eve:
Before my mind the visions flee
Of children gay, whose shouts of glee
Ring out in long and loud applause;
Of Christmas trees, of Santa Claus,
Of little stockings with toys filled,
Gifts from parents whose love so willed.

Christmas Eve:
In my dreams once more I can see
My mother standing at the tree.
Brothers and sisters side by side
Each their turn impatiently bide.
While happy shouts from kiddies ring
Showing the joy their presents bring.

Christmas Eve:
With dear ones miles and miles from here
How can one be merry this year?
Listen! As though from far away
I seem to hear a kind voice say,
"Give! And out of His great love
God will send you joy from above."

You Bet... WE'LL HELP YOU CALL Her AT CHRISTMAS!
A lot of the fellows are going to use long distance to call their best girl (and family, too) during the holidays. In fact, there may be more calls than the facilities can handle and some calls may be delayed.
Right now the telephone company can't expand to take care of a greater volume of calls because of the shortage of raw materials. So civilians are being urged to avoid making unnecessary calls during the holidays to keep long distance lines clear for your calls. Radio and newspaper advertising is being used extensively to carry this request to the public.
You too can help get more calls through quicker when you can arrange to make your calls before seven at night. There is a rush period every night from 7 P. M. to 10 P. M.
Telephone folks will be doing everything they can to complete your calls in the shortest time possible, but if you do run into a delay we hope you will understand and be patient.

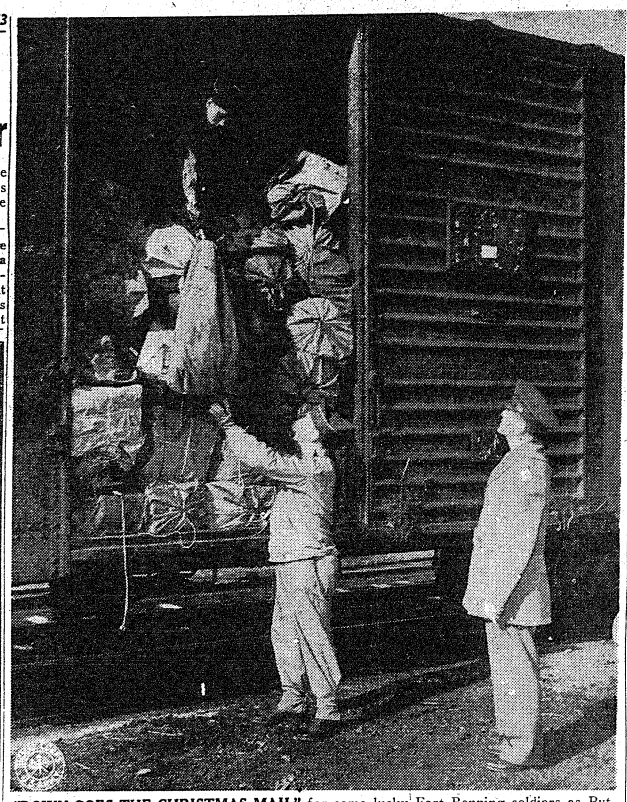
Parachute School SSO Was Cigar-Band Collector

Capt. John E. Minter, Jr., Special Service Officer of The Parachute School collected over two thousands different kinds of cigar bands before he was old enough even to smoke one cigar.

There was quite a rage for cigar bands amongst kids in his home town of Columbus between 1920 and 1930. The fad was also rampart in other cities over the country, and finally reached such proportions that several mail order companies which dealt exclusively in cigar-bands—not cigars—were organized and flourished for a time. Columbus Boy Scout officials encouraged the hobby, but as far as Captain Minter knows there was never a Boy Scout Merit Badge offered for cigar-band collecting such as has been offered for stamp collecting.

During the height of the fad in Columbus, Minter recalls, countless fathers became cigar-smokers in self defense when their sons insisted on their buying various cigars for the sake of the bands they carried. Every afternoon after school was dismissed, hundreds of little boys could be seen walking along the sidewalks of the town, eyes glued to the ground. They could recognize the commoner brands at a glance, from any distance and any angle, and these they passed without a flicker of an eye. Whenever one of them paused to roll a cigar-butt over with his toe, you could be sure he had come up with an unusual band.

CROWD ASSEMBLES



Later in the afternoon, they assembled in groups, in garages, attics, cellars, and other juvenile hideouts all over town, to display their day's acquisitions and to trade their duplicates.

A rare item, the captain reminisces, was as negotiable as so much United States currency, and often brought in trade such valued possessions as a hand-whittled slingshot, BB guns, and agate taws.

Captain Minter especially prizes a beautiful red-and-gold band from one of thee personal cigars of King Alfonso XII, bearing the king's own monogram. The band was expressly engraved for the regal Castillian humidor, and was carefully guarded in production and use, much as paper money is. He received it as a gift from an American Army Officer who had served as a military attache in Madrid, and as such was presented with the band as a mark of royal favor by one of King Alfonso's court attendants. The officer, Colonel Stanlry G. Saulnier, subsequently came to Fort Benning for duty with the Infantry School, where Captain Minter, then a moppet of ten years, heard of his prize souvenir and gave him no peace until he came across with it —brazenly using Colonel Saulnier's friendship with his parents as a means of pressure.

He declines to estimate the value of the Alfonso band in money, but recalls that his acquisition of it gave him the incalculable prestige in the neighborhood gang. He gave it an entire page in his book, and required his fellow-collecters to keep at a respectful distance when he displayed it. Several times he unhesitatingly refused offers of a brand-new bicycle in trade for his King Alfonso band. He did at once agree to an even trade for a shetland pony, but the pony-owner's father vetoed the negotiations.

Other interesting items in his collection include a set of 25 bands, each named for and picturing a president of the United States, from Washington through Wilson; a set of 52 bands displayed the 52 cards of a poker deck, from cigars which were popular in the frontier days of the west and among the sourdoughs of the Alaska gold rush; a set of 20 bonds depicting the flags of various nations, and several "jumbo" bands, eight to ten inches in length, which came from the huge cigars which were popular with a few smokers around the time of World War I.

"DOWN GOES THE CHRISTMAS MAIL" for some lucky Fort Benning soldiers as Pvt. Nicholas Kussy, of Dearborn, Mich., hands down a sack of mail from a railroad mail car to Cpl. Joseph F. Seery of 1926 Wallace Ave., New York City, while Capt. William H. O'Connell, (right) post postal officer at Fort Benning, supervises the jobs. The two enlisted men shown in the above picture are part of a crew assigned to Captain O'Connell that stay on hand at the Columbus railroad yards to unload railroad cars filled with mail the second it comes in, as a means of getting it to Fort Benning and the soldiers as quickly as possible. Benning Soldier Had Varied Film Career

He has been a sailor, a lieutenant in the Air Force, a lieutenant in the German Army, a corporal in the Canadian Army, a Yugoslav guerrilla, a Marine sergeant, a German aerial gunner, a lieutenant in the RAF and now he's a buck private in the United States Army.

The latter role, however, is the only real life role Pvt. Alton Pryor of the 176th Infantry has played. He used to be a Hollywood extra and the roles mentioned above are some of those he has played prior to assignment to The Infantry School Troops brigade.

They were roles in war films, including "Air Force", "The Moon Is Down", "Chetniks", "Assignment in Brittany", "Crash Dive", "Salute to the Marines," "As Thousands Cheer", "Three Hearts for Julia", "Action in the North Atlantic", "A Guy Named Joe" and an MGM training film.

Pvt. Pryor received his basic training at Camp Robinson, Ark., and came from that station to Fort Benning. His mother, Nancy O'Reilly, played in "The Flaming Rose", "The Bird of Paradise" and other films in the silent era.

PVT. ALTON PRYOR . . . Has Been Around

Pryor also played in "Drums Along the Mohawk", in which he was duly killed by Spencer Tracy. He was a stand-in for Alan Ladd in "This Gun for Hire", during which he did a stunt stint of jumping onto a train passing beneath a bridge.

To round out his movie career, he did some dancing in vehicles starring Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland.

Negro Ph. D. Assigned R.C.

Iowa University's first Negro graduate with a doctorate in sociology has been assigned to the classification section of the Reception Center, Colonel Ulric James, commanding officer, announced today. He is Private Clifton R. (One-y) Jones of Philadephia, Pa.

Private Jones received his Ph. D. degree in November, during the interim between his induction at Camp Forrest, Tenn., November 15, and December 5th, the day he reported for active duty at Fort Benning. As research assistant at Fisk University, Nashville, Pvt. Jones was making an intensive study of housing, employment and labor relations in connection with his field work. This study took his from Tennessee to the West Coast. He was completing this work at San Francisco, Calif., under direction of Dr. Charles H. Johnson, noted sociologist, and head of the sociology department at Fisk, when the final call from his draft board came.

WORKS IN SOCIOLOGY

"One-y", as he became popularly known in college, did his high school work at Maryland Normal school, Bowie, Md., and went to Union University, Richmond, Va., for his A. B. degree. It was at Iowa University where he settled down for his M. A. degree, which he received in 1932, and his doctorate.

His dissertation, "Social Stratification in the Negro Population" is being considered for publication, but Pvt. Jones expects to develop the study further before it is placed in book form. Just 32 years of age, the young doctor of philosophy gained many honors during his college days at Virginia University and Iowa. He was elected to membership in Pi Gamma Mu, National Social Science fraternity, one of only two Negroes to be so honored. The other was Radney Higgins of St. Louis, Mo.

ROSENWALD SCHOLAR

Pvt. Jones, in recognition of his scholastic attainment studied on a Rosenwald Fellowship during the last two years of his college work. Other connections include membership in Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, oldest Negro Greek-letter fraternity in the world; Iowa Sociology club of which he served as president until his induction; and as a staff member of The Monthly Summary of Events, periodical published by the Social Science Institute to further better race relations.

Four years after a snail shell had been placed in a glass case at the British Museum, a snail emerged.

SPIRITS IN BIVOUAC

The 176th Infantry Regiment of the Infantry School Troop Brigade "moved out" last week but it was only temporary. Leaving but a skeleton garrison in the barracks, the regiment was sent by truck to the Harmony Church area where it bivouaced and then participated in a day-long problem which included advances under cover of artillery fire.

15 Gifts Await Benning's First G. I. Babe of 1944

Everything is all set for the big Fort Benning G. I. Baby Derby which starts at midnight Friday and ends as soon as the second soldier's baby puts in his or her appearance at Station Hospital.

Fourteen business firms of Columbus have provided an array of 15 gifts for both the first baby born in 1944 to an enlisted man's wife and the parents themselves. The list of prizes is headed by a $25 war bond. An additional $7.50 in war savings stamps will be given to the runner-up.

Elsewhere in today's BAYONET is to be found a page advertisement announcing the contest sponsored by 14 Columbus firms and the complete list of rules which will govern the contest.

The list of gifts to be received by the first G. I. baby arriving in Station Hospital in 1944 and its parents includes a gallon of ice cream donated by Well's Dairy; a case of RC Cola and a case of orange Nehi from the Nehi Bottling Company; a $5 meal ticket from Smitty's Sandwich Shoppe; a shoe-repair job by the Cumbaa Shoe and Boot Shop.

MORE PRESENTS

A baby dress from the Tiny Tot Shop; two steak dinners and free cocoa charges from the Bama Club; a pair of baby shoes from Miller and Taylor Shoe company; $5 worth of baby merchandise from the City Pharmacy; a case of Clapp's Baby Food from the King Grocery Company; $3 in merchandise from Sullivan's Pharmacy; a baby ring from Paul and Jerome Jewelry company; steak dinners from Winsel's Castle; and an 8x10 oil portrait of the babe from Modern Studio.

All of which will give Little Mr. or Miss 1944 and Dad and Mom a fine start for the New Year. The winner will be announced in next week's BAYONET.

HAMMARGREN IS NAMED COLUMBUS RAIL OFFICER

The Associated Press at Washington Wednesday notified the Columbus Ledger that Major Russell J. Hammargren, Public Relations Officer at Fort Benning, had been named by Army Transportation authorities to assume the Army-railroads liaison post in Columbus. Major Hammargren said he had received no official notification of his appointment and had no comment to make pending its arrival.

Col. Thompson Retires Sunday

Colonel Frank M. Thompson, Chief of Chaplains at Fort Benning and a veteran Army chaplain for the past 27 years, will leave Benning next Sunday as he goes on leave for four months prior to his retirement from the Army on April 30, 1944.

Chaplain Thompson, who has been chief of the 40 chaplains at Benning for the past two and a half years, will be honored at a formal review next Sunday morning at the post when troops of the Station Complement pass in review before him. Chaplain and Mrs. Thompson plan to leave the post the same day.

Chaplain Thompson preached his last sermon to soldiers last Sunday at the Main Post chapel, climaxing a 27-year tour of duty which took him overseas in World War I and was followed by duty with units in this country and in Honolulu.

27-YEARS' SERVICE

As he is about to leave his post at Benning, during which time the activities of chaplains at the post have multiplied many times, Chaplain Thompson indicated that he plans to accept a pastorate as a civilian preacher when he is officially retired from the Army next year. On January 9, Chaplain Thompson will preach at the First Presbyterian Church, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Tuesday night Chaplain Thompson was feted by Colonel William H. Hobson, commanding officer of Fort Benning, and members of the Post Headquarters staff at a dinner at the Officers Club.

A native of Pittsburgh, Pa., Chaplain Thompson attended high school at Buchannon, W. Va. He graduated from Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa., and later attended Boston University and Harvard Divinity School. He also attended George Washington University, Washington, D. C., and the University of Honolulu, T. H.

Chaplain Thompson served at Fort Moultrie, S. C., as a first lieutenant in 1917, preparatory to going overseas in 1918-1919. When he returned from World War I, Chaplain Thompson's as-

War Loan Starts Jan. 18

Plans are being completed at Fort Benning for the Fourth War Loan drive from January 18 through February 15, Major George Fink, post war bond officer, announced today.

The various units stationed on the post have been organized through their war bond officers for the drive, and Major Fink said that it is the hope of officials that personal, both military and civilian, will continue to respond as well as in the past.

Major Fink pointed to the fact that during the Third War Loan Fort Benning invested $800,000 cash in bonds and subscribed an additional $270,000.

The qutota for the entire nation in the forthcoming drive is fourteen billion dollars. The three-point program for Benning and other military installations is the attainment of at least 90 per cent of all civilian personnel subscribing the minimum of at least 10 per cent of the gross payroll; all military personnel initiating an increase in Class "B" allotments, and all personnel, civllian and officers, purchasing at least one extra bond for cash during the period of the drive.

River Crossing Amazes Solon

Congressman Hadwen C. Fuller from New York State is back in Washington with a pretty good sample of how the Americans got across the Volturno River in their drive on Rome.

Here for a visit to his son, Cpl. Robert C. Fuller of the 5th Training Regiment, Congressman Fuller was the guest of Lt. Col. C. A. Wall, Director of Training of the Station Complement. During the course of his visit, he followed a brief itinerary of Infantry School problems, one of which was the Attack on a River Line.

He saw troops cross the Chattahoochee in assault boats to establish a bridgehead after which engineers constructed pontoon bridges across the stream for the passage of troops and equipment. Big 105 howitzers were floated across the stream while planes simulated the strafing and bombing of troops making the crossing.

"Casualties" were suffered and were "treated" by Medical Corpsmen and prisoners were captured.

"Such battle realism," said Congressman Fuller, "is bound to pay dividends in the training of soldiers and officer candidates. It is always a source of gratification to see the splendid manner in which our men are being prepared for battle. It should be a comfort to the folks at home to know that their boys are being taught to defend themselves in the finest military school in the world.

"What they learn at The Infantry School will go into the lessons taught soldiers at other camps and training centers. The men who learn their lessons well are the men with the best chances of survival. The government is certainly giving them every opportunity to learn them well from the best of instructors."

Happy New Year to You All!

HAPPY NEW YEAR, EVERYBODY! I am Marti Minter, and I am 18 months old. I thought I would get the "jump" on everyone on this "Happy New Year" business, so I asked my dad, Captain John E. Minter, Jr., of the Parachute School, to get me a 'chute for the purpose. In behalf of the BAYONET, I express the hope that 1944 will be the happiest year ever for all of you and may it bring final and complete victory for the United Nations cause.

Ft. Benning to Observe National Day of Prayer

In line with President Roosevelt's proclamation designating New Year's Day as a national day of prayer, special prayer services will be held at 10:30 a. m. Saturday in the Main Post Chapel, Chaplain Frank M. Thompson, chief of chaplains, announces.

Chaplain Alfred L. Pollock will be in charge of the services. The program will include the reading of the president's proclamation by Chaplain Frederick W. Helfer, First Student Training Regiment, TIS; prayer offering by Jewish Chaplain Samson Aaron Shain; the sermon meditation by Chaplain Arnold M. Lewis of the 176th Infantry; and the benediction by Chaplain George A. Ritchey of the ASTP. Special music for the service is being prepared.

The services will be non-denominational, and all personnel is invited to attend. A large attendance is expected in view of the fact that personnel of service schools of the Army Ground Forces, including the Infantry School and Parachute School will be in recess throughout the day on January 1.

"At the end of the year 1943,

Here's One Sans Excuse To Change His Yule Gift

Sgt. Soddy Haines, orchestra leader of the Academic Regiment, is an accommodating fellow. When Cpl. Eddie Carr of Headquarters Company in this Infantry School regiment, asked Haines to purchase a Christmas present for a married friend, Soddy shopped around and finally purchased a vegetable cooker.

"Thanks," said Carr. "Now will you please take it home and wrap it up pretty like?"

Soddy complied and when he returned the package, suggested to Carr that he might as well deliver it to Carr's married friend.

"I can take care of that," said Carr. "Here you are Soddy. Merry Christmas."

Barber Buys Big, Big Bond

The battalion barber of the 709th Tank Battalion, Infantry School troops, entered the headquarters of the unit a few days ago, looking for assistance.

"I want," said E. F. Presley, of Columbus, "some help in my Christmas shopping."

"It's a little out of our line," he was told, "but no task is too great for a tanker to tackle. Just what is the nature of the gift you'd like to buy?"

"A bond, a war bond," the tonsorial artist, who has served in the Sand Hill area for several years, replied.

"We're making a specialty of War Bonds these days," the battalion bond officer told him. "We have some nice ones at $18.75 and also some at——".

"I want a real good one—say about a thousand dollars."

He got it—pronto. It was the second $1,000 bond Mr. Presley has purchased.

ISSC Changes Name Saturday

The words Service Command will be eliminated from the designation "The Infantry School Service Command" on January 1, it was announced at the Headquarters of The Infantry School today.

The allotment of grades and authorized strength of the ISSC along with all of its functions, will be transferred to The Infantry School on that date.

In January, 1941, The Infantry School Detachment was re-designated as The Infantry School Service Command and was known as the Fourth Corps Area. The designation of the latter was subsequently changed to Fourth Service Command.

In recommending this change School authorities pointed out the confusion resulting from applying the term, "Service Command", which is Army Service Forces terminology, to The Infantry School, which is an Army Ground Force installation.

It's all a matter of changing the designation of units in The Infantry School and none of the personnel will be affected.

SSO Announces Itineraries For Lee, Louis

Schedules for the one-day appearances at Fort Benning of Sgt. Joe Louis, world's heavyweight boxing champion who visits the post on January 3rd, and Gypsy Rose Lee, who made the "strip tease" a million dollar profession and who comes to Benning on January 5, were announced today by Lt. Col. Charles C. Finnegan, special service officer of the post.

Sergeant Louis, whose full name is Joe Louis Barrow, will visit the Station Hospital from 1 until 2:30 on the afternoon of January 3, and will give a physical fitness talk and demonstration in Doughboy Stadium from 3 until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. In case of inclement weather, Colonel Finnegan said, the Doughboy Stadium appearance will be moved to the Main Theater.

BIG EXHIBITION

Climax of the visit of Joe Louis and his entourage will be reached that night with a big exhibition in the Harmony Church Sports Arena. The program will get under way promptly at 7 o'clock, when six boxing bouts between Fort Benning soldiers start off the evening. These bouts will be followed by a short talk on physical fitness by Sergeant Louis.

Next will be an exhibition bout between Cpl. Walker Smith, better known as "Sugar Ray Robinson," and Pvt. George Wilson, also known as "Jackie Wilson," both members of Louis' exhibition team which is touring Army posts throughout the country.

As a grand finale, Joe Louis will show the style which has made him the greatest boxer in the world by giving an exhibition bout with Sgt. George Nicholson.

GYPSY AT THEATER

Miss Lee, who arrives at the post late in the afternoon on January 5th, will give two performances during her brief stay at the post, both of them in the Main Theater. The one-hour performances are scheduled to begin at 7:30 and at 9 o'clock. Miss Lee, who will spend the short time between her arrival in the afternoon and her first performance in the evening with soldiers who will assist her, will leave Fort Benning early the following morning for Hollywood.

Any changes which may have to be made in the plans of the tentative schedules of Joe Louis or Gypsy Rose Lee will be announced later, Colonel Finnegan said.

Yule Broadcast Signal Success

Termed the most ambitious radio broadcasting program ever attempted by an Army installation, and the first time in history that a radio station ever turned over all of its local time to an Army Post, Fort Benning took to the air Christmas Day for more than seven full hours over radio station WRBL, Columbus, with some of the programs also carried over WGPC in Albany, Ga.

Broadcasting began with a special midnight mass from the Italian Prisoner of War Camp on Christmas Eve, then resumed at 7 a. m. on Christmas morning with more religious ceremonies and continued at intervals all through the day. Choral groups, bands, dramatic skits, Christmas readings and other events, including greetings from commanding officers of large units and mayors of Columbus and Phenix City, were on the different programs, which concluded at 11 p. m. EWT on Christmas Day.

The entire schedule was arranged through co-operation of the Post Public Relations Office under Major Russell J. Hammargren and WRBL, of which James Woodruff, Jr., is president. Mr. Woodruff proposed turning over all of the local time available on Christmas Day, the station using only CBS broadcasts. Local advertisers heartily endorsed the plan to bring the Spirit of Christmas at Fort Benning to the radio public, and the Public Relations Office completed the arrangements on the post.

To accomplish the feat, Col Alexander W. Young, chief of the Signal Branch, set up what amounted to a network of telephone connections to carry the radio impulses to WRBL's transmitters and Lt. Col. Edward L. Littleton, post engineer, arranged to have electrical outlets available. Remote control broadcasts were made from the Station Hospital, Service Clubs No. 1 and 2 and No. 5; a mess hall in the 131st Infantry Regiment; the Harmony Church Sports Arena and the outdoor chapel at the Prisoner of War camp.

Lt. Cagle Named Aide-de-Camp To Gen. Silvester

Lt. Charles D. Cagle of Decatur, Ga., has been announced as aide-de-camp to Maj. Gen. Lindsay McDonald Silvester, commanding the 7th Armored division.

Lt. Cagle was commissioned a second lieutenant, Infantry, last March at Fort Knox, Ky., and attended a tank maintenance course there between May 10 and July 19 of last year. He is also a graduate of The Field Artillery School at Fort Sill, Okla.

TIS Mr. Sergeant Ends 30-Year Army Career

After thirty years in uniform, M. Sgt. Edward J. O'Hara, of "D" Company, Academic Regiment, one of the ranking master sergeants in the U. S. Army, has been retired and will be advanced on the retirement list of The Infantry School to the rank of captain, in which capacity he served during the first World War.

Originally from Hazelton, Pa., O'Hara enlisted on March 3, 1911, in the cavalry, rising to the rank of sergeant during his first hitch and seeing service on the Mexican border in 1914. In May, 1917, he was commissioned as a veterinary surgeon, and assigned to purchase animals in the northwest territory. Captain O'Hara was later an instructor in equitation for the 12,000 medical officers at Camp Greenleaf, Ga.

In July, 1918, he left the service but could not get far away from either the Army or horses, for almost immediately he accepted a position in the Remount Depot, Fort Meade, Md., where he was in charge of the animals of the First Division and instructed riding classes of Army wives and children. While there he met the later-to-be generals, Eisenhower and Patton, through whose interest he re-entered the service in 1920. At first he was in charge of 65 animals at Fort Meade, and then joined the Tank School. He was the first enlisted man assigned to the Automotive Section of The Infantry School.

"The old colonel handed me the key and I went looking for the building," is the way Sgt. O'Hara recalls the official opening in 1937 of the section which is today one of the biggest installations at Fort Benning.

During recent years, O'Hara has been assigned to the Automotive Section, and has lived on the post with his wife, the former Emma Gittins, also of Hazelton, Pa. The sergeant's son, William J., now resides in Maryland, while his daughter, Mary G., is connected with the British Admiralty in Washington, D. C.

M. Sgt. O'Hara, who describes his first love as horsemanship, is also a lover of deep-sea fishing, which is the main reason he is heading for Miami, Fla.

Italians Build 'Star of Hope'

Italian prisoners of war at Fort Benning have erected a Star of Hope, depicting their faith in the future, which was built in honor of Colonel Frank M. Thompson, chief of chaplains at Fort Benning, who will retire from active duty in the near future.

Chaplain Thompson, a veteran of 27 years army duty, dedicated the Star of Hope before a group of prisoners of war. The Star of Hope is a concrete star built around a water fountain at the prisoner of war compound.

Dedicating the monument, Chaplain Thompson said, "I dedicate this fountain the Star of Hope in the name of God to all prisoners of war and to all the unfortunates of the earth."

With Chaplain Thompson at the ceremony was Colonel George Cheschier, commanding officer of the prisoner of war camp, and Lieut. Roderick MacEachen, Catholic chaplain for the prisoners of war.

The fountain and the star were built by the prisoners themselves, many of them having been former artisans in their native land.

TOMORROW PAY-DAY

Soldiers at Fort Benning will be able to "ring out the old and ring in the new" next Friday, December 31, with the ringing jingle of coins and the rustle of folding money—for the last day of 1943 will be pay-day on the post.

Officers Serve ASTP Men Christmas Dinner

"I Want The Waiter With The Water," gleefully howled the ASTPeeWees of the 14th Company, 5th Regiment Christmas Day when they were greeted by the sight of their company officers, decked out in white mess jackets and with napkins over their arms, proudly bearing platters heaped high with steaming turkey for Christmas Dinner.

The chant soon turned from "Wanting The Waiter With The Water" to "How about some more turkey," "How about some more cranberry sauce," "Pickles," "Spuds," and the orders began to come faster and faster until the officers were virtually running from the serving tables to the tables where the men were seated, replenishing the empty platters and bowls of the trainees.

The idea of using the officers to wait on the trainees for Christmas Dinner originated with Capt. Charles Ellison, genial CO of the 14th Company, and was enthusiastically greeted by the officers themselves, and even more enthusiastically by the enlisted men, as evidenced by their ability to keep every bowl and platter on the tables in a state of constant emptiness.

Dressed in traditional white coats borrowed from the cooks only after the latter had extracted a promise (in writing) that the officers would pay for the laundry, the officers submitted in good grace to the laughs, jeers and jibes of the trainees until the last button had popped and the first trainee started turning slightly green from eating much, too much.

3rd Composite Squadron Captures Kepner Trophy

The Third Composite Squadron, Lawson Field, has been awarded the possession of the Kepner Trophy for Proficiency for the month of November.

In a colorful review ceremony last week, Col. Robert M. Lee, Chief of Staff of the 1st Tactical Air Division, of which the 3rd is a part, presented the award in behalf of Brig. Gen. Ralph F. Stearley, Commanding General of the Division. Col. Frederick A. Bacher, Air Officer at the Infantry School, and Col. Clifford T. Kershaw, Chief of the Tactical Section Infantry School, were also present to witness the ceremony and review the troops.

The Kepner Trophy, a beautiful hand engraved plaque, is awarded each month to the outstanding unit in the 1st Tactical Air Division, and it is named after Maj. Gen. William E. Kepner, the first Commanding Officer of the 1st Air Support Command which later became the 1st Tactical Air Division. Any unit winning the trophy three consecutive months gains permanent possession of the plaque.

SERVES TIS

The 3rd Composite Squadron, commanded by Major William J. James, is the school troops squadron for the Infantry School. Formerly known as the 7th Reconnaissance Sq. and 7th Observation Squadron, the 3rd Composite Sq. is equipped with bomber, fighter and liaison types of missions in conjunction with the problems of the School and does a realistic job of air support for the Ground Forces. Among the missions flown by this versatile squadron are photographic reconnaissance flights, low altitude strafing, low and high altitude bombing, skip bombing, dive bombing, fighter reconnaissance, liaison and courier flights, communication missions, night reconnaissance and in short, almost any type of work which the Army Air Forces are called upon to do in any theater of war. Thus the name "composite" as distinguished from "fighter, reconnaissance, or bomb squadrons." The 3rd has a bit of everything.

UNIT COMMENDED

In a short talk following the Review, Colonel Lee said: "It gives me great pleasure to present this award to this squadron on behalf of General Stearley. In the short while the 3rd has been part of the 1st Tactical Air Division, you have shown the sort of stuff you are made of. This squadron stands head and shoulders above the rest in operational proficiency."

Major James, in accepting the trophy, stated that he was determined that the 3rd Composite Squadron would win the award at least two more successive months so that the award would become the permanent property of the organization.

IN HAWAII

From 1938 until 1940, Chaplain Thompson served as divisional chaplain of the infantry at Schofield Barracks, Honolulu, after which he was assigned as chaplain to the Fourth Motorized Division at Fort Benning in 1941. He subsequently was named post chaplain here.

Chaplain Thompson, who was made a lieutenant colonel in 1937, recently was promoted to full colonel.

While at Benning, Chaplain Thompson frequently has preached in churches in Columbus and

Major Byrne, New Executive, 3rd Regiment

Appointment of Major Paul C. Byrne as executive officer of the Third Student Training Regiment of The Infantry School to succeed Major Jerome G. Taylor was announced in special orders issued by the regiment late last week. Major Byrne had been serving as assistant executive officer of the regiment for several weeks.

Major Byrne entered active service upon the federalization of the National Guard regiment with which he was associated in California and spent close to a year with that unit in the Hawaiian Islands. He was assigned as a company commander when the outfit went overseas and subsequently rose to regimental S-4 and, with his promotion in rank, was named a battalion commander.

Returning to this country, he was assigned to The Infantry School and, in September, was assigned to this regiment. In November he was appointed executive officer of the Fourth Battalion, later being relieved of these duties to go to Regimental Headquarters. Major Byrne's home is San Marino, Calif., and in civilian life he is a bank manager and bank examiner. He studied law at the University of Nebraska.

Major Taylor, whom he succeeds, has been appointed commanding officer of the Fifth Battalion. Identified with this regiment almost since its inception, Major Taylor formerly served as intelligence and public relations officer and assumed executive officer's duties during the last week in August.

which has not only made manifest the devotion and courage of our nation's sons but has also crowned their efforts with brilliant success on every battlefront, it is fitting that we set aside a day of prayer to give thanks to Almighty God for His constant providence over us in every hour of national peace and national peril.

"At the beginning of the new year 1944, which now lies before us, it is fitting that we pray to be preserved from false pride of accomplishment and from filful neglect of the last measure of public and private sacrifice necessary to attain final victory and peace.

"May we humbly seek strength and guidance for the problems of widening warfare and for the responsibilities of increasing victory. May we find in the infinite mercy of the God of our fathers some measure of comfort for the personal anxieties of separation and anguish of bereavement.

"Now, therefore, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, do hereby appoint Saturday, the first day of January, 1944, as a day of prayer for all of us, in our churches, in our homes, and in our hearts, those of us who walk in the familiar paths of home, those who fight on the wide battlefields of the world, those who go down to the sea in ships, and those who rise in the air on wings."

The special Day of Prayer services will be transcribed and broadcast at 11:30 o'clock, EWT, over Radio Station WRBL, it was announced Wednesday.

COL. ROBERT M. LEE PRESENTING Kepner award for proficiency to representatives of 3rd Composite Sq. (Special) at ceremonies held at Lawson Field. L. to R.; Clifford T. Kershaw, chief of Tactical Section Infantry School; Lt. Hendricks, aide to Col. Lee; Col. Robert H. Lee, chief of staff, I Technical Air division; Capt. Alden, medical officer; Lt. M. M. Rudich, executive officer, and Lt. M. R. Williams, adjutant of the 3rd Composite Sq.

THE ABOVE TOKEN of appreciation was received this week by the Fort Benning chapter of the American Red Cross following the visit of the mobile blood bank to the post December 15-17. Benning soldiers and civilians at that time donated a record 651 pints of blood for the Red Cross to turn over to the service medical officers. It will be used in saving the lives of countless soldiers wounded on the field of battle which otherwise might have been lost.

Col. Syndenham Given New Post

After six years of service with the Infantry Board at the Headquarters of the Infantry School, Fort Benning, Col. Harold G. Syndenham has left the post for a new and important assignment. But the military Syndenhams will carry on at Fort Benning in the person of Pvt. Gloria F. Syndenham of WAC Post Detachment No. 1 who is now on duty at Post Headquarters.

Col. Syndenham's father was the late Lt. Col. H. Hugh Syndenham, USA.

The present Colonel Syndenham began his military career in 1916 at the age of 18. His daughter, Pvt. Syndenham, began her military life at birth. She was born at Fort Missoula, Montana, and shared the life of her parents at Army posts in the Philippines, at the Presidio in San Francisco and at Fort Warren, Wyo. She attended McMurray College in Illinois and prior to her enlistment in the WACs last September, was employed by the Bureau of Economic Warfare in Washington.

SERVED IN FRANCE

Colonel Syndenham attended school at Sacramento, Cal., and at the University of California. He has seen service on the Mexican border (1916) and in France with the 165th Machine Gun battalion during World War I. He was appointed a temporary lieutenant in 1918, a rank which was made permanent the following year. In 1919, he was discharged and but after an absence of a year, returned to active duty and was sent to the Infantry School as a student.

Upon completing his course, he was assigned to the 41st Infantry at Fort Lewis and a short time later began a tour of duty at Fort Missoula which lasted five years. After that, he was sent to the Philippines for two years. Next followed a six year tour at the Presidio. Three years at Fort Warren preceded his return to Fort Benning for duty on the Infantry board.

As a member of the board, he designed the M-1 helmet now in use and about 35 other items.

An interesting sidelight in the careers of the military Syndenhams occurred in Atlanta. Col. Syndenham, en route to Fort Benning, received a telephone call from his daughter whom he thought to be in Benning.

"Where can I see you?" she asked.

"Where are you?" he queried.

"Just across the street in the post office. I just joined the WACs."

AER Question-box

Many letters are received by the Army Emergency Relief. We are on the Main Post at Fort Benning. The questions and answers are published in this column, a regular Sunday feature of this Newspaper, because they are believed to be of general interest to dependents of those in the military service. Send your questions to the Army Emergency Relief Office, Fort Benning, Ga.

Q. My husband is a staff sergeant, and we have one child. We were separated six months ago. He is drawing commutation of quarters and has made me an allotment of only $40 per month. Is it possible for me to file a claim under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Dependency Act and receive more money?

A. Yes, as long as you are not divorced you can file a claim with the Office of Dependency Benefits and after providing the necessary proof of your relationship, receive a Class A allotment of $80 per month ($50 for you, and $30 for the child.

Q. I have been given a ten-day furlough, effective 29 December, 1943. I will not be paid until 10 January, 1944, and I do not have enough money to make the trip to my home, which is in Texas. Would it be possible for me to borrow enough money from the Army Emergency Relief to pay for a round trip ticket to Dallas?

A. No, it is against the policy of the Army Emergency Relief to loan any money for furloughs or passes. The funds of the Army Emergency Relief are limited, and we feel that our resources should be conserved for emergencies of a more serious nature.

Q. I am a lieutenant and I am on three months' temporary duty at Fort Benning. My wife has appendicitis and her doctor advises an emergency operation. It is impossible for me to get her into the Station Hospital, and the operation and hospitalization will cost approximately $175. I have received only half of my pay for the past two mnths due to a mixup on an allotment, and my funds are insufficient to cover the necessary expenses. Would it be possible to borrow enough from the Army Emergency Relief to defray the expense?

A. Yes, in many cases where the dependents of a soldier need hospitalization and the soldier is short of funds, the Army Emergency Relief is glad to assist.

Q. I am a private in the Infantry, and have just received orders transferring me to Fort Lewis, Washington. I have not been paid in two months and I do not have sufficient funds to provide transportation for my wife. Could I borrow enough money from the Army Emergency Relief to provide transportation for her?

A. No, the Army Emergency Relief does not loan money to furnish transportation for wives or dependents of soldiers in order that they may follow the soldier from camp to camp.

Civilian Employes Recall Corregidor, Georgia Mud

The modern warehouses and paved streets of Fort Benning are a far cry from the conditions that Lawrence L. Woolbright, Administrative Officer of the Quartermaster Property Section, found when he first came here 21 years ago.

At that time, there was only one small warehouse on the post and another was being built. In rainy weather, anyone who wanted to go from one building to the other had to wear hip boots to make his way through the mud. Warehouse space was so scarce that property was scattered all over the post wherever adequate shelter could be found.

OFFICE EXPANDS

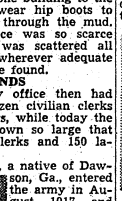
The property office then had only half a dozen civilian clerks and six laborers, while today the activity has grown so large that there are 50 clerks and 150 laborers.

Mr. Woolbright, a native of Dawson, Ga., entered the army in August, 1917, and was assigned to the quartermaster at Camp Wheeler, Ga. He was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Quartermaster Corps at Camp Johnston, Fla., and then served as base quartermaster at Edgewood Arsenal, Md., and as wool purchasing quartermaster at Boston. At the time of his discharge in November, 1920, he was stationed at the Atlanta Supply Depot.

WOOLBRIGHT

He resumed work at the depot as a civil service employee about the 1st of December, 1920, remaining there until the depot was closed in 1922, when he was transferred to Benning as principal clerk of the quartermaster property office.

SURVIVES TWO FIRES



In the years since then, the property office has survived two fires that destroyed all property records. The last of these was in the fall of 1939, during a period when the office, without any extra clerks or laborers, was struggling to keep pace with an expansion that had more than tripled the post's population of 6,000.

Mr. Woolbright is married and has four children. His 22-year-old son is an aviation cadet at Nashville, Tenn.

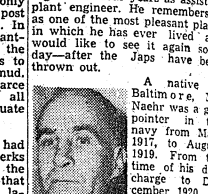
The family lives at 1122 Lawyers Lane, Columbus.

Harry F. Naehr, superintendent of plants for the Post Engineer, Fort Benning, has more than just the obvious reasons for wanting to see Corregidor recaptured from the Japanese.

Mr. Naehr was stationed at Corregidor for four years as assistant plant engineer. He remembers it as one of the most pleasant places in which he has ever lived and would like to see it again some day—after the Japs have been thrown out.

NAEHR

A native of Baltimore, Mr. Naehr was a gun pointer in the navy from May, 1917, to August 1919. From the time of his discharge to December 1920, he was an engineer in the merchant marine, and entered civil service in January 1921, as engineer in charge of operation and maintenance of the State, War, and Navy Department buildings in Washington.



After three years in that job, he went to the Army Medical Center as chief engineer, a position he held until he went to Corregidor in 1934. He came to Fort Benning in September 1938, at the conclusion of his Corregidor service.

PRISONS PRODUCE FOR WAR

Between August, 1942, and November, 1943, state prisons produced war-important industrial goods worth $9,880,268, including items never before considered possible for prison production—assault boats, shell cases, bomb crates, submarine and cargo nets, etc.

Soldier Draws Long Sentence For ODB Fraud

Five years' imprisonment at hard labor, dishonorable discharge from the Army, and forfeiture of all pay and allowances was the sentence imposed by a military court in the New York area upon an Army private who attempted to get a family allowance for a person not eligible to receive it.

Details of the case were revealed by Brig. Gen. H. N. Gilbert, USA, Director of the Office of Dependency Benefits, an activity of the Army Service Forces, in a dispatch to the Bayonet.

"This is the most severe sentence yet imposed for fraud in connection with family allowances," General Gilbert stated.

"The soldier was charged with violation of the 94th Article of War, in that he knowingly executed a fradulent affidavit so as to assist a women whom he described as his wife in obtaining a family allowance."

Evidence developed in the cast revealed that the soldier, who had been married for a number of years and had deserted his wife and young son in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1937, entered the Army under an assumed name in January, 1942.

BIGAMOUS MARRIAGE

In November 1941, however, he had gone through a bigamous marriage ceremony with a girl in Newark, N. J. Soon after entering the Army, he applied for a family allowance for this girl, naming her as his wife. The allowance was authorized and paid. As soon as fraud was established, the ODB discontinued her family allowance. Refund of payments to which she had not been entitled will be required by the ODB in accordance with the law, General Gilbert revealed.

"There was no evidence, however, that this girl was a party to the fraud, and she has not been prosecuted," the General added

A family allowance has been authorized for the soldier's lawful wife and their child, it was stated, and this allowance is being paid. They still reside in Philadelphia.

DESERTED WIFE CLEVER

Through the ingenuity of the deserted wife, the ODB first gained information leading to the soldier's arrest and conviction, according to General Gilbert. She arranged to have a picture of him placed in a publication under a "missing man" caption. The picture was recognized, and the wife was informed as to the whereabouts of the missing husband by an interested reader. She then submitted an applicaiton for a family allowance for herself and child, based upon the service of the man she believed to be her husband.

An investigation by the ODB's Field Investigations Branch proved her to be right, and the soldier was brought to justice.

"The ODB maintains the Field Investigations Branch, with its network of regional investigating officers throughout the country, in order to catch up with attempts to defraud the Government," General Gilbert pointed out.

"Chiselers can't win," he said. "We're here to see that they don't get paid."

TPS Formally Opens New PO

The New Parachute School post office was formerly opened recently with the first stamp being sold to General Ridgely Gaither, Commandant of the Infantry School.

The post office is located in building 2046 near the corner of Belko Street, Parachute Schcool area. The building is known as a "T" building and will house three sections. Unit No. 11 of the United States post office, The Army Directory Service of the Parachute School and the mail room of the Parachute School.

In the post office section there are six service windows for the transaction of stamp sales, registry, insured and C. O. D. business, money order business and a window for the sale of War Bonds and War Savings Stamps.

The Army Directory Service will handle handle all mail incorrectly or indefinitely addressed to The Parachute School.

The mail room will handle all incoming and outgoing mail to and from the Parachute School.

The facilities provided will be ample to care for the needs of all the personnel in the Parachute School area, and will be a decided convenience to the personnel as the Fort Benning post office is more than two miles from the Parachute School area.

The postal facilities are under the general supervision of Captain Christian M. Imhoff, GD, acting adjutant of the Parachute School and 1st Lt. John A. Kelley, AGD, postal officer of the Parachute School.

NEW YEAR'S CURFEW

40th Tank Bn. Gives Yule Dance

The enlisted men of the 40th Tank Bn. held the first dance since their activation last week in the 7th Armored Service club with 150 women from Columbus and West Point, Ga., as well as wives, and WACs from other parts of the post.

Cpl. John D. Guarascio, of the battalion, and Pvt. Violet A. Crandall of the WAC Det. Station Complement, Section I main post, took top honors as well as a $25 War Bond for winning a jitterbug contest staged during the course of the evening. However, Cpl. Guarascio offered the bond to Pvt. Crandall. At the close of the dance another bond given to Cpl. Guarascio for his part in winning the jitterbug contest.

Talent Revue Features Truck Regiment Birthday

The Truck Regiment, The Infantry School, observed its first anniversary by presenting a regimental talent revue at the Sports Arena before a large crowd of regimental personnel and invited guests.

Using one end of the huge building for the program, the program committe presented the talent in the form of a radio broadcast and, before the microphone, there appeared variety and novelty acts from every battalion within the regiment. The First Battalion presented a master of ceremonies, Sergeant Wilbur Wyatt, who in turn gave a sketch of his battalion's activity and then introduced a unit quartet, led by S-Sgt. Evans. Topping off this group's offering, Pvt. Burgin Prather, comedian extraordinary, kept the crowd in a state of laughter with his funny antics.

The Second Battalion, emceed by S-Sgt. Robert L. Stinson, presented Corporals Alfred Washington and Curtis Lucius in a guitar duet assisted by Bass Violinist Bennie Williams, S-Sgt. Isaac J. Royal thrilled the audience with his rendition of "After Hours," that famed swing piano classic, and Sgt. Stinson gave amazingly impersonations of President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Winston Churchill, and some of the Nazi leaders.

THE FOUR ROCKETS

First Sergeant Victor Lyons introduced the Third Battalion program hi-lighted by Pianist Larry Reid and Sergeants Cecil Draper, Chester Jones, Corporal Wilson Sparks and Director Ernest Baskette of the Four Rockets, vocal quartet, who sang several of Corporal Baskette's arrangements.

The Fourth Battalion, with First Sergeant John F. McConico as a speaker presented a compact program interspersed with comedy and dancing. Participants on this portion of the evening's program were entertainers Lawrence Long, Lewis Bibbs, Wallace Powell, and Jessie Salters.

Other parts of the program featured Chaplain Marlin Hendrieth, Lieutenant Robert C. Long and T-Sgt. Colonius Davis. PFC William H. Boyd, of the Special Service Office, instoduced the program and Colonel Frank J. Vida, the Regimental Commander, made the closing remarks during which he complimented the entire personnel on the year's advancement and read letters of greeting and commendation from Major General C. H. Bonesteel, comamndant of the Infantry School, and Brigadier General Henry P. Perrine, commanding general of School Troops Brigade.

DANCE BAND PLAYS

The concluding numbers on the program were furnished by the newly organized "Rocket" dance band under the direction of Sgt. Harry M. Smyles. The composition of the band is as follows: Reeds—Pvt. Ernest Dixon, PFC. Wilbur V. Hollowell, Sgt. Harry M. Smyles; Brass—Pvt. Lewellyn Rivers, Cpl. Jesse Warner, T-5th George Parker, Sgt. William J. Officer, and Corporal Kenneth Parkus. Rhythm Section—S-Sgt. Isaac J. Royal, Corporal William V. Stewart, Corporal Bennie Williams, Corporal Alfred J. Washington and PFC Curtis Lucius.

Adding greatly to the spirit of the Organization Day celebration was the presence of a group of hostesses from the USO YMCA in Columbus. They along with several members of the WAC Detachment, Section II, Fort Benning Headquarters, were presented Christmas gifts by the regiment at the end of the program.

24 - HOUR SERVICE

The S. R. O. sign is out. The curtain is rising—on a brand-new production, "America, 1944." There are no programs to this play, but plenty of rash predictions. "It will be wonderful" bubble the optimists, "all about victory and demobilization and peace." "It will be dull and tiring" warn the pessimists, "nothing but work and sacrifices and heart-ache."

It might surprise you to know what it really will be. It will be exactly what you make it. Because you are one of the actors in this play. The stage is empty, waiting for you to take your place. Waiting for you to make it into the kind of play you want it to be. You know your part, you know what you must do. The world, and the generations to come are your audience. Get along. And make it good.

"Those who say that the casualties on Tarawa were too high . . . should realize that the Marines on Tarawa killed four Japs for each Marine that died. We lost approximately 1,000 Marines but the Japs lost everybody they had. . . . In an offensive operation you should expect to lost more than the enemy . . . so we got Tarawa cheaper than we had any right to expect."

Not Who's Right But What's Right New Year Guide

Just as America was wrested by steady hand and clear eye from the wilderness of 1620, so America today must be won afresh. Not from the tangle of scrub oak, and pine and fallen trees that covered the continent three centuries ago, but from a tangle of ideas. An underbrush of ideologies has sprung up to choke the American trail—un-American, unsound, un-Christian theories, which in 1944 will need clearing up.

Ahead of us this coming year there lies a thicket of conflicting and high-running emotions, leftist and rightist trends, selfish pressure groups.

The keep edge of our own ideas and ideals has been dulled by the increasing materialism of the last two decades. The American axe needs sharpening. We need to get back the old sense of right and wrong. Then we will see the way through the confusion of gnarled and poisonous ideas that divide us. Then we can hew a clear path of calm judgment, impassioned only by true caring for each other and this land.

Most of all we need the spirit of the pioneer and master woodsman who blazed our American trail through war and disunity eighty years ago. He was the rail splitter who pushed ahead towards a new day "with malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right."

Not who's right but what's right—"as God gives us to see the right." This can be our unfailing compass in next year's overhanging tangle of emotion and ideas. With this illumination as our guide, in America's Christian tradition, we can come out of the woods on the other side of war and post-war reconstruction, finding we have blazed the trail to a permanent new world.

Army Builds Men Physically, Mentally, and Spiritually

Outside of the physical aspect of the title, have you readers stopped to think how the Army builds men spiritually and mentally as well?

I have been taking stock, mulling over my two years in the Army to see just what being a soldier has done for me. Frankly, I have uncovered a vast quantity of wonderful things and I'd like to pass them on to you. Perhaps many of you are worrying needlessly about husbands, brothers and sweethearts in the service of our country, and I should like to show you how much better off any of them shall be when they come back to you. True, some of them will return through the fortunes of war, physically broken, but even those men shall have realized the reason for their very existence, and their spirits shall raise them above mere physical suffering.

Let me go back to a peaceful world, before Pearl Harbor, and day-dream a bit about our easy going ways, and our complacency. I, like so many other boys, was going about my daily tasks, not so much as giving a thought to the wonderful life I had, thinking of it as something that would go on from minute to minute, until one day, with practically no change in the set routine, I should in some form or other, meet death. I liked people and was pleased to think that they in turn liked me. I valued friendship, but I valued many other things more, including money, and the so evident material things of the world. Then, on December 7, 1941, our little world was taken for a little ride, and I who had been in the Army since October under Selective Service, and who had just been thinking of the Army in terms of time which had to be served, as a prisoner would serve out a compulsory sentence, suddenly began to perk up and think about what all this meant to me, and look at my fellow soldiers as brothers, and as close to me as members of my own family, closer, in a sense, because they and I would be living in closer companionship until all this would be over. I found out many things in the next two years, and if I may, would like to present a few to you.

I had always been given as the definition for friend one who would tell you your faults, and though he or she would commend you on occasion for your good qualities, would be comparatively stingy with praise because of the harm it does. Well, in the Army I found that your best friends will take you to task for the least little step out of line, and will ride the living daylights out of you, until finally, because there is no course open to you if you wish to, as we say, "get on the beam," you change for the better.

You learn a deep feeling of tolerance for all nations and creeds, since you perhaps sleep between a Chinese and Greek. You learn not to look with your nose in the air at a boy from Tennessee hills, because he might like to go without shoes. He perhaps never wore any until he came into the Army. You glow with pride when you hear a boy of one religious group patiently admonishing one of his own group who had fallen by the wayside, to take account of himself and go back to church.

You get an inner warmth when you hear the fellow next to you, perhaps crying himself to sleep at night. You don't consider him weak, because you have found that even though he might have been an all-American quarterback at a very famous university, he is showing you inadvertently that he is all man, and that his humaness will make American a greater land than it already is. You don't criticize a man for displaying weakness; all of us are weak in one thing or another. You don't laugh at a boy, who, because he has had no education, is labeled by his buddies due to certain idiosyncracies, as a "character." No, you help him, and try to point out how many things he too, may learn by keeping his eyes and ears open. You learn that no matter how disreputable a person may be, he has fine points which have only to be uncovered. A kind word from you may even do the uncovering.

You learn that even the weakest person has an inborn sense of honor, and he can be made to change overnight if given a chance to put that honor to the test. You learn what makes that lump come into your throat when you hear the bugler blow "Retreat." You learn why you want to go out on the field of battle and fight with your life, as you listen to the National Anthem. These and many more discoveries are yours, and can be had by every boy or man in the service of his country.

You people at home; if you have a member of your family whom you have given to Uncle Sam, don't worry about him. He'll come back a better and bigger man for his little separation from you, and the next time you look at an Army poster which state, "The Army Builds Men," rest assured that they mean your boy, whether husband, father, brother or sweetheart.

Before You Wed The Gal Give Her The Acid Test

Christmas Day!!!... Me kids is beefin all over tha joint because Santa filled up Momma's anklets instead of tha one pair of nylons she's got left!! Me old lady is barkin at me because I gave her a "do-it-at-home permanent wave kit." Meself, I yam beefin because I shouldn't never got married!!!.... In my house, they ain't no difference between me and a bayonet dummy!!!

A lotte sodjers is fixing to git married these days, and lemme tell ya it is more better to find out things about yer wimmen before it's too late!!!

Iffen yer gal asks ya what d'ya think of her legs? . . . tell her the truth! . . . They'se only a dozen perfect figgers in this world, and yer gal knows that . . . So don't fib to her . . . Ifeen she's got legs like a Daschund, or a bit like a Louis Tha Fourteent pillow, tell her so! . . . If she sticks to ya after that, she's okay!

Fergooness sakes, my wife insists I go along every time she wants to buy a new dress . . . She still thinks she wears a "Junior Miss" size. It makes me red in tha puss to watch the saleslady go over to another saleslady, and limb back in our direction, and laff likell! ! ! . . . Well it's tha truth . . . Every time we move to another post, need a wholes trunk for a pair of my G. I. shoes, and me wife's bathin suit! ! . . . . And her bathin suit always sticks out of tha trunk someplace! ! ! She gits in a bus, and from then on, tha driver has to take in passengers thru tha rear door! ! ! . . . I bot her a pair of wedgies last week . . . They look like mocassins now! . . . And I just gotta go on and on telling her she could win a movie contest every day! ! !

Fer gosh sakes . . . find out iffen your future better half-track can wash clothes! . . . Give her a pair of yer stockings to wash . . . This is a terrific test! ! ! They might come back all shrunk up or they'll look like a fruit salad . . . One or t-other . . . So give 'em to a little girl fer doll socks . . . Iffen yer babe still loves ya after that, keep punchin, boy . . . She'll soon learn how to wash I betcha, or else! ! !

Good Lord! . . . Mi laundry bill can insulate a reel of combat wire! ! !... Ye old steam laundry sends me a pamphlet each month, and if it didn't have have dollars signs on it, I'd think it was a milk train schedule! ! ! !

Heck! . . . I never found out me wife couldn't wash until tha day I noticed I was lacing tha baby's shoes wit one of me sun-tan ties! ! ! . . . Such a lousy situation . . . Stppphtttoooey! . . .

Wimen don't hafta hate mice 'n rats . . . When I got home t'other nite, me old lady and tha kids were standing in the 3rd dresser drawer . . . and a poor little mouse was drowned dead . . . In two feet of me wife's perspiration . . . tsk, tsk . . . !

And do ye think she'd let me take a nap when I get home . . . Nah! ! ! . . . She could run a 24-hour radio station all by herself! . . .

The garbage is always too heavy fer me wife to dispose of it . . . But she'll come back from the cleaners with enough clothes for tha whole Allied war relief!

Well, sir, a happy New Year is comin up for a lotta youse guys, but it'll be the last happy one fer a many of ya unless ya smarten up! ! !

Teach 'em how to clean drain pipes . . . and they's loisa wimmen what wouldn't put a needle in nuttin but a phonograph . . . Tell 'em bed should be changed long before the union label wears off! ! ! . . .

Make these revolutions now, and ya won't be living slappily ever after . . . Amen.

I would appreciate it iffen my friends would not bring this issue of the BAYONET into my house, the views being my own, me not quite the same when I talk to my wife . . . I like to let her think she's tha boss, heh, heh! !

Christmas cards too can be just "scraps of paper" unless we make these holiday wishes part of our everyday lives.

Our need today is not simply to change bad men into good, but to give new heart, courage and sense of direction to the good men.

Who is going to make reparation for the broken hearts and homes following the war and for the ravages of hate?

USO Presents—

A SERIES OF APPRO PRIATE CELEBRATIONS USHERING IN THE NEW YEAR OF 1944

By PFC. LOUISE WILIE

The USO clubs of Columbus are planning gala holiday entertainment events to help Fort Benning soldiers usher in the New Year.

Special parties and dances are scheduled at virtually every USO, with music, pretty hostesses, and refreshments to add to the festive atmosphere.

At the YWCA-USO 1425 Third avenue, there will be a New Year's Eve dance, beginning at 8:45 Fort Benning time. On New Year's Day, the club will open house, with plenty of refreshments for G. I.'s who come in.

The Salvation Army USO, 1323 Broadway, also is planning a New Year's Eve party and open house, complete with refreshments, on New Year's Day.

The big holiday event as the Ninth Street USO will be a formal dance on New Year's Night. Though no special entertainment is scheduled for New Year's Eve, soldiers who drop in will find the club's usual recreational facilities at their disposal.

A formal dance is scheduled for New Year's Night from 9- to 12 o'clock, Fort Benning time, at the Negro Army-Navy YMCA-USO, 851 Fifth avenue. The Quartermaster orchestra from Fort Benning will provide music.

This Khaki'd World—

BY PVT. G. I. GRIPE

Lt. Col. Clarence Will having lots of fun with Lt. Col. J. R. Johnson at Post H. Q. during the cold snap as Col. J., bundled up to the ears, comes in with cold coke in gloved hands.

Well, we have a reader, by gollies. Here's a communication that came in today:—"Now that Sgt. Holland of Headquarters has decided to give up trying for that Pilot's license he's wondering whether he can get a couple of those PoW's to police up for him."

Reception Center now has experienced newsman assigned to post Public Relations Division, named Swingler, from down Beale street way (That's in Memphis, for you damyanks 'information). He smokes cigars. So does Lt. Richard E. Tukey, of the Public Relations office. Other day Lt. Tukey was on way to Reception Center to work with Pvt. Swingler on some pictures. When the Pvt. saw official car approaching, he got slightly confused, threw away practically unpuffed-on cigar. Lt. Tukey was aghast at such waste and delivered fairly long lecture on how difficult it is to get cigars these days. In fact, he nearly wept over the folly of it all.

Personally we think he was a dopte for not taking them and setting up a nice little business on the side with them. We think Sgt. Hearn of the Infantry School Information Section would have bought them all at twice their normal price.

Oh, me, it's the time of year when all the friends whose names you couldn' remember, send you a Christmas greeting. And all those that you did remember, appear to have forgotten you.

Well, anyway, it's a great old institution, and thank goodness we can still celebrate it here in this country of ours. So here's a Merry Christmas to each and every one of our readers. Even if it's only the emphasis on the "one" in that last sentence.

Somebody gave Cpl. Tabor a toy cannon set for Christmas and after he got it together (with the aid of Pvt. Gripe, no less) he's having a whale of a time shooting things with it.

Speaking of Christmas dinner, somebody over at the 135th General Hospital translated the menu into French, and the boys printed it in the clever Christmas Day folder they got out. In case you'd like to know what you ate, as it might appear on a menu in a swanky cafe, here it is:—goblet de fruits melange; creme de celeri soupe; dinde rotie; sauce aux arthakas; pommes de terre ecrasees; petits pois verts; coeurs de celeri; olives vertes; salade laitue et tomatoes au mayonnaise; tarte aux citrouilles; creme glacee; assortiment de biscuits; petits pains chauds; beure; marmelade; pommes; oranges; raisins; safe, citronade.

"THE HOUSE INSIDE OF ME"

By Pvt. Oakley Kidd

I have a house inside of me
A house that people never see;
It has doors through which none pass,
And windows but they're not of glass.

I often like to go inside to think
Because in there I hide
And doctor up my wounded pride
When I've been treated rough outside.

I meet my Heavenly Father there,
And He leans down to hear my prayer
To heal my wounds and cure my care.

You have a house inside of you
Where you can fight your battles too.
And God will tell you what to do
And make your heart both strong and true.

To many of us continue meaning well and doing badly.

There's no point in winning your argument if you thereby lose your man.

The fellow who won't take the rap himself usually doesn't care a rap for the other fellow.

We're "all sinners" but a lot depends on whether or not we quit bluffing about it.

Swallow more of your pride and you won't have to swallow so many pills.

Chaplain's Corner...

THE LAND OF BEGINNING AGAIN

Chaplain F. M. Thompson

Louisa Tarkington wishes—

"There was some wonderful place,
Called the Land of Beginning Again,
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches
And all our poor selfish grief, at the door,
Could be dropped, like a shabby old coat,
And never put on again."

Well, there is. It is marvelously real, this land of beginning again. Many have made the discovery. It is within the reach of all. The time to gain possession is now. You can mend those broken promises; correct the misunderstandings; repair the wrongs; throw all your prejudices, bigotries, animosities into the rubbish heap of the closing year and start doing those things you have always wanted to do. It may require some thought, some patience, some endeavor. Perhaps this little poem, "Try It Again," by my friend, Dr. Robert Freeman, may furnish the needed inspiration:

I played with my blocks—I was but a child,
Houses I builded, castles I piled;
But they tottered and fell, all my labor was vain;
Yet my father said kindly, "We'll try it again!"
I played with my days—what's time to a lad?
Why pore over books? Play, play and be glad!
Till my youth was all spent like a sweet summer rain!
Yet my father said kindly, "We'll try it again!"
I played with my chance; such gifts as were mine
To work with, to win with, to serve the Divine,
With prodigal hand I did waste and profane;
Yet my father said kindly, "We'll try it again!"
I played with my soul, the soul that is I,
The best that is in me—I smothered its cry;
I lulled it, I dulled it, and now O the pain!
Yet my Father said kindly, "We'll try it again!"

"HOPE"

By TIP OGBORN

Peace on earth, good will to men,
These words ring clear and bright.
To a world at peace. But to men who fight
They shine like a guiding light.

To the soldier on some far flung front
Where bullets 'round him hum,
They're a mockery to the things that were,
And a hope for things to come.

The one last hope in a world gone mad
For a Victory . . . And then,
He can truthfully live in a world of peace,
And good will in the hearts of men.

Kay Says—

NEXT YEAR SHE RE SOLVES TO LET NATURE TA KE ITS COURSE

Each year, as New Year's Day comes around, I'm tempted to set down a set of bright new resolutions, all designed to make a new and better woman out of the material at hand. But each year after due consideration, I can't make up my mind as to just what sort of person I'd like to become, so I shelve the resolutions and go along in my present comfortable, if slightly muddled, characterization.

The trouble is, I have too many ideas as to the sort of person I'd like to be, just as I have too many conflicting ideas as to how I'd like to furnish a home. I admire women who are skilled with the needle, and who can spend painstaking hours fixing their own drapes, doing a bit of needlepoint, letting down the hems of curtains, and slip-covering the furniture.

On the other hand, I also envy the woman who has time for many worthwhile outside activities, or who has the time to hold down efficiently a full or part time job. I am equally envious, and bewildered, by those women who appear impeccably groomed on any and every occasion, from a morning shopping tour to an afternoon tea.

It is a constant source of irritation to me that I can't combine the good points of all these women in myself. But something always seems to interfere. If I decide to concentrate upon being the perfect cook, someone is sure to phone for copy (Eds note—I'm a bad, bad boy.) just as the cake is at its most critical stage. If I barricade the door, determined to write a column that will later appear as a shining example between the pages of some freshman composition text, that is the time my family is most loudly determined to claim my attention.

Invariably, the time I designate as sacred to the leisurely perusal of Mother Goose, at the vehement banquet of my young son, is also the only time an equally vehement husband has to relate the events of the day. The hour I set aside for a leisurely but thorough glamourizing job is also, I have discovered through sad experience, the time for a minor calamity of some sort about the house.

It may be a question of having too many irons in the fire. So I resolve to go in for the domestic life, my home and family coming first. All goes merrily for a while, with a well-organized household, hot meals on the table at the proper hours, buttons sewed on clothes, and even a slip cover in the offering. Then it dawns upon me gradually that I'm becoming very bored with my family, and my family is becoming equally bored with me. Housework, moreover, is a ceaseless treadmill, and the family and I would be better off if I enriched my mind by going in for a few outside activities.

The trouble is, there's no stopping those outside activities once I get started. They pile up on me until I find myself running frantically from this place to that, determined to miss nothing. The house degenerates into a state of chaos, sandwiches and salads replacing hot dishes and safety pins taking the place of buttons. My family, I discover, is a bit annoyed, and I'm reaching the point where outside interests have become a vicious habit rather than a pleasant outlet.

Next year, I'm resolved to let nature take its course. If I feel like cooking, I'll cook. If I feel like reading, I'll read. If I feel like working, I'll work. But I know by this time no one's ever going to say of me "she's a perfect housewife," or executive, or hostess, or whatever else my aspiration may be at the moment.

MAC ASSIGNED TO FIELD DUTY AS SAWGRASS GOE S TO OC SCHOOL

By S-SGT. TOM McDONALD

"This morning, men, I have a delightful New Year's surprise for both of you!" said Colonel Swampwater to Private Sawgrass and myself.

"You, Sergeant, are going to be relieved from your office duty and sent to the field."

"Field!" I exclaimed. "Excellent! Now I will have an opportunity to find out what it is like to be in the army. What kind of place am I going to, Sir?"

"To Gowdy Field, Sergeant," the ol' boy grinned. "You're to be in charge of keeping all of the box seats dusted off just before outstanding events. You will be issued a feather duster from the Quartermaster Corps and I will assign two PFC's to assist you."

• • •

"Yes, Sir." I replied, fully cognizant of my responsibility.

"And you, Private Sawgrass, are really in for a fascinating assignment. General Quagmire and myself have decided to send you to Officer Candidate School!"

"Shades of Salome, Sir. This air plumb phenomenal!" gasped Private Sawgrass, trembling nervously and concurrently trying to adjust himself to the situation.

"You can do it, Sawgrass!" I added." "I knew that you had it in you all the time."

"Yes, Candidate Sawgrass," continued our commanding officer," you are now destined to stand above the masses, to be a leader of Infantry, a bearer of the banner! Yes siree . . . on January 14th you will report with full barracks bags to O.C. class No. 5678 to begin your future career as an officer and a gentleman.

"Gosh," said Private Sawgrass, as he began to polish his belt buckle with the end of his shirt tail. "This air a plumb big honor to me, gentlemen. How come hit ware decided that I was to be made an officer?"

• • •

"You were blessed by the arm of destiny, Sawgrass," the Colonel explained. "To be perfectly frank one of my regimental clerks lost your service record, so the General and I just figured that it would be easier to send you to Officer Candidate School rather than to go to all of the trouble of trying to find the old thing."

"You're a lucky man, Sawgrass." I added.

"In the future, Sargint, you will address me as Candidate Sawgrass. I'm officer material now, yuh know!"

"Yes, Sir," I replied to the aspiring candidate, "I shall bear this in mind. And when, Candidate Sawgrass, do you want me to start saluting you?"

"Yuh kin wait until I get my bars pinned up, Sargint. Ain't no hurry, is thar, Colonel?"

"Blazes no! My boy . . . plenty of time for all that. I'm just mighty happy to see one of my men work his way up to glory from out of the ranks," rejoined our leader.

"Yes," I replied, "and you will be an automatic corporal, as soon as you get out there."

"Hot diggity, Sargint. That air a full grade above Pfc, ain't hit? Gosh! I never even figured on gitting Pfc, let alone corporal."

"And that second lieutenant," reminded the Colonel.

"Sort of a belated Christmas present," I surmised.

"At ease, Sergeant! barked the ol' boy. "You had better go make out that requisition for a feather duster. Meanwhile Candidate Sawgrass, you may step into my office for a little chat. I want to give you a few hints about your conduct as an officer and to see if I can arrange to have you reassigned here as my regimental intelligence officer just as soon as you receive your bars."

• • •

Without further words, Colonel Swampwater and "Candidate Sawgrass" retired to the inner sanctuary, leaving me with nothing to do but to insert the triplicate Quartermaster requisition 7865 into my typewriter and to hope for the best.

DAISEY'S TROUBLES

Under the spreading chestnut tree,
A stubborn auto stands,
And Gossie, the driver,
Has trouble on his hands.

The carburetor seems to be
The cause of all his woe,
He tightens half a dozen bolts
And still it doesn't go.

And then he tries the Steering gear
And finds no failure there.
When drenched with grime and sweat
He halts in sheer despair.

He sits down on the running board,
And tries his brain to cool,
And gathers his instructions from The Benning Motor School.

He opens up the hood again.
Why sure he is just green.
The source of all his troubles was
The lack of gasoline.

1st Student Training Regiment

History suggests that the rail splitters make better statesmen than the hair splitters.

They're bringing up the old one again about keeping our feet on terra firma—the more firmer the less terror.

In the war of ideas they are sure to set mental booby traps. Don't fall for anything till you see who's behind it and then what's behind the who.

TIS Basketeers End 1st Quarter's Play

Terrific Struggle Seen For First Half Honors

Spirits Average 50 Points Per Game in 5 Conference Matches

There have been plenty of fireworks in the first quarter of play in the 1943-44 edition of The Infantry School Basketball League which ends tonight. And those fireworks presage a terrific struggle down the second quarter stretch for first half honors.

The league leaders have been loaded with scoring wallops that have been little short of sensational. For instance the 176th Spirits averaged better than 50 points a game for their first five games, almost close to a point a minute. And they did their heavy scoring against both strong and ordinary competition. And the 6th Training Regiment Eagles and 3rd Student Training Regiment Rifles weren't far off the pace.

This second quarter which gets underway Sunday afternoon will touch off some pyrotechnics at the opening whistle.

In the Main Post gymnasium, the 6th Training Regiment will meet the Academic Profs, a potentially strong team that has been kicked around in the first quarter which has played virtually without the services of Benny Zientara, flashy guard and Johnny Ossi who just recently returned to the lineup after a siege of illness. In the first encounter, the Eagles won by a single point margin and later went on to beat the 176th by four points and the 3rd Student Trng. by two points, both of which teams swamped the Profs by margins of more than 17 points. 'Nuff said.

SPIRITS-EAGLES

On next Tuesday, the battle between the 6th and 176th will be resumed and the four points by which the Eagles won before are no safe margin at this stage upon which to base a prediction. It will give Leo Mogus, ace point-builder of the Spirits a chance to resume his individual scoring battle with Milt Ticco of the Eagles. In their first clash, Mogus scored 27 points on 11 field goals and five fouls. Ticco had 13 field buckets and two fours for 28.

Lack of practice has hurt the ASTP Leaders, practice and lack of reserves, but they carved out 36 points against the Spirits which was no mean achievement. The 300th Sabers took a new lease on life against the Leaders and pounded them with 64 points which are a lot of points to make against any team in this league. It was worse beating than either the 6th or 176th gave the ASTP gang. And the Sabers, so far, have been strictly second division stuff.

Rifles' Win Over Spirit Five Breaks 'Most Feared' Bugaboo

Other Teams See Ray of Hope In 176th's 47 Point Handcuffing

BY SGT. CHUCK VOORHIS
Infantry School Public Relations

For the first time during the current competition of the Infantry School basketball league, the 176th Infantry Spirits have been handcuffed. They were handcuffed to the extent of 47 points by the 3rd Student Training Regiment Rifles.

Now 47 points are a lot of points in any basketball game but not from the Spirits' standpoint. Up until they met the Rifles last Tuesday night at the Harmony Church Sports Arena, they had never scored less than 50 points a game and were, in fact, on the verge of hanging up a record of scoring a point a minute. They had 291 points for five games. Their mark of 336 for six games leaves them quite a bit shy of that coveted point a minute figure.

The victory of the Rifles broke their tie with the Spirits for second place and put a different complexion on the league competition. The Spirits, blessed with galaxy of stars, was perhaps the most feared team in the circuit. But the league leading 6th training Regiment had previously beaten them by a four point margin, an achievement which still left the Spirits in that 'most feared' class.

That the Spirits can be taken, as proven by the Rifles and Eagles gives the other teams in the circuit a little more to hope for when they next encounter the minions of Spirit Kirk Gebert.

That Spirit-Rifle tilt shared the week's spotlight with the Rifle-Eagle tilt of last Sunday which the Eagles won 60 to 58. This game was perhaps one of the best played in the league to-date.

EAGLES HARD-PRESSED

The Eagles were hard pressed to win, particularly after Barnie Mehen was forced from the game on personals. But Rudy Baric, a six foot three newcomer from the University of West Virginia, filled his shoes very capably. The Eagles have another big replacement, Robert Taylor (no claim to movie fame) who hails from Pittsburgh and stands six-four. He's a 200 pounder as is Baric.

Outshining the stellar play of the Eagles as a team is, perhaps, the all-around play and scoring punch contributed by Milt Ticco, the rangy center from the University of Kentucky. Milt has banged in an even 50 field goals in six games and, with five fouls, has a total of 105 points. This total sits him in the individual scoring leader's chair by a margin of two points over Leo Mogus of the Spirits. Mogus might have held his lead over the Tuesday night games had he not been forced out of the Rifle game on personals.

One greatly over-looked player on the Eagle squad is Danny Gabbianelli from Georgetown University who has knocked in 61 points to-date. He's an able floorman as well as shotmaker. With Frank Shannon, the Wittenberg veteran to steady them, the Eagles, as their present high estate in the league standings indicate, are a rather sweet outfit. But they've had some close squeaks and are apt to get clipped.

AMAZING BLACKWELL

Ewell Blackwell, the six-foot five center of the Rifles who also pitches some pretty fair baseball, continues to amaze the Infantry School League fans with his staying power. Blackie appears ready to fall apart at the seams yet is still in there pitching and pitching hard at the fial whistle. He has moved into fourth place in the individual scoring race with a total of 78 points, 23 of which came against the Spirits.

Although the Academic Profs are now tied for a first division berth, their place as yet has not been up to the potentialities that linger in their roster of capable players. Troy Ricks, their leader, missed one game during the week but is still third in league scoring with 85 points, 31 of which were foul conversions. Against the ASTP Leaders, the Profs were pressed throughout. They continued to miss lay-up shots and their passing was fast and accurate—into opponent's hands.

Benny Zientara made his first appearance of the league season and showed the lack of practice. Once the Profs start to click, they're just a club fighting for a first division berth.

SABERS BOUNCE BACK

The 300th Infantry, after losing four straight, suddenly exploded to score 64 points against the Leaders in winning their first game. Upon until Tuesday, the Sabers held the distinction of holding the Spirits to their lowest score of the season—50 points.

Frank Cronin has a fighting gang of 4th Regiment Spartans. His combination of Bill Briggs from Morningside College and John Hartman from Kansas has been a trouble maker to all opponents. They're pint-size fellows too which makes their achievements stand out all the more.

The 731st Infantry Snipers have been a hard luck team throughout. After losing two games by a single point, they trounced the 300th Infantry and then met the Spirits and Eagles in their next two games.

Unpredictable describes the ASTP Leaders. Doped as a dark horse team, the Leaders have shown indication they might pull a surprising upset some dark night—even though they haven't won a game.

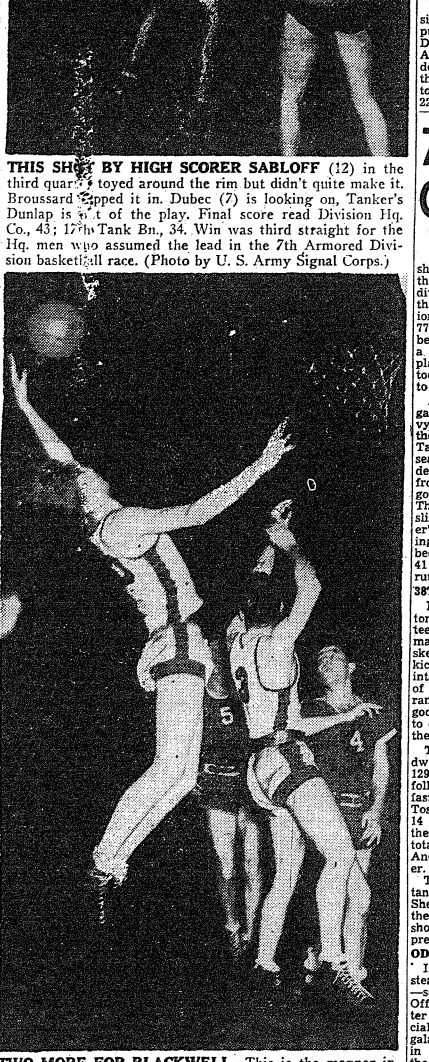
Luckies Know Enemy Planes

Ask any 7th Armored division man to name that plane flying overhead and 10 to 1 he can identify it before you can. Seventh soldiers are craning their necks these days at the slightest hint of a roar in the sky with their practice at friendly plane recognition.

Reason for all this is that a division order has been published asking company commanders to have enlisted men identify five out of five friendly plane silhouettes before going on pass or furlough. It would be unthinkable to have a combat team go into battle and fir upon our own planes.

Officers too, must be able to tell enemy and friendly planes when they see them. They are required to name 13 out of 13 before going on leave.

But with special "spotters" classes conducted often, it is a fairly simple matter to learn by name or number Allied aircraft. The men have even taken to playing cards with special decks bearing plane outlines in place of the conventional hearts, clubs, faces, etc.



Shavetails Attend Advanced Classes

For many years, an officer almost always had to attain field rank—colonel or major—before he received an opportunity to attend The Infantry School's advanced course. When our Army began to expand, this course was opened to more officers of company grade.

Now, for the first time, shavetails are attending the Officers Advanced Course. Twenty-two second lieutenants are enrolled in the new class in Captain Edward R. Smith's 5th Company, 1st Student Training Regiment, along with other student officers ranking up to major. The 22 are all graduates of OCS at The Infantry School.

THIS SHOT BY HIGH SCORER SABLOFF (12) in the third quarter toyed around the rim but didn't quite make it. Broussard stepped it in. Dubec (7) is looking on, Tanker's Dunlap is out of the play. Final score read Division Hq. Co., 43; 17th Tank Bn., 34. Win was third straight for the Hq. men who assumed the lead in the 7th Armored Division basketball race. (Photo by U. S. Army Signal Corps.)

TWO MORE FOR BLACKWELL—This is the manner in which Ewell Blackwell (shown leaping for ball) scored one of the five field goals he banged in against the 6th Training Regiment Eagles in an Infantry School League basketball game at Harmony Church Sunday. Blackwell, of the 3rd Student Training Regiment Rifles, played with a lot of authority under the baskets. A team mate, Ed Moeller (No. 3) is also up after the ball while Frank Shannon (No. 4) and Bernie Mehen (No. 5) of the Eagles are waiting for the rebound in event Blackwell missed. (Official U. S. Army Photo—The Infantry School.)

Christmas Mess Pleases Bonesteel

Maj. Gen. Charles H. Bonesteel, Commandant of The Infantry School, paid a flying visit to various mess halls in units of the School Christmas mornning and was well satisfied with the provisions made for the holiday dinner for the men.

Accompanied by Capt. Donald Ross, his aide, he visited Co. A, 2nd Bn. the 176th and was greeted by Col. Edwin Cox, regimental commander and Lt. W. J. Young, the company commander; Co. B of the Academic Regiment where he was met by Col. E. P. Passailaigue, regimental commander; the 22nd Co. in the 1st STR, Col. R. H. Lord commanding the regiment; Headquarters Co., the 300th, Col. H. J. Hunt, commanding; a mess hall in the second battalion of the Truck Regiment, Lt. Col. Thomas Evans, battalion commander; an officers' mess in the 1st STR and the WAC Detachment No. 2, Capt. Janet Nash commanding.

The mess halls were all gaily decorated with wall trimmings and Christmas Trees, table cloths used only on such occasions were brought out and the whole topped with a roast turkey dinner.

Division Hq. Beats Tanker 5

By PVT. MEL WACHS

Although minus their key man and league's leading scorer, the Division Hq. Company courtmen proved themselves nine points better than a good 17th Tank Bn. five Monday night at Shepard Hall. It was a closer ball game than the 45-34 score might indicate, the men from the hill having to extend themselves all the way to earn the win which lifted them undisputedly to the combat command league top slot in the 7th Armored Division hoop tourney.

With ace "Andy" Anderson out on furlough, the men from headquarters demonstrated they were not a one man team. They played heady, resourceful ball, using a tight zone defense to bottle the always dangerous Tanker attack. Although Roberts and Dunlap shook loose for thirty of the loser's total between them, counting for 14 and 16 respectively, the Tankers couldn't quite cope with the sustained Hq. drive.

There was a good reason the league leaders didn't miss Anderson's services as much as was feared. The reason is a chunky forward named Sabloff. The steady floorman really came into his own last night, garnering eight field goals and three free throws for nineteen big points. Besides its importance in the win, the Sabloff scoring spree placed him right in with the league's leading scorers. He's been good for 36 markers in the club's three wins.

Rule and Broussard contributed six apiece to the victory which pushed the 17th into sixth place. Dubec was good for four and Aylor, tall new pivot filling Anderson's shoes, tossed in four from the floor for eight of the victors' total. The winners led at halftime 22-15.

7th Armored Leaders Continue Winning Ways

BY PVT. MEL WACHS

This past holiday week, though short, saw the three top teams on the CCR side of the 7th Armored division basketball league defend their unbeaten status. The Division Hq. Co., 23rd Inf. Bn. and 77th Medics fives all won without being pushed, knotting the lead in a pretty three-way tie and displaying authentic indications of a tooth and claw scrap right down to the wire.

A fast, smooth Headquarters gang, with plenty of court "savvy," looked most impressive of the three in handing the 31st Tankmen their first reverse of the season, 52-39. Center Andy Anderson, as usual, paced the "men from the hill" with nine field goals and three fouls for 21 points. This basket bonanza also puts the slim, shifty courtman in the driver's seat as far as individual scoring honors are concerned, having been personally responsible for 41 of the 112 points his club has rung up in two starts.

38TH IN CELLAR

Flooring but a five-man skeleton crew against a squad of fourteen 38th Infantrymen bent on making trouble, the 23rd Infantry skeleton proved quite frisky in kicking its doughboy confreres into the league cellar to the tune of 59-39. Pivot Dotson found the range ten times from the floor, good for twenty points and enough to discourage the hapless losers in their second successive setback.

The 38th isn't the sole cellar dweller today. They have the 129th Maint. five as co-tenants following the latter's loss to the fast rolling '77th Medics, 51-31. Tose and Cardoni scored 17 and 14 respectively for the Kildares, the former upping his two-game total to 32 and staying right on Anderson's tail as the loop's leader.

Two of these three top clubs tangle horns next Thursday in Shepard Hall when the 77th meets the 23rd in a ball game which should help to disentangle the present first place muddle.

ODDS AND ENDS

If you want to blow off some steam, if you're lookin' for a fight—see your unit Special Service Officer on the double! We'd better clarify that. The Division Special Service office is planning a gala boxing program, to originate in every unit and embracing all the weights, from fly to heavy. Eliminations will culminate in a 16-man division ring team which, from all reports, will not go begging for competition . . . Thursday night, Jan. 6, at the Bol-Mor alleys in Columbus, 16 bowling teams representing every unit in the division will topple the pins inaugurating a new kegler program. The division will be split into two leagues and every Thursday evening will be strictly the Seventh's at Bol-Mor. Set 'em up! . . . Here's a note that gladdens this reporter's heart, we've been pulling for this deal for a long time. The first athletic team actually representative of the division is on the boards. It's still only an embryo but the 7th Armored Division basketball team will soon be of age. Composed of men outstanding in league play thus far, plus potential Luisetis who have been hiding in the background, the Luckies under Lt. John Samson, Athletic Officer, have been shaping up and plan to doff their sweatsuits around Jan. 9th. More about that next . . . Vines for producing wine were first planted in South Africa in 1658.

Tigers, Tornadoes Ready For New Years' Grid Tilt

The Fort Benning Reception Center Tigers and the Camp Forrest, Tenn., Tornadoes will square off Saturday afternoon in Memorial Stadium in Columbus in their own New Year's Day bowl game for the Negro service football championship of the Southeast. The kickoff is clocked for 3 p. m., EWT.

Proceeds will be turned over to the USO for the purpose of installing a troops-in-transit lounge for colored soldiers in Columbus.

Tickets are on sale at company headquarters in the Reception Center and Harmong Church area and cost fifty cents for soldiers and their dates. Regular admission prices are one dollar in advance and $1,25 at the gate. They are on sale in Columbus at the Colored Army-Navy YMCA and at Hugh Bentley's Sporting Goods store at 1305 Broadway.

It was announced that a section has been reserved for white soldiers. Colonel Ulric N. James, commanding officer of the Reception Center, expects to head a delegation of officers from his command to attend the game.

Officials for the championship tilt will be B. T. Fowlkes, Atlanta University, referee; L. G. Evans, Southern University, umpire; H. S. Powell, Hampton University, head linesman; and John Martin, Alabama State, field judge.

Mel Allen To Be Half-Time Guest In Sugar Bowl

Harry Wismer's half-time guest on the CBS broadcast of the Sugar Bowl football game on New Year's afternoon will be Infantry Private Mel Allen, former CBS sports announcer who is now stationed at The Infantry School at Fort Benning. Pvt. Allen has just completed his basic training and has been given a few days' leave to attend the New Orleans classic which he might have been broadcasting had he not been inducted.

Allen broadcast the World Series each year, 1938-1942, and handled numerous other news and sports assignments for CBS. He is a native of Birmingham, Alabama, and was graduated from the University of Alabama, where he was manager of the baseball team.

An Army Wife Shops in Columbus

By Phyllis

Now is the time for a bit of rejoicing what with the exciting clearance sales at the J. A. KIRVEN COMPANY. If you've had your eye on a lot of their smart sports clothes now is the time to make them your own at really reduced prices. The two piece classic suits of plaids, herringbone, camel and houndstooth checks are most appropriate values for wearing every day from now until summer. Add a jumper or interchange a corduroy ensemble with a wool suit and what have you but a new wardrobe. Smartly styled crepe dresses are included in this grand clearance sale. In fact, you'll find by meandering about the main and second floors of Kirven's many other interesting articles have been reduced to half price. Many of the more popular lotions and skin creams are included in makeup sales. Women's rationed better shoes are just another of the popular merchandise reduced for Kirven's after-Christmas clearance.

—V—

Keeping a tiny daughter clean and sweet looking is certainly an all day job. The SEARS ROEBUCK COMPANY has a most attractive display of inexpensive cotton dresses which will certainly induce your tot to take a bit of interest in keeping herself neat. Less spilled jam and mud smears and the like will probably be discouraged if she is gifted with any of these serviceable frocks of broadcloth, dimity, batiste, corduroy, and chambray. Both you and your daughter will like the pretty neck finishings and bits of embroidery or cotton lace trimming which many of these frocks have. The pastel shades are just as pretty and the darker tones. Well made, sporting deep hems, these outfits for sweet young things are just one of the many reasons why I suggest shopping at Sears.

—V—

KAYSER-LILIENTHAL, INC. is having a clearance sale of winter sutis, coats, dresses and fur coats, but especially outstanding are the exciting new evening gowns displayed by this quality shop. Although not at reduced prices each outfit is an unusual value. To make you look just like an angel are pure white formals of non-rationed net. They're not too sugary either, but with just the right amount of fluff. Perfect for New Year's Eve and many other dress-up occasions throughout the coming year. Equally perfect, but more sophisticated, is a sleek gown of red crepe. The beautifully draped, squared bodice is all a-glitter with tiny red beads and the skirt, narrow, with a slit, has a jabot starting at the waist and gradually tapering off. Definitely not a dress for a wall flower, but just the thing for many of you who delight in the unusual.

—V—

What with all the many shipping difficulties the MILLER-TAYLOR SHOE COMPANY has somehow managed to keep getting new stocks of footwear for all members of the family. Now that the Christmas rush has ended why not spend a bit of time and really look over their latest displays. Squared-toed pumps of fine-grade brown leathers feature the new medium heel as do many of the newer women's shoes. Black suede, kid and gabardine shoes for dress-up occasions feature the fine workmanship and smart lines always a sure sign of Miller-Taylor footwear. Popular brands of playshoes and bedroom slippers and dressy mules also display fine materials and craftsmanship. No doubt, you have a shoe coupon left, so get the best you can buy at Miller-Taylor's.

STELLA DI SPERANZA (Star of Hope) honoring Colonel Frank M. Thompson, Fort Benning's retiring Chief of Chaplains, and expressing their hope for a better post-war world is the name of the fountain built by Italian Prisoners of War in the Internment Camp at Benning. Chaplain Thompson is shown in his clerical robes with Col. George M. Cheschier, POW commanding officer, at the Chaplain's left. Father Roderick MacEachen, POW chaplain is just to the right rear of Col. Thompson. (U. S. Army Signal Corps Photo.)

Marines Are Familiar Sight At Ft. Benning

Forest-green uniforms of the Marine Corps have become a familiar sight around Colonel Robert H. Lord's First Student Training Regiment, The Infantry School. It may seem strange to many people that wearers of the "globe and anchor" should be stationed at an Army Post. It isn't so surprising, though, when one realizes that the two services have fought side by side in every major war in which our country has ever been engaged.

Reporting "aboard" an Army post for the first time is, however, quite an experience for a Marine. There is no quarterdeck for him to salute as he comes over the side, no officer of the deck to grant him permission to come aboard. He finds, too, that there is a difference in the language spoken, as for example: Bulkheads are called "walls"; the deck is referred to as "the ground" or a "floor"; ladders are "stairs"; and port and starboard become "left and right."

"Gyrenes" and "Doggies" get on with each other extremely well. Each has a lot of respect for the other—though that fact never would be evident to a casual listener.

Pet peeve of any Marine is to have someone say: "Are you really a Marine? I thought they wore blue uniforms." Most advertisements picture Gyrenes in their "blues," but actually, the dress uniform is worn very little today.

Woman's Club

By KATHERINE HAMMARGREN

The Fort Benning Woman's Club has been fortunate in securing a film of unusual importance for its January meeting. The film, "The Battle of Russia," formerly had been restricted to army personnel but will be shown to all Woman's Club members and their guests at an open meeting Monday, January 3, at 2:30 p. m. EWT in the Main Theatre on the main post.

"The Battle of Russia" has been recommended by Time magazine as one of the great documentary films of the war. Lasting an hour and fifteen minutes, it is packed with historical information, superb photography, and graphic comment. Historically, the early part of the film gives a vivid pictures of past attempts to conquer Russia.

This is no moving picture to go for an afternoon's pleasure and relaxation. It is a picture imbued with a complacent, rosy glow about what American women are doing in the war. It is a picture which will make you realize how magnificently our allies, the Russians, have fought and are fighting. It is a picture that will give you a clearer understanding of the strategy employed by opposing armies, of key cities fought for street by street and house by house.

It is a picture that will find you gripping the arms of your chair. You will leave the theatre feeling a little ashamed of yourself for the insignificant part you have been playing, and resolved to do better in the future. It is a picture which should be seen by every woman who has a husband or son in the armed forces, and it will leave you with the feeling that you have undergone an experience you will never forget.

There will be no charge for the film. Mrs. Julian B. Lindsey, membership chairman, and her committee will receive membership dues from prospective club members who wish to join the club for the remainder of the club year. The dues for the remaining meetings have been reduced to $1, which entitles members to attend all group meetings as well as the monthly general meetings.

Jump Teacher Wins Legion of Merit Medal

For "outstanding service as an instructor in jump training" at the Parachute school, Fort Benning, Master Sgt. Albert Neky of Service company, 542nd Parachute infantry, has been decorated with the Legion of Merit.

The medal was presented by Brig. Gen. Ridgely Gaither, commandant of the Parachute school, in a ceremony at the Reception Center parade ground at the post. Reviewing officers consisted of the staff of the Parachute school, the 515th Parachute infantry, and the 542nd Parachute Infantry.

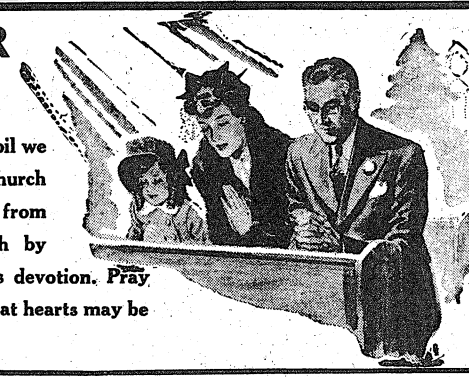
Sergeant Neky, a steel worker in Pittsburgh, Pa., before he entered the army five years ago, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Neky, 326 Maplewood avenue, Ambridge, Pa.

NEKY'S CITATION

The citation to Sergeant Neky read:

"Master Sgt. Albert Neky, army serial No. 6562368, Service company, 542nd Parachute infantry, United States army. For exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding service as an instructor in jump training division of the Parachute school, Fort Benning, Ga., from October, 1941, to September, 1943, during which time he was directly responsible for the training and supervision of 27,700 students, both officers and enlisted men, in that phase of work. He aided in developing the technique that is used by all men of the parachute troops of the United States army in the exiting from a plane. His daily duties involved control of all the jump masters of the Parachute school and the loading and dispatching of all airplanes with students. These duties he performed in a superior manner with intelligence, initiative, force and courage."

PASS IN REVIEW



After the presentation the 542nd Parachute infantry, 515th Parachute infantry, and Academic company of the Parachute school passed in review before Sergeant Neky, Gen. Ridgely Gaither and staff officers.

Sergeant Neky is an old-timer in parachute work, and he has been with the school since its birth. A pioneer of parachute training in the United States army, Sergeant Neky has seen his students go on to the great victories in the North African campaign, and the Sicilian invasion. Many a paratrooper will remember the jump master who helped him through those tough few minutes before that first jump. Sergeant Neky was a member of the original 501st Parachute infantry battalion.

Mr. and Mrs. John Neky, the sergeant's parents, came to the United States in 1908, from the little town of Pedwerice, Czechoslovakia, located in the old Austrian - Hungary territory. They settled in Ambridge, Pa., where for 28 years Mr. Neky was connected with the American Bridge company until his retirement a few years ago.

For a short time Sergeant Neky worked for the Ford Motor company, and then, in 1938, he enlisted in the United States army as a member of the 30th Infantry. He was a member of this unit until he volunteered for service in the Parachute troops. Sergeant Neky's wife is a nurse in the Elgin State hospital in Illinois.

A PRAYER FOR PEACE

In these days of national turmoil we should take time out and come to church each Sunday. Obtain freedom from worry and comfort in our faith by spending a few hours in religious devotion. Pray that there may soon be peace so that hearts may be light and happy again.

Puff-Board Device Used In TIS Saves Ammunition

It costs a pretty good chunk of money every time a 105 mm. Infantry cannon is fired yet fired they must be if they are to hold up their end of winning this war. One good blast from that gun can do an awful lot of damage but the important item concerning that blast is to get it on or near the target.

To do this requires proficiency in handling the gun and proficiency comes only through practice. Normally this practice is gained by actually firing the gun. However, the Officers' Cannon Course of The Infantry School has solved this problem to a large extent through the introduction of a novel training aid called the "Puff Board Trainer."

The trainer is merely an automatic terrain board, a novel home-made affair, easy to operate and costing about $15 to build. Its purposes is to provide an opportunity for student officers to fire problems with accuracy but without entailing the cost that would be involved were cannon and shells used.

The system is simple. The student gives his order for deflection and range. A second or so later, a puff of smokes appears on the terrain board at the spot called for by the student's order. From that point on, the student can adjust his fire with deflection and range changes, and these will be reported accurately by subsequent puffs of smoke.

RANGE, DEFLECTION

These puff board or terrain board trainers can be constructed in various sizes but the nine trainers now used by the Cannon company are so scaled that eight inches on the board is the equivalent of 100 yards, both in range and deflection.

During the time the student spends on the trainer, he not only get practice in adjusting fire on a target by noting the results he gets from the orders he gives but also gets constant drilling in the giving of fire orders. In the end, his fire orders should be rapid and the adjustments accurate.

For some time, the Cannon Company employed terrain boards built outdoors with assistant instructors indicating on the board, by the flick of a stick, the approximate point at where a shell would land when fired according to the order given by the student. The range could be a closely approximated by a knotted rope scale along the side of the board but reflection was difficult to guage.

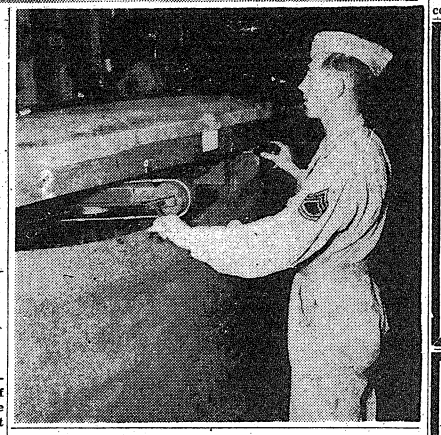
Maj. Malcolm L. Wilson, an artilleryman assigned to the Cannon Company as an instructor conceived the idea of the puff board in which a puff of smoke could be used to indicate a shell burst rather than by a stick in the sand. He solved this problem by using sulphur trioxide, in an ordinary jar with a screw top, and two stems, to one of which was attached an atomizer. Pressure on the atomizer forces the sulphur trioxide through the second stem creating a very realistic smoke as from a shell burst. Capt. Charles J. Keenan, Infantry, another instructor in the group contributed many valuable suggestions for the trainer.

The idea appealed to Maj. James N. Wall, Chief of the Cannon Group and from that point on the a student in front of the board whole Cannon Group poured in ideas for the board. Major Wilson and Captain Kennan pieced them together and the enlisted instructors in the group, all of Company F, Academic Regiment, provided the finishing punch. PFC Louis Lapine, a carpenter in civilian life, started work on the frames for the boards and before long T-Sergeant Otis May and Max B. Schrecker were adding their bit in the construction work. Over the frames was placed an ordinary window screen which was painted to represent earth. Various targets, in miniature, such as blockhouse, ammunition dumps, etc., were set loosely on top so that they could be moved easily. The screening was not stretched tightly and the result was a rolling terrain with hills and valleys.

SMOKE DEVICE

The problem of placing the jar under the terrain so that smoke would rise through the screen under the target was a simple process. The jar containing the sulphur trioxide was placed on a board which runs underneath the full length of the terrain board. The jar is moved longitudinally up and down this board by means of a pulley and rope, the latter being marked every eight inches by a piece of adhesive tape. Thus when the range is increased 100 yards, the pulley is operated for a distance of eight inches, which is the equivalent of 100 yards on the board. The elevation necessary for the various ranges is indicated on the adhesive tape. When a range of 185 is ordered, the pulley is operated until the adhesive tape bearing 185 appears opposite the indicator. To increase the range 50 yards, the pulley would be advanced four inches.

The mechanics for controlling deflection depend upon the ranges that the terrain board is to represent. The boards made by the Cannon Company are constructed for ranges from 1300 to 2700 yards. This means that the controls are such that the gun is represented as being 1300 yards to the rear of and in line with the center of the board. A lateral pulley controls the deflection. Shifts left or right are made according to a dial indicator on the pulley wheel. One turn of the wheel is equivalent to a shift of 100 mils. When a lateral movement is made, the logitudinal board moves with it and with that movement also goes the smoke pot.



MUST KNOW STUFF

The under portion of the board, excepting for the rear, is enclosed in material which prevents the student from seeing the position of the smoke pot, a factor which makes him rely solely on his knowledge of proper range and deflection in order to get the desired result.

Operation of the pulleys is by an enlisted instructor behind the board, who listens for the fire order, makes the proper adjustments and squeezes the atomizer to produce the shell burst. With a student in front of the board using binoculars, a fairly realistic picture of an impact area is presented.

Major Wall is very well satisfied with the results of this training aid. After using it, students can go out in the field and fire their actual problems with a minimum amount of wasted shots. They leave their major mistakes on the terrain board.

TIME AND AMMUNITION SAVED—When the faculty of the Officers' Cannon Course of The Infantry School wanted something more realistic in the matter of terrain boards, they got their heads together and, with the help of their cadre, built nine "puff board trainers," one of which is shown in operation above. The puff board trainer is an automatic terrain board on which the smoke from a bursting shell can be realistically simulated. The burst can be placed Use of the board results in a considerable saving in ammunition which would otherwise be used if students had to gain proficiency in firing their 105 cannons in the field. The upper photo shows a 'shell' burst. The smoke is created by a pot of sulphur trioxide maneuvered beneath the terrain which is made of screen. Lower photo, Technical Sergeant Max B. Schrecker manipulates the pulleys which places the smoke pot under the target called for by the student's fire order. (Official U. S. Army Photo—The Infantry School.)

Red Tape Cut To Pay Disabled Vets' Pensions

The War Department, in cooperation with the Veterans Administration, has undertaken action to eliminate delays between the date a soldier is discharged for physical disability and the time he may begin to receive a pension or other veterans' benefits, it was learned today at Fort Benning.

One step which the War Department anticipates will be helpful is the recent authorization of the assignment of Veterans Administration personnel to Army installations in order to facilitate the filing of claims for veterans' benefits. This Veterans Administration unit already is operating at Walter Reed General Hospital, Washington, D. C., as an Adjudication Group and lessons learned from this experiment will be extended as soon as possible to other military installations where physically disabled soldiers are being discharged. Thus, before the soldier actually leaves the Army, he may not only secure competent advice on the merits of individual claims, but a decision on them.

THE MENTALLY ILL

Already an arrangement has been worked out whereby those mentally ill persons who require further treatment in Veterans' Facilities are discharged by the War Department to the Veterans' Administration Facility by one contemporaneous action.

Blinded personnel will be retained in the Army in order to complete their social adjustment training even though no further hospitalization is required. This social adjustment training is coordinated with the Veterans Administration so that the vocational training that they will conduct will continue without serious interruption.

At present, there are also under consideration in the War Department another proposals to remedy the situation. One of these is a booklet which will explain in very simple language to the enlisted man about to be discharged his rights as a veteran.

It is the purpose of the War Department to see that as many service connected pensions claims by veterans as possible are adjudicated prior to discharge from the Army. However, it should be understood that there is no way that a soldier can be compelled to file a claim for pension benefits, although his rights in this regard are brought to his attention by the War Department.

SOLDIER ASKED TO FILE

In this connection, each disabled soldier who does not desire to file a claim for pension is required to file a statement to that effect. Such a statement is not a waiver in any respect of any right to file such claim at a later date. Where it is the soldier's desire to file such a claim, the War Department cooperates in every way practicable to perfect the establishment of his eligibility.

Determination as to eligibility for pension is vested in the Veterans Administration. The War Department has in the past, and will continue in the future, to furnish that agency with all information concerning the individual that is required in reaching a determination as to his eligibility.

Two Children Perish In Fire

In a double pre-Christmas tragedy last Thursday night, fire of undetermined origin, claimed the lives of the two children of 1st Lt. and Mrs. Stanley W. Slater, the former a student officer in the 19th Company, 1st STR, TIS, at Fort Benning.

The tiny victims were Geraldine Slater, 20 months old, and Littie Marie Davis, 4, daughter of Mrs. Slater by a former marriage.

The Slaters who resided at 2101 Fourteenth street in Phenix City had left the children with friends in an adjoining cabin in the tourist camp in which they were residing to drive soldier friends to Atlanta. They returned at 2 a. m. Friday to learn of the tragedy.

Lt. Slater whose home is in Rhinelander, Wis., is permanently assigned to the 328rd Infantry, 81st Division.

Post Repair Shop Saves $750,000 In October

To the tune of over $66,000 the Army Service Forces repair shop at Fort Benning helped other such shops in the Fourth Service Command save the government more than three-quarters of a million dollars during October, says a report released today by 1st Lieut. Ross W. Crossley, officer in charge.

Directed by Quartermaster officers, 113 civilian employees at Fort Benning's shop repaired soldiers' shoes, canvas webbing belts, pillow cases, blankets and other articles of clothing and equipment used by American troops in training, the report shows. In addition, if a soldier's clothing does not fit when issued, alterations are made by the tailor employees at the shop.

During the month, the report shows, 44,846 articles were repaired, including 14,151 pairs of shoes, 25,096 articles of clothing, textiles and miscellaneous items; 4,422 pieces of canvas and webbing and made 1,177 alterations. In addition 3,173 repair jobs were completed on metal and wood items.

The cost of repairs was $18,-892.03 and the value of the repaired items, counted at half the cost of the original articles, was $85,241.43, the total saving being $66,349.43 for the month.

The report of the Quartermaster Branch, Fourth Service Command, covering shops at more than 50 Army installations, states that during the month, 788,925 articles were repaired at a saving to the government of $751,673.43.

The Glad News Finally Got There

One startled student in the Thirteenth Company, First Student Regiment of The Infantry School last week was Lt. Thomas L. Dormer of Minatare, Neb.

On a Christmas card from an aunt, Lieutenant Dormer was commended "as I have just heard you are serving your Uncle Sam now."

are crowded with such affectionate greetings from proud relatives to those who are spending their first Yule in the service. But Lieutenant Dormer is hardly a recruit.

Three years ago this month he enlisted in the army and has been on active duty at many posts since then. So when his aunt added that she was glad his "first assignment" was at Fort Benning in the "Sunny South" he resolved

Chinese Flyer Is 'Chutist, Too

When the officers and men at Fort Benning's Parachute Training School get their wings of qualification, it is a pretty important event in their lives.

But recently, when one of the Paratroopers obtained his wings, he pinned them proudly above another set—those of the Army Air Force pilot's course. To make the story more complete, the officer in question is not a member of the United States armed forces, but of one of the allied armies, the Republic of China.

Lieutenant Ming-Nien Chien, of the Chinese field artillery has accomplished this remarkable feat in the period of a single year. He attended the Chinese Central Military Academy at Cheng-Tu, graduating in 1924. His country sent him to the United States for advanced training, and he reported to the First Army Air Force Liaison Training Detachment for field artillery at Denton, Texas.

The Chinese officer successfully completed the course and was awarded his pilot's wings. Shortly thereafter he appeared at the Parachute Training School at Fort Benning to undergo the gruelling course of the Paratrooper. On the night of [illegible] Lt. Ming-Nien made his fifth and qualifying jump, and was awarded the second set of wings.

Since that time he has remained at Fort Benning, in the specialist section of The Parachute School, studying demolition and communication work for future use against Japan.

135th General Hospital Men Enjoy Holly Hop

Nearly 400 attended the "Holly Hop" given Wednesday night by personnel of the 135th (formerly 269) General Hospital at Service Club No. 1.

Guests were girls from the civilian barracks at the Post, Columbus Military Maids, USO girls of Phenix City and personnel of the WAC detachment at Lawson Field. Music was by the ASTP Orchestra.

The party was arranged by Lt. Roland A. Johnson, special service officer, and a committee composed of Sgts. Robert G. Baker and Milton Brachfeld and Corps. Thomas W. Mood, Jr.; Jack Olchin and Everette L. Pope.

Save Long Distance Telephone Time!

Give the Place You're Calling as Soon as the Operator Answers

Long distance telephone time is so precious these days that every minute is vital to wartime communications service. If you have to place a long distance call, you can save valuable time—for yourself and the war effort—by telling the operator the place you're calling, just as soon as she answers.

This enables her to see at once if a circuit is available for your call. Then if a circuit is open, she will take the other details of your call and start putting it through.

If a circuit is not available, she will connect you with a special operator who will take the details of your call and tell you the length of delay expected in completing it.

It will help if you will give the details of your call in this order: First, the name of the place you are calling and then the telephone number, if known, of the person or firm you want.
